ifornia, and efficiently to perform the public service in separating the public domain from private land claims. I will also state that the Secretary of the Interior has issued a peremptory order to the surveyor general of California that he shall, under no circumstances, permit the private claimant to pay for his survey. Now, according to the official documents read the other day, and to-day; in regard to that order, it seems to be impossible to survey these claims; and I suppose my colleague will agree that nothing would advance the interests of California, and the permanent settlement of the country more, than to complete the survey of these claims, and separate them from the public lands.

In regard to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, I am willing to agree to it. I do not want the claimants to have anything to do with running the lines. I will state another fact in relation to the act of 1851, directing the issue of patents for these lands. They do not affect the rights of third parties, notwithstanding the issuing of the patent. Parties can go into the State courts and set them aside. The object is to have the United States acquitted of all connection with these claims; and if there is any wrong in the original survey or confirmation, it can be corrected in the State courts.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Do I understand the Senator from California to accept the amendment I offered?

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment before the Senate to be an amendment of the Committee on Finance. It is not, therefore, in the power of the Senator from California to accept an amendment to it; but one may be offered.

Mr. BRODERICK. I have not changed my opinion in regard to this subject; but I do not want to prevent the owners of property in California from having their lands surveyed. I believe that the work can be done for fifteen dollars a mile; but the Interior Department are of a different opinion, and I do not wish to raise a public clamor against me in my State. I am as anxious as my colleague to further the surveys of the owners of property in California. I understand that the public lands cannot be exposed for sale until the private lands are surveyed and set apart. I hope that the Senators who have voted with me will see the position in which I stand, and change their votes. The surveyor general, I suppose, will shut his office; for the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the work cannot be performed for fifteen dollars a mile, and the people will have to wait until Congress assembles again. I did not think, when I first urged my objection to this proposition, that the Interior Department approved of it. I have ascertained since that they do, and that they are satisfied this work cannot be performed for fifteen dollars a mile. I do not agree with them; I believe it can be done for that; but still I do not wish to prevent the owners of land claims having their claims surveyed during the coming summer. I withdraw my objection to the amendment, and I hope it will pass; because I am satisfied blame will be attached to me if the claimants cannot have their lands surveyed.

Mr. HARLAN. I would very cheerfully vote for this amendment if I thought that there was any necessity for it; but I do not see the necessity. It is true that it will cost the surveyor more per mile to survey an isolated claim, if it be a small one, than to execute public surveys at large. Some elements of the expense will be greater, but others will be smaller. If the surveys be made in the settlements, (and I suppose these private claims are generally within the settlements in California,) the expense of transporting men and provisions would be very greatly diminished. But if these private land claims are surrounded by public lands, the same deputy surveyor that surveys the public lands can survey the private claims in the execution of his public work with the same ease that he could meander a lake, embraced within the limits of his district. There would be no more difficulty in surveying a private claim, however irregular, than in meandering the margin of a lake or river. In the execution of a contract to survey the public lands, the deputy surveyor would be compelled to do this at the ordinary rates. I notice by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1856-57, that the General Government has now expended in the surveys of lands in California, in field work, $1,000,000, for which some twenty thousand miles, including nine million acres of land, were surveyed during that year—that is during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1857.

It will be remembered by the Senate that in a previous discussion on the subject of the payment of deficiencies arising on account of public surveys in California, it was stated that the deputies had proceeded beyond the limits of their contracts; or, in other words, that their contracts were general; that they were without limit as to time, and they had surpassed the amount of money granted by Congress to pay for these surveys because they had traveled many miles into the interior of the country; they had traveled into the depths of the pine forests, I think it was said, in the execution of these surveys, so that the work could not be readily arrested. Now, sir, as these deputy surveyors were not forced to execute the contract, as it was a voluntary contract entered into between them and the General Government, and which doubtless would have been canceled, at their request, the fact that they surveyed a sufficient amount of land to amount to $220,000 beyond the money appropriated, is proof conclusive, to my mind, that it was paying work. If this work had not been paying work to the contractors, they would not thus have proceeded beyond the amount of the money appropriated by Congress; and especially will this appear to be true from the statement that these contracts were not continuous contracts, as was stated in the Senate-Chamber some time since. I had the curiosity to go to the General Land Office and examine them, and I ascertained that they were mere duplicates of the contracts used in my own State and the States of the Northwest, which terminated on the 4th of March succeeding their date, and, if I remember correctly, consequently the extension of the duration of each contract must have been through the solicitation of the deputy himself, as is often the case in my own district.

From these facts it is evident that these deputies solicited the extension of the time that they might increase the quantity of work, at the rate then paid, which was about fifteen dollars per mile. It is known to every one that the price of labor and price of subsistence in California is lower now than it was at that time; and if the work could be executed far in the interior, in the heavy pineries, for fifteen dollars a mile, it is evident that it can be executed in and around the settlements for the same now. If I were satisfied that there was a necessity for increasing the pay, I would vote it cheerfully; but with the knowledge I have on the subject I do not believe it is necessary. On the other hand, I believe that any deputy would take the whole contract for a much less price than that now allowed by law. I believe it could be done for ten dollars a mile, and that men could amass immense fortunes at such a rate.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from Iowa says it is well known that the compensation of labor and the expense of living are cheaper now than in 1856. I should like to know his authority for that statement.

Mr. HARLAN. I suppose it to be true from the general facts on that subject. The cost of labor and provisions is lower now than it was a year since, in all the Atlantic and interior States, and I suppose the same to be true in California. I will make this additional remark since I am up. The lands in Iowa have been principally surveyed for $2 75 a mile. There is a vast disparity between $2 75 and fifteen dollars. I have been told by my colleague here, who acted as surveyor general in that district for some time, that the average maximum paid in that district has been six dollars a mile. Between six and fifteen dollars there is a very large margin—two hundred and fifty per cent.—for California now, under the law, above the highest price paid in the surveying district in which I live.

Mr. GWIN. I have resided a little while in California. I was there in 1856 and in 1857, but I have not been there in 1858. I have no evidence, and I have never seen any, that the prices of labor and the prices of living have decreased there since last year. I was a housekeeper there at that time. I know that the expenses of living are infinitely beyond what they are here, I was a housekeeper there in 1857; and, although rents had fallen greatly from what they formerly were, (and probably there is more difference in this item of expense than any other,) yet the rents I paid there were larger than I pay here for a house with four times the accommodation. I will state, furthermore, that the revulsion which crushed everything in the Atlantic States last year has produced no effect there. The rents in California are as high as they were a year ago, and I believe that the prices of provisions rule the same as a year ago, as the commercial tables will show. In addition to that, I was applied to, only yesterday, by a gentleman who has recently been appointed to command the navy-yard in California, who informed me that the present commandant of that yard is now paying upwards of one thousand dollars for the hire of two servants. The expense of living in California is controlled by the price of labor in the mines, and that has been the foundation of the high prices there from the first. The labor in the mining regions, since 1849-50, has been reduced, but it now stands at from two to five dollars a day. The expenses there for servant hire, it is well known, range from thirty to sixty dollars a month. I have paid that myself for years and years. The cost of living in California, so far as my information and experience go, has changed but little within the last two years, especially within the time stated by the Senator from Iowa.

But, sir, the question is in regard to the deputy surveyors and their expenses. The bill to which the Senator from Iowa referred has passed, and I do not wish to bring it up; but here is the fact that I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate. Before the acquisition of California there never was a surveyor in that territory. It was a semi-civilized government. Mexico never sent a surveyor there. There never was a scientific official line run, and it is a matter of great difficulty exactly to ascertain the meaning of grants, and the precise location of the claims. It has to be done on taking testimony, and it is an exceedingly difficult and important question to determine. It requires a great deal of time to take testimony. There is a great deal of uncertainty in regard to boundaries between private claims and also the public domain, and the lands are immensely valuable. For instance: one of these claimants owns a tract of land covering a league, in which is included the county seat of one of our richest agricultural counties, and the surveyor would not get more than two hundred dollars for surveying it. He stated himself to me, within the last few days, that it was impossible, at present rates, to survey that land; yet it is worth one hundred dollars an acre, and it must be surveyed with great accuracy. The owner is renting the lands at ten dollars an acre, and this shows its value, and also the value of labor.

I do not wish to continue the discussion. I know it is of great consequence to my constituents to have these private claims separated from the public domain. We have the testimony of all the officers of this Government connected with this service, that this is necessary; and on that alone I base my action. I do not bring it in as personal to myself, but in view of the many benefits which will result to the people of California from a speedy survey of these lands, that they may be actually relieved from all controversy in regard to the lines.

Mr. BRODERICK. I have stated here more than once that the price of living had fallen in California; and that the price of labor had fallen, although, I believe, labor is better rewarded there than in any other State of the Union. In 1850, mechanics received from sixteen to twenty dollars a day; in 1852, they received ten dollars; they now receive from four to five dollars a day. Servants' hire there, it is true, is very high; but not so high as my colleague says.

Mr. GWIN. I stated what I paid.

Mr. BRODERICK. Well, sir, I think it costs my colleague a thousand per cent. more to live here than it costs him in California. The rent of a house, I acknowledge, is there very high, but not one half higher than it is here. But, sir, as I stated a few minutes since, I do not wish to assume the responsibility of defeating this amendment. The Secretary of the Interior will tell the surveyor general to shut his office, and the people will be told that the Senator from California prevented them from having their land surveyed. I want to obviate that difficulty. I am very anxious that the public lands should be exposed for sale in California, and they will not be exposed for sale, I understand, until the private land claims are surveyed. I hope the Senate will see the position I am in, and allow the Government to pay this additional ten dollars out of the Treasury, for the benefit of the private land claimants in California.

Mr. DAVIS. The debate must have suggested to other minds, as it has to my own, the inquiry whether we are not pursuing a bad method of surveying in California. Soon after the admission of California, before any Government surveys had been commenced, a knowledge of the fact that grants had been made, and that a large portion of the land would not be brought into market for a remote period, perhaps might never be purchased at private sale by entry, caused a proposition to be submitted to the Senate at that time, that instead of pursuing the old method of survey, we should adopt one, which was real and true, and which would save the vast expense that is now described—the geodetic method, the filling up of the primary triangulations to be delayed where the land was worthless, and to be filled up immediately where the land was covered with private claims, or where it was valuable. It is an exact method by which, where land was very valuable, as in the case of heavy gold deposits, the line would be run so accurately that there would be no future contest as to where that line was. It was known then, as now, that the present method could only progress by surveying from base lines regularly on, surveying the mountains and the deserts as well as the land which was to be inhabited, that it must take a long term of years before it could be completed. It was known then as well as it is now, that the method had inherent hazards in it, that it proceeded upon the false supposition that the earth was a plane instead of a spheroid, which the surveyors correct from time to time as they progress north; but the error still remains, being inherent in the method. Before any Government surveys were commenced in California, it would have been an easy method to have adopted a plan which was accurate, which was founded upon a just theory, and which would have diminished the expense perhaps a hundred fold. The Senators from California can tell how far that method might now be applied to the surveys in California, but at the present rate of survey the expense involved seems to me to be so great that we had better give away the land than survey it.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator from Mississippi knows that I was in favor of that mode of surveying lands when it was suggested here eight years ago. It was adopted; but, I may say, unfortunately, it was left to the decision of the Department whether they should take that or the present system; and I will say further, unfortunately, they have adopted the present system, and I think it would be impossible to incorporate one into the other at this time. At that time it would have been easy to have adopted the geodetic method. I will say further to the Senator, as evidence of my belief in the system which he then suggested, that it has, under a proposition made by me, been applied to the survey of the islands on our coast, by the coast survey, for some years past.

Mr. HUNTER. I was originally against the amendment, and voted against it, but I was informed by the Secretary of the Interior that he had ordered the surveyors not to take fees from the private land claimants themselves; and if they were not allowed to take fees they could not execute these surveys at fifteen dollars a mile; and under that information I was somewhat disposed to change my vote until I heard the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] say that in Louisiana it had been tried, and it was not found that it led to frauds. I am rather disposed to see that restriction removed from the private land claimants than to increase the price of surveying the public lands so largely as this amendment proposes to do. I do not see why we may not do it. If the officers are well selected, they may be trusted in this regard, and if not they could be operated upon by bribes at any rate. If we are to give twenty-five dollars a mile, we ought surely to prohibit them from receiving fees from private land claimants. I may, therefore, vote for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment; but I think I shall vote against the whole. If they shall not be restricted, I am inclined to think fifteen dollars will be enough. I am afraid to make this large increase of price in California. If we do it, we shall have to increase the prices elsewhere, where we have been paying much less. I understand that in your own region of country, sir, [Mr. STUART in the chair,] where there were difficulties, the highest price paid was six dollars a mile. Under these circumstances, I shall not support the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not oppose the amendment. It is a mere temporary increase. Of the one hundred and twenty million acres within the boundaries of the State of California, there are five or six millions only covered by private claims. It is a temporary service, and will speedily cease. It has been directly and earnestly recommended by all the officers of the Government connected with our land system; and I look upon it as an outrage that this additional expense should be thrown on the private land claimants in California. Why, Mr. President, we have put them through an ordeal already of establishing their claims that was never known before in the history of this Government. They have had to defend their claims before the courts, with counsel at a heavy expense, and it has nearly bankrupted the whole of them; and now to put on them the additional expense of doing what the law expressly declares shall be done by the United States, what it is the imperative duty of the United States to do, seems to me to be a degree of oppression unparalleled in the history of the country. They have already been nearly bankrupted by the continual litigation the Government has imposed on them. That course was taken because it was thought best to examine and settle these titles by the highest tribunals in the country, and not go through that long process which has been resorted to in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, so that, no matter how sharp the remedy, the settlement of the titles should be speedy and final. The claimants have been put to an expense that is enormous. As this is temporary, as it cannot establish any precedent—for the surveys of private land claims in all the other States are nearly completed, and those in our own State will very soon be completed—I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I hope we shall have a vote on this question. I have offered an amendment to the amendment, which the Senator from California is willing to accept; and it meets the approbation even of those who are opposed to any increase of price. Let that amendment, for the sake of guarding the public interest, be placed on the amendment; and then let the Senate vote the entire amendment down, or accept it, as they please.

Mr. BRODERICK. The Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Louisiana must be satisfied now that the Secretary of the Interior intends not to allow the deputy surveyors to receive any compensation from the owners of private land claims in California; and the surveyor's office will be closed against all applicants. If the Secretary of the Interior could be induced to allow the old system to be carried out, I should have no objection; but I hope the Senate will see the necessity of not voting this amendment down; for the blame, I suppose, will fall on my shoulders, that I, the representative of the State, prevented the Government from paying the expenses of surveying the private land claims. I wish not to be placed in that position.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I see no reason why we should come to the conclusion that the Secretary of the Interior will persist in the instructions, after the Senate, by its debates and votes, shall show that it disapproves of them.

Mr. GWIN. I have understood that it is by an official order of the President that this instruction of the Secretary was issued; and I have no doubt he will adhere to it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I can understand very well that the President and the Secretary of the Interior both may have been misled into the belief that a system like this, which at first blush seems exceptional, might lead to frauds or improper practices; but upon reflection, it will be seen that if a deputy surveyor can be induced to give wrong lines, or to extend private surveys, simply on the ground that he is paid by the private claimant, nothing is more obvious than that that surveyor will do the same thing if he is paid wholly by the Government, provided the private claimant is willing to bribe him, and he is willing to receive the bribe. It all comes back to that; whether your deputy surveyor is a man who can be bribed, and whether the private claimant is a man willing to bribe him. If the claimant is willing to bribe him, and he is willing to be bribed, all your Department regulations can do nothing. They are utterly futile. If, on the contrary, the officers selected are such as ought to be selected for a work of this kind, then the ordinary price will be paid according to the law as it now stands, and when an exceptional case arises for extra labor in the survey, the private claimant, if he is desirous to have the survey completed immediately, will pay that extra price. There is no reason why that should lead to fraud. All the instructions of the Department, of the President, or of anybody else, are not going to change this thing. We know, as practical men, that they may send a thousand instructions of that kind; but how can they help themselves? Suppose the Congress of the United States chooses to say it will not pay more than fifteen dollars a mile for the survey, as we have said—

Mr. GWIN. I will answer the gentleman. Then the contract will not be given out; nobody will take it at that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand all this matter perfectly. We cannot be hoodwinked in this way. Congress determines by law to pay but fifteen dollars a mile; the Department sends out orders there to give no contracts to surveyors at more than fifteen dollars a mile, and orders the deputy surveyors not to receive pay from private individuals. What effect will that order have? Is there a solitary man in the State who will obey it? What right has any man to give such orders? If the deputy surveyor takes a contract to execute a survey under the law for the price fixed by the law, and he has got easy work that he can do at that price, what power has the Department to tell him, "Sir, you shall not take a contract from Mr. Smith provided he agrees to pay you ten dollars extra because his work is more difficult than other work you can get?" Suppose the Department does order him: he will not obey it; and who can help it? It is one of those regulations that does not fall within the power of the Department to make or enforce.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRODERICK. I would ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he believes the surveyor general will go on and survey this land at fifteen dollars a mile, if that officer supposes that, by waiting some four or five months, he can get twenty-five dollars? Does he believe the surveyor general will be anxious to have the work done at once, for fifteen dollars a mile, when he can receive twenty-five dollars a mile by waiting a few months?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I really do not understand the pertinency of the Senator's question.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will try to put it in different language.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand the question, but I do not see its bearing on the point.

Mr. BRODERICK. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that the Secretary of the Interior says the work cannot be done for fifteen dollars a mile. My colleague says the same thing, and that the President of the United States has directed the owners of private land claims not to pay the deputy surveyors any compensation in addition to that allowed by law, and paid by the United States. The surveyor general of the State is anxious to have this money to disburse. If he waits until Congress meets again, I suppose Congress will allow him the twenty-five dollars. So you might as well vote it now as vote it next year; because the surveyor general, I have been assured, will close his office, and the owners of private land claims in California will have to wait another year before they can have their lands surveyed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The point I am at is this: the Department of the Interior threatens the Senator and his constituency with closing the office in California, provided this augmentation is not granted. How? Because they think the surveying cannot be done for the price allowed, and they have issued orders prohibiting private claimants from eking out the sum to a just compensation?

Mr. BRODERICK. That is it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. But suppose, now, by this debate and this vote, the Senate refuses to increase the price, and indicates its approbation of the system that has heretofore existed: what right then will the Department of the Interior have to carry out a system on its own theories of what is right and proper, in contradiction to the wishes of the legislative department of the Government? That is the point.

Mr. GWIN. The Secretary of the Interior has not threatened to close the surveyor general's office. He has made no such threat. The surveyor general of California is not interested at all in the disbursement of the $100,000 proposed to be appropriated. The mere question is, whether or not he will expend it on surveying public lands at the present rates, or whether he will spend it on what is more important and more vital to the best interests of the people of California, at this juncture, in separating the private land claims from the public lands? It is a question with which the surveyor general has nothing in the world to do; it is a matter in which he takes no interest, directly or indirectly, other than giving out the contracts; because, if this $100,000 be not disbursed in surveying private land claims, for the reason that he cannot get deputy surveyors to take contracts to survey private land claims at the present rates, and can get them to survey public lands, then the money will be disbursed in surveying public lands where there is no conflict with private land claims. The Secretary of the Interior never intimated that he would close the surveyor general's office. It will go on precisely as before; but if this amendment does not pass, the character of the work will be different, and will not be so beneficial to the people of the State.

Mr. BRODERICK. I do not know that the Secretary of the Interior has threatened that this office will be closed; but my colleague stated here, a few minutes since, that it would be closed against the owners of private land claims, or at least that the work could not be performed for this amount of pay.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me: I said that was the opinion of the officers connected with the subject.

Mr. BRODERICK. That is what I fear; if it was not for that, I should vote against this increase. But the power that has been brought to bear within the last twenty-four hours has satisfied me that no surveys will be made this year, unless Congress votes the ten dollars additional. If I could be satisfied that the land in California could be surveyed for fifteen dollars a mile, I assure the Senate I would not urge the additional ten dollars; but the Secretary of the Interior says the work cannot be done for fifteen dollars, and I am satisfied that he knows more about this work than I do, and I am willing to vote the additional ten dollars.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is a subject in which I have no special interest, other than as a Senator on this floor, but it does seem to me to bear a very singular aspect. I have every disposition to defer to the opinions of the heads of Departments, and to the head of the Interior Department, of whom I have a very high opinion. I know nothing of the surveyor general of California. I respect the feelings of the Senators from California on this floor, and I desire that their constituents shall have every possible advantage which legislation can fairly give them; but I am not prepared to vote for this appropriation. I believe it is only the trifling sum of $100,000, and it is premised that it will close up one avenue to corruption and to bribery that otherwise would exist with the subordinate surveyors. I have no idea of making men honest by legislation, or by bonuses given to them for the purpose of keeping them honest; you cannot do it. If you undertake to feed cupidity, and to minister to avarice, you will not make a man honest, for the more he gets the more he wants; and I am clearly of opinion that the sum now given to these deputy surveyors is amply sufficient to defray the expense and render them a recompense for their service. If it is announced that the surveyors in California receive fifteen dollars a mile, you will find the surveyors in this country, who are receiving two and three, and some less than two dollars a mile, going to California, and there will be a demand for work there that will reduce their wages, and they will be very glad to obtain employment at a more reasonable price than fifteen dollars. If individuals choose to contribute, by way of inducement to the execution of work in which they are interested, a douceur to those gentlemen, I am sure that no legal prohibition you can make will be sufficient to prevent them from receiving it.

There is another feature in this matter that I condemn; and it is the placing at the discretion of the officer a sum of money which he is to appropriate and disburse according to his mere will and choice. He will necessarily, in the multitude of deputy surveyors that he will have around him, have some favorites. They will have assigned to them the most pleasing and agreeable portions of the country, and they will be enabled thereby to accomplish a greater amount of work and receive a much larger bonus than others, and he will pay them, under a pretext of their having done more work than others, a greater sum than is due them when you compare their labor with that of others. It affords an opportunity for discrimination and partiality that I think is unfavorable to the ends of justice, and the accomplishment of labor for the public. Thus it is that I am clearly of opinion, so far as these two points are concerned, that there is no just demand for this appropriation; and if, at the distance California is off, money would be an inducement to them to do wrong in designating and defining the boundaries of private claims, what guarantee is there that the same inducement might not operate on the surveyor general? Here is an inducement of $100,000. If he were to disburse one half of it he would have a handsome residuum left; and I cannot but think that, if he is honest now, the best way is to keep this money out of his hands. I have no idea that we are to abstain from an act of inhibition on our part in regard to this appropriation, because we are threatened that the office will be closed. There is a remedy for that. Dismiss the officer, and say, "if you have not the competency to do this labor and to execute this work, I will place one there who will do it." Then you get your work done; but to menace Congress, and tell the Senate—

Mr. GWIN. Who made that threat?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is done by the Department. I do not charge the Senator with it.

Mr. GWIN. It has never been done by anybody.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did not the gentleman say that the office would be closed?

Mr. GWIN. No, sir; I said no such thing.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood the Senator that the office would be closed; and the junior Senator from California stated that he did not wish to have the responsibility on him of having closed the office. How are the offices to be closed, I would ask the Senator from California?

Mr. BRODERICK. I will try to inform the Senator from Texas. The surveyor general says that the work cannot be done for fifteen dollars a mile, and he will turn every man away from his office who applies to have his land surveyed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would have the officer for rent, or he should go on. If he turned them away, I would turn him away. There is a remedy at hand, if he chooses to do this, and hold the whole Congress and the legislation of the nation in check. Does he hold them by intimations of this sort?

Mr. BRODERICK. He does; and the law gives him that power. He has absolute power.

Mr. GWIN. Let me tell the Senator from Texas that the surveyor general has nothing to do with it. If he cannot get the deputy surveyors to do it for this sum, that is the end of it. The point is, what is the amount he can get the work done for? If he cannot get it done for the present price, if no deputy surveyors will do it for that, then he will disburse the money for public surveys, and the office will go on as heretofore. The question is, whether or not he can get contracts for surveying private land claims at this price?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes. This year they will exhaust this $100,000; and next year, unless they get half a million, they will strike for higher wages! That is it. You are holding out inducements to them to extort from the Government. I am for giving them a fair and just recompense; but I am not for cringing to their demands, but meeting them with the just rebuke of removing the officer in whose hands the control remains; for you need not tell me that surveying cannot be obtained, and plenty of it, in California, or in any other part of this continent, for fifteen dollars per mile. It is an extravagance that has not heretofore been heard of. If they are receiving fifteen dollars a mile, is their labor more assiduous, more toilsome, and laborious than that of the mechanics who can be obtained for four dollars and a half? If their science is greater, if they have had to devote more hours to study and to application to obtain a scientific preëminence to enable them to be surveyors, you give them two or three hundred per cent. on their attainments. I cannot believe that this is just or fair, or that the Government is bound to succumb to it and let the surveying stop. It is a singular idea that individuals must not be employed by those who are interested in the lands. If I wish lands surveyed in Texas, I go and employ the surveyor myself, and pay him. Is there any law prohibiting that? No; but the law says what his wages may be; and if I choose to give him a douceur of five or ten dollars, to hurry on with the work, anticipating the necessity of having mine accomplished by a certain time, can the Government prohibit me? Is not that a private transaction between us? That is the burden of complaint on this occasion, that the surveyors have received perquisites from private land claimants. I have no idea of attempting to prohibit it. It is mockery. How will you restrain the private transactions between man and man? You cannot do it. You may give them $100,000, and that will not restrain them; and all your legal prohibitions that you may attempt to impose here, by starting amendments, will be mere cobwebs, mere mists, not tangible. I am decidedly of opinion that the recompense offered is fair.

But we are told that the surveyor general has nothing to do with this. Has the surveyor general complained, and has the subject been investigated in such a way as to lead the head of the Department to the conclusion which has been stated? He has to rely on the information of others. We have heard no complaints urged in the Senate or House of Representatives heretofore, that it is impossible to do the work for the present price. Certainly the expenses of living in California are less now than heretofore; and if the officer would make it known at large that he had contracts to let, he would induce the competition of surveyors from every part of the United States; they would flock there for the purpose of obtaining fifteen dollars a mile, when they received in the several States a per diem of not five dollars. They would resort to California; the competition would become great; the facility of obtaining employes would be no question of difficulty there. I will not vote to place at the disposition or discretion of any individual $100,000 that he may issue it with or without vouchers, and when the vouchers may be a mere mockery and sham. I have no reliance on them; and if the vouchers should not be produced, it will only be necessary to pass an act of Congress saying, let the Auditor settle it agreeably to the principles of equity and justice, and that is done on the statement of individuals, so that the accounts are never stopped here for want of vouchers. The day was when a picayune had to be explained, or it was stopped at the Treasury; but those good old days have gone by. Honesty is in slack demand now, and there is not much encouragement given to it, whilst we extend lenity and discretion beyond all reason and all bounds. We must begin to be more stringent and more exacting in our legal enactments here, or we shall find that the settlement of officers' accounts will become a mere form, a sham, and the only difficulty will be to keep the Treasury sufficiently full to gratify the cormorants, the vampires, who choose to suck the blood of the nation through the Treasury, on the pretense of official duties discharged in an extraordinary manner, or extraordinary services rendered. If a stop be not put to this, the nation will be drained of its treasure to pamper individuals who may become favorites, and have an advocacy, either here or with the heads of Departments, to force through their claims without a pretense of justice. Sir, I am not prepared to vote for this. I shall vote against it, and vote against anything that extends to an officer an extraordinary discretion; for the more you give the more you will have to grant.

Mr. BAYARD. I am very clear in my own mind that the amendment must pass, if you mean to do justice, according to the terms of your treaty with Mexico, by which you acquired California, to the rights of private claimants, unless you substitute an express clause of legislation in accordance with the views of the honorable Senator from Louisiana. The case stands precisely in this way: the law which you passed in order to carry that treaty into effect, which binds you to secure the titles in California, requires that all titles of every kind under the Mexican Government shall be submitted to a board of commissioners. After they have been submitted, if the final adjudication is in favor of the claimants, there is to be a survey made by your officers, and under that survey a patent is to issue. The title must, therefore, be evidenced by a patent from the United States, consequent upon a survey made under the authority of the United States; otherwise, the claimant is helpless, although the treaty binds you to give him a title if he has a good claim. Under these circumstances it was found that in making surveys in California, though, under the general law, which authorized the payment of not exceeding fifteen dollars a mile as to ordinary Government surveys in straight lines or parallel lines, that amount would be sufficient, contracts could not be made for this sum with the deputy surveyors for the purpose of surveying these irregular grants where the boundaries have to be hunted out at great labor, and the expense is greater. You cannot obtain the services of deputy surveyors by a contract to perform it for that sum; but the claimants themselves, in a variety of cases, stepped in and paid the expenses of the deputy surveyors. The Department ascertained to their satisfaction that the effect of suffering the claimant to become a payer to the deputy surveyor was that very often grants were improperly located, that the claimant had too much control over the contracting surveyor on account of his being allowed to receive money from him additional to what he received from the Government; and the consequence was that it led to an improper location of grants which the Department, if that system was continued, would be unable to keep correct, so as not to trespass on the rights of preëmption settlers, or persons who purchased under the Government. With a view to check this, they have issued a peremptory order not to permit any payments to be received by a deputy surveyor from any claimant. They have determined not to recognize a survey made where the fact is ascertained that the claimant has contributed to the expenses of the deputy surveyor.

Be this right or be it wrong, after making this determination, the Secretary of the Interior tells you that, for fifteen dollars a mile for that species of survey, he is unable to obtain deputy surveyors to do the work. You are bound to have the survey made to do justice to the parties. If you issue an order saying that they shall not pay, surely you are bound to let your surveyor general, who has no interest in this matter, unless you suppose him fraudulent, have power to pay more than the amount now given for a particular class of surveys—twenty-five instead of fifteen dollars a mile; it being found that for fifteen dollars you cannot have the service rendered. You deprive the claimant, by executive authority, of the privilege of paying for it; and you must remedy that by authorizing a sufficient sum to be paid in order to have the survey made, because the claimant cannot get his title under the treaty without having the survey made. There is but one other course left; and it is this: if you adopt the idea of my friend from Louisiana, that the Department are wrong in supposing it leads to any impropriety or fraud to allow private claimants to make compensation to the deputy surveyor over and above what he receives from the Government, then you ought to put in the law a clause preventing the Secretary of the Interior from inhibiting the payment by private claimants of an additional sum when it is requisite for the purpose of making the survey. I think you will hardly be prepared to do that, because, from what I know of the matter, I believe there is force in the objection made by the Secretary of the Interior. There is danger in allowing the officer, though he is an officer by contract under the surveyor general, to be in the pay of the private claimant for the purpose of locating a grant; and the Government in the end may lose more under that system than they would by allowing the deputies additional compensation, in cases where it is requisite in the opinion of the surveyor general, on his responsibility. If the surveyor general is not an honest and fair man, remove him. He is not entitled, under the provision, to receive one dollar himself; and he cannot do so unless by fraud; and he will be liable to punishment for that. You are simply limiting, by a different limit than you do now, the amount which he shall be allowed to contract to give deputy surveyors per mile for a certain stipulated survey of lands. I think it is a wiser course to take that, inasmuch as you cannot get the survey performed for less; at least, you cannot get it performed for fifteen dollars a mile. So the Secretary of the Interior tells you. It is the wiser course to expend the difference between fifteen dollars and twenty-five dollars, in that manner, in these contracts, than it would be to permit the deputy surveyor, who is an officer under contract, and ought to represent the Government alone, to represent in part the interests of the private claimant by receiving compensation from him. The Senate may choose between the two. If they determine that they will not adopt this amendment, then, in common justice to the claimants, if they desire to carry out the treaty, (and the law entitles them to have a survey of the lands and a patent consequent on the survey after a final adjudication of the title,) they are bound to put in a clause which shall require the Secretary of the Interior or the head of the Land Office to rescind the order which prohibits the private claimant from paying any portion of the expense of surveying private land claims. One or the other you are in justice bound to do.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 168.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART.) The first question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARLAN. I propose further to amend the amendment by inserting:

Provided, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of California to award each contract to execute said surveys to the lowest responsible bidder, he being a practical surveyor, after reasonable notice, to be published in two newspapers of the largest circulation in the State of California.

Mr. BRODERICK. I hope that amendment will be adopted. There is no objection to it, I believe.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to make an inquiry of my honorable friend from Arkansas, whether we have adopted the amendment—I believe it is his—which makes void the survey at any subsequent time, upon proof that the claimant had paid a fee to the surveyor?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That has been adopted.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I beg the gentleman to consider for a moment the consequences and effects of that.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The whole amendment has not been adopted—only an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment indicated by the Senator from Kentucky, offered by the Senator from Arkansas, has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. As an amendment.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It ought not to be allowed that the title, at any subsequent time, may be vacated. It may have gone into the hands of innocent purchasers. Put any punishment you please on the offenders; but do not let it affect the land. Do not sow such a seed of discord and of litigation and of uncertainty in land titles. Of all things in society that description of property ought to be kept as free as possible from all collateral questions. Let the guilty party be punished; but do not let the land be affected with a doubt that is to follow it into the hands of innocent purchasers.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it would be well for him, then, to strike out that portion of my amendment and leave the first part.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Strike out all which affects the title.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will assent to that. It will have to be reconsidered on the ground the Senator names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The change can be made by unanimous consent. The Senator from Arkansas will make the change.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It will then read:

Provided, That the surveyor or surveyors hereafter executing any such surveys of private land claims, shall accompany his or their return of such surveys with his or their affidavit that no compensation has been received by him or them, directly or indirectly, or agreed to be paid to or received by him or them for the same, from any quarter other than the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the unanimous consent of the Senate that that part of the amendment not read shall be stricken out? The Chair hears no objection. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doollittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fitch, Foot, Gwin, Hammond, Harlan, Iverson, Jones, Mallory, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Yulee—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hale, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, of Arkansas, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Rice, Sidel, Toombs, and Wright—22.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

"For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California, the surveyor general is hereby authorized to pay such sum as he may deem reasonable, according to the circumstances connected with each case, not exceeding at the rate of twenty-five dollars for each mile of the boundary lines of any claim, and also for such lines as may necessarily be run and marked, or measured, in order to connect the lines of such claim with those of the adjacent public surveys: Provided, That the surveyor or surveyors hereafter executing any such surveys of private land claims, shall accompany his or their return of such surveys with his or their affidavit that no compensation has been received by them, directly or indirectly, or agreed to be paid to or received by him or them for the same, from any quarter other than the Government of the United States: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of California to award each contract to execute said surveys to the lowest responsible bidder—he being a practical surveyor—after reasonable notice to be published in two newspapers of the largest circulation in the State of California."

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask now for the consideration of my motion to reconsider the vote upon the amendment in regard to the improvement of the St. Clair flats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. SLIDELL. It was not my intention to say anything upon the subject of internal improvements; and I should not do it now did I not occupy a somewhat peculiar position, having yesterday changed my vote for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. There were several reasons that induced me to take that course. The Senate was very thin, and this was a very grave matter—involving serious questions of public policy; and it struck me that it was proper a full Senate should decide it. That was one reason why I changed my vote for the purpose of moving a reconsideration. Had it not been for that, I should, probably, have allowed this matter to pass.

I will now state very briefly my reasons for urging the reconsideration of this vote; and I will premise by saying that I have in no degree changed or modified the opinions upon the constitutional question involved that I entertained some two years since, when I had the honor to express them to the Senate on the occasion of the veto by the President of the bill for the improvement of the mouths of the Mississippi river. I concede that it is within the constitutional power of Congress to make appropriations from the public Treasury for objects that are confessedly national. The great difficulty with me has always been to define the line where these objects cease to be national and become local. I considered then, and I consider now, the appropriation immediately in question as of a national character; and could I be assured that the legislation of the country in this regard would be confined entirely to appropriations for works of this character, to my mind unquestionably national, I should have no objection to considering each of them upon its merits, and voting proper sums towards their completion. But the question now presents itself in a very different aspect.

I object to this appropriation at this time for several reasons. I object to it because it is incongruous to the bill. It is out of place; it is inappropriate; it should not be here. A question of this kind should be discussed in the Senate, not only upon the peculiar merits of the distinct appropriation, but upon the great principle of public policy which it involves, and should not be mixed up with other matters which are entirely foreign from it. My next objection is, that the state of our finances is such that I think we are imperatively called upon not to vote for any appropriations that are not absolutely necessary for the proper carrying on of the public service, and working the regular machinery of the Government at home and abroad, and providing for the national defenses at sea and on shore. My third objection—and perhaps it is the most important of all; it certainly is in my own mind—is that, while I see no reason, as I before stated, to change my opinion in regard to the constitutional aspect of this question, I have, from experience and observation, arrived at the deliberate conclusion that the whole system is mischievous; that, however national and praiseworthy any particular object may be, it will never obtain the assent of Congress without some understanding or agreement, implied or expressed, that other works of a very different character, if not coupled with it in the same bill, shall be passed by the same aid. I will now say that, entertaining this opinion, if an appropriation were introduced to-morrow providing any sum of money for deepening the mouths of the Mississippi, it would not command my vote; for the reason that I am perfectly persuaded that, on account of the constitutional objections of a large portion of those Senators with whom I am in the habit of acting, and with whom I am always proud to act, and the objections of other Senators who entertain different notions, but who would not be willing to vote for what I consider a legitimate appropriation, without connecting it with something exceptionable in itself, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to confine the appropriations to improvements of a strictly national character. From these considerations, I am inclined to think that, on the ground of expediency alone, apart from all constitutional scruples, no bill of a similar character will hereafter receive my support. I shall adhere to this opinion, unless I see very good reasons to change it. Perhaps an overflowing Treasury might induce me, in some degree to modify it; but, with the views I now entertain, I do not consider it probable.

Mr. HANDLER. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this question. I regret that the motion to reconsider has been made. I think this bill was a very proper place on which to put this appropriation. It contains an appropriation of $450,000 for the coast survey; $800,000 for the Washington water-works; $300,000 for the Charleston custom-house; $300,000 for the New Orleans custom-house. I deem it of more consequence to provide for this improvement than for all the other works for which the bill provides. This is the last chance we have to get the appropriation through at this session, and I hope it will be retained in the bill. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POLK. I have voted for the improvement of the St. Clair flats; I believe it is a case where it is proper to expend money for such improvements, but at the same time I voted against appropriations for the harbors on the lakes. When the question was up on its merits, I had no doubt about it, and voted for it, and when it was first offered as an amendment to the appropriation bill, my desire to see the work accomplished was great enough to overcome my objections to its being introduced into an appropriation bill. I have uniformly voted against putting on this bill measures which I thought were inappropriate to it. I voted to reduce the amount proposed to be appropriated for the survey of the coast; so in the case of the Capitol extension; so also, and especially, in the case of the contract for printing the American State Papers, which I conceived to be eminently out of place in such a bill as this. I voted against them all. Now I shall vote for this reconsideration, though I am in favor of the expenditure of the money in deepening the St. Clair flats, for the reason that it was out of place in this bill, and for the further reason that with the prolongation of the session for a week we shall have an opportunity to pass the measure on its merits as a separate bill.

Mr. SEWARD. There was, Mr. President, it seems to me, some plausibility and some reason in the argument that there was an impropriety in placing indiscriminate appropriations, and vague or large appropriations for internal improvements upon this bill; but I think that objection is entirely removed in this case; because what is proposed as a single work, a necessary work, one indispensable to the inland commerce of the country, and which is itself the representative of a principle which commands the assent of all the interests that sustain that commerce. Regarding it of this importance, so far from agreeing with the honorable Senator from Missouri that it is right to reconsider for the purpose of striking out the appropriation, I shall vote against the reconsideration; and if it be reconsidered, and this amendment be stricken out, I shall then feel it to be my duty to vote against the bill, leaving every member of the Senate to take his own responsibility as well in regard to the passage of the bill as to the action of Congress on internal improvements.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider, resulted—yeas 31, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Sidel, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—25.

So the Senate agreed to the reconsideration; and the question recurred on the following amendment of Mr. CHANDLER:

And he it further enacted, That $54,037 be appropriated for completing the improvement of the channel over the St. Clair flats in the State of Michigan.

Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very much surprised at the course pursued in regard to this proposition. It is almost in the language of a bill which passed the last Congress by a two-thirds vote over a presidential veto. It is an appropriation for the same purpose, and of about the same amount. That was for the commencement of this work; this is for its completion. It is supposed by some that it is a measure for Michigan. It is no such thing, sir. Michigan has less interest in the improvement of the St. Clair flats than almost any other northwestern State. Michigan has three parallel lines of railroad running through her borders, from lake to lake, on which nearly all her commerce passes, and lands below the St. Clair flats. This improvement is for the benefit of the whole country. Wisconsin has a thousand fold greater interest in it than Michigan; Illinois has an infinitely greater interest; and even Indiana is more concerned in it than Michigan.

I hold in my hand an official document, published by the last Congress—Executive Document No. 36, for the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress—in which some facts are given as to the commerce over the St. Clair flats. In 1855, the total value of the merchandise passing over those flats, according to custom-house statistics, was $251,167,705, or $1,092,000 for each day during the season of navigation in 1855. A very large proportion of this merchandise was of the cheaper descriptions, such as lumber, coal, and farm products; and it is well known that the cargoes of those cheap products do not equal the value of the hull carrying them, so that the actual commerce passing over the St. Clair flats in 1855 was about $500,000,000, including the value of the hull and the cargoes. This vast commerce is being obstructed for the want of a little, paltry appropriation of $54,037, or less than one fourth of one per cent. on the annual commerce that yearly passes over those flats.

Now, sir, shall this little appropriation, to complete a great national work, be stricken out for any paltry reason, or because it is not exactly appropriate to this bill? What appropriation for this Government is more properly in the bill than this identical appropriation for the improvement of the St. Clair flats? You can vote $450,000 to survey the Atlantic coast, and find where there are sand-bars to be avoided; but yet, to accommodate the vast commerce on the lakes, you cannot appropriate $54,037. I hope Senators will review their action in reconsidering this vote, and still retain this paltry appropriation in the bill. The report to which I have already alluded says:

"It is making no more than a reasonable allowance for the effect of the obstructions to commerce, now existing at the St. Clair flats, to say that, had that obstruction not existed, the value of the merchandise and produce that would have passed in 1855 would have been fully fifty per cent. more than it actually was; or that it would have amounted, during the navigable season of 1855, to $376,751,538. This would have been an average per day of $1,633,050."

This is more than twenty times the estimate of the cost of completing the work. The same official report says:

"The increase of the rates of freight, owing to the obstruction as it now exists, may be estimated at fully fifteen per cent., or annually the sum of $2,064,276."

This is the actual expense that you put on the farmers of the West because you refuse to vote a paltry appropriation of $54,000 to complete this work. I know that much is said as to the constitutionality of such appropriations. I should like to know in what clause of the Constitution of the United States you find the right to vote $800,000 to supply the city of Washington with water? That appropriation is in this bill. When you find the clause in the Constitution to do that, you will find the right also to make this little appropriation which interests the whole Northwest. If the President has any constitutional scruples about signing a bill containing this appropriation, he can find authority for it in the same clause which authorizes you to vote $800,000 for water-works for the benefit of a population of sixty thousand here in the city of Washington. I should like to pursue this argument a little further, but I have not the time to do so.

I have endeavored this winter to pass the St. Clair flats bill on its own merits. Five months ago, I introduced a bill making a sufficient appropriation to complete the work, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I immediately went to the Department and obtained the maps, charts, surveys, and all necessary estimates for their information. Those papers lay in the hands of the committee more than three months without being opened. On the expiration of the three months, I introduced a resolution instructing the committee to report a bill granting sufficient money to complete the work. That resolution would have carried in its naked form; but an amendment was added which vitiated the whole effect of it. That was lost, and finally the committee reported a bill appropriating $23,421 for preserving those works. I then introduced an independent bill, making an appropriation of the exact amount required to complete the work; but I have never been able to get action on it. There was always something to interfere with the consideration of that bill. Now, in the last few days of the session, I asked to have this small appropriation put on an appropriation bill in a proper way, and it is to be voted down. I want to have the yeas and nays upon it. I want to see who is friendly to the great Northwest, and who is not; for we are about making our last prayer here. The time is not far distant when, instead of coming here and begging for our rights, we shall extend our great hands and take the blessing. After 1860 we shall not be here as beggars. I hope my amendment will not be voted down, but will be reaffirmed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. CLARK, has paired off on this question with the Senator from Alabama, Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitch, Green, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Sidel, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLLAMER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider a vote; I do not wish the question taken now. It is on the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] in relation to disbursing agents. I wish that reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. MASON. I desire to renew an amendment which was offered in Committee of the Whole, but did not then prevail:

And he it further enacted, That all diplomatic and consular officers, who were appointed under the act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March 1, 1855, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to and returning from their respective ports and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and consular officers in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be construed to apply to any diplomatic or consular officer who was in office and at his post of duty, when said act approved March 1, 1855, took effect, except to allow compensation to such officers during the time necessarily occupied in returning from their respective posts."

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a point of order. Does not that give back pay? I think this very amendment was ruled out in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MASON. It was offered in committee, and rejected by a very close vote. It was not ruled out, according to my recollection. The indorsement will show that it was rejected.

Mr. IVERSON. The point of order was made in committee by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KING,] and overruled by the present occupant of the Chair, [Mr. STUART,] and the question recurred on the amendment on the yeas and nays; and it was rejected. It is now offered again, and of course is in order. It is in order, because it makes future legislation. The point of order was overruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The recollection of the Chair, though it would not be very strange if he did not recollect distinctly—was, that he ruled it in order on the ground that a portion of it was prospective, and that it was not divisible.

Mr. IVERSON. I offer a substitute for the amendment:

That all the diplomatic and consular officers who were appointed under the act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March 1, 1855, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to and from their respective posts, and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and consular officers in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856: Provided, That the above provision shall only apply to such diplomatic and consular officers who were appointed, or who proceeded to the post to which they were appointed, after the passage of said act of the 18th of August, 1856."

Mr. GREEN. I rise to a point of order. If the amendment undertakes to construe a law differently from the construction already put on it, it is legislation; if it does not undertake to do that, then it is void, and means nothing. The law now fixes their compensation from the time they assume their duties. I am not going to say they ought to be paid from the time they are appointed and are waiting instructions. I will not say it. That may be right; but the question I raise is, that the present law does not do that, and that this proposes to change the present law, and apply it to anterior appointments, which makes it amount in substance to a private bill.

Mr. IVERSON. The fact that it legislates, is no argument to show that it is out of order. Everything in the bill legislates. The proposition is to apply the provisions of another law to particular officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment and substitute are in order.

Mr. GREEN. I take an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. GREEN. On that question I desire to make one remark. I understand this amendment to say that consuls and diplomatic agents shall be paid from the date of their appointment, and while they are waiting instructions.

Mr. IVERSON. It does not do any such thing.

Mr. GREEN. Well, let it be read. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. GREEN. It is precisely as I construed it, with one single exception. It does not date from the time of the appointment, but from the time they were waiting their instructions. The law gives them their pay from the time they assume their duties. There is a vast difference. The law more than doubled the compensation. In a little bit of a post down in South America, which was $4,500, they made it $7,500. In England, which was $9,000, they made it $17,500.

Mr. MASON. But it took away the outfit and infinit.

Mr. GREEN. They took away the outfit and infinit. Before this law was passed there was an outfit of a full salary, and an infinit of half a salary.

Mr. MASON. And took away the allowance for clerks.

Mr. GREEN. It took away no allowance for clerks. The allowance for clerks is exactly now as it was then. I join issue with the Senator. Although it is a very small matter, I join issue, for there never was under the law an allowance for clerks from the year one in the history of this Government down to this day. Secretaries were allowed when they were named as such, but never a clerk—never in the history of the Government. When you passed this new consular and diplomatic bill, to the consuls you said: "We will take away the fees for receiving ships' papers, making clearances, presenting their manifests, discharging the vessels, and the reshipping of all the cargoes, and so on; we will take away all fees, and give you a salary." Consuls are not diplomatic agents, and never have any diplomatic power except under special instructions. Diplomatic agents had an outfit of a salary, and they had an infinit of half a salary. When the new law was passed, it more than doubled on the average all the salaries, in doing which Congress said: "We take away the outfit, we take away the infinit," and the argument made in the House of Representatives, and made in the Senate, and sanctioned by both Houses, was that the whole amount of expenditure would be less under the new bill than under the old. Very well. Whether that argument is right or wrong, I have nothing to say about it. Here comes a proposition to change the law, and say that their compensation shall commence from a time at which it would not commence under the existing law. Although it may be right—and on that it is not my privilege to speak, for this is a point of order—if you are giving them that which under the present law they are not entitled to, you are making them a gratuitous compensation, and it is a private claim. That is my whole point. I have stated it, and I will not extend it.

Mr. IVERSON. I shall not occupy five minutes.

Mr. BAYARD. Allow me to ask the Senator a question; whether the effect of either of these amendments is strictly retrospective? It is meant to bring persons within the law of 1856, who otherwise would not be within the law of 1856.

Mr. IVERSON. To some extent it is retrospective. I will state the whole case if the Senate will listen to me, and I will not occupy its time five minutes, to show that the Senator from Missouri is mistaken in the position he takes. He says that this amendment proposes to give salaries to diplomatic agents from the time they received their appointment. It does no such thing.

Mr. GREEN. I corrected that. I made that statement first, and when the amendment was read I changed it, and said from the time they were waiting instructions.

Mr. IVERSON. The amendment provides no such thing as that.

Mr. GREEN. Read it again, Mr. Secretary.

Mr. IVERSON. I will explain.

Mr. GREEN. I want it read, and then you can explain.

Mr. IVERSON. I have no objection to its being read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. IVERSON. The act of 1855, commonly called the Perkins consular act, provided, in the sixth and seventh sections:

"Sec. 6. That no envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, commissioner, secretary of legation, dragoman, interpreter, consul, or commercial agent, who shall, after the 30th day of June next, be appointed to any of the countries or places herein named, shall be entitled to compensation until he shall have reached his post and entered upon his official duties.

"Sec. 7. That the compensation of every envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, commissioner, secretary of legation, dragoman, interpreter, consul, and commercial agent, who shall, after the 30th day of June next, be appointed to any of the countries or places herein named, shall cease on the day that his successor shall enter upon the duties of his office."

There are two provisions which gave compensation only from the time the minister reached the place of his mission and entered on the discharge of his duties, and the compensation ceased from the time his successor came and superseded him. Now, the act of 1856, which was passed on the 18th of August, 1856, changes that provision, and the eighth section reads in these words. It reenacts one of the provisions of the act of 1855:

"That no person appointed after this act shall take effect—"

It is to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1857, by another clause.

—"to any such office as is mentioned in the first, second, third, sixth, or seventh sections of this act"—

Embracing the ministers and consuls.

—"shall be entitled to compensation for his services therein, except from the time when he shall reach his post and enter upon his official duties, to the time when he shall cease to hold such office"—

Precisely as under the act of 1855; but here comes additional legislation:

—"and for such time as shall be actually and necessarily occupied in receiving his instructions, not to exceed thirty days, and in making the transit between the place of his residence when appointed, and his post of duty at the commencement and termination of the period of his official service."

That is the law of 1856. Now, according to that, a minister is entitled to receive his pay while he is in the city of Washington receiving instructions, provided that time does not exceed thirty days, and is entitled to receive his pay for the time necessarily occupied in making the transit from his own home to the seat of Government to which he is accredited, and returning from that country to his home in the United States. That is the law of 1856, but it did not take effect until the 1st of January, 1857. The case in which I feel a personal interest, and which is embraced in the amendment I have offered to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, is the case of the Minister at Mexico, Mr. Forsyth. He was appointed in July, 1856, only a few days before the passage of the act of 1856. He received his appointment at that time. He was directed by the President of the United States to come here from his home in Mobile, Alabama, to receive his instructions. He came here, and was here at the very time of the passage of the act of 1856 receiving his instructions. He proceeded to Mexico; at least, he attempted to go, but finding no steam conveyance, the steam line being broken up between New Orleans and Vera Cruz, he was detained until the month of October. In the mean time the Government was compelled to send him out by a revenue cutter because there was no other conveyance. This amendment simply places him in the condition of all the diplomatic agents who are affected by the act of 1856. It gives him pay for the time he was here receiving his instructions, not exceeding thirty days, and gives him pay for the time he occupied in going to Mexico from his home, and will give him pay for the time he will occupy in returning to the United States, neither of which he will be entitled to under the act of 1856. The act of 1856 limits the pay, and says any person appointed under it shall not have any pay except so and so. It is not, therefore, a private claim, because it gives compensation to him for the time hereafter to be expended by him in returning from Mexico, which, according to the law under which he was appointed, he would not be entitled to receive. Certainly it is competent for the Senate to legislate on that subject, and, as the Chair has properly decided, the question is indivisible, and the whole amendment must stand or fall as an entirety. There may be some consular agents affected by this provision; I do not know who they are; but the act of 1856 exhibited the fact that the Government intended to change the act of 1855, and instead of cutting out ministers from compensation for the time they actually spent in going to and returning from the Government to which they were accredited, it intended to give them compensation for that time. Is it not just that they should have it? Why should they be cut out of their salary for the time occupied in going to the seat of Government and coming back? Why should they be paid nothing for the time they were compelled to remain here by direction of the President in receiving their instructions? Is it not just and proper that they should all be put on the same footing?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia whether Mr. Forsyth is the only foreign minister who was appointed between the two laws?

Mr. IVERSON. It is the only case that I know of. There may be one or two consuls; but I am not aware that there are; and if so, there are only one or two, which are unimportant; but I know Mr. Forsyth is the only case of a minister. It is simply to place him on the same footing, because, although he was appointed before the act of 1856, he did not go out to Mexico until after the act was passed, and after the policy and design of Congress as to the compensation was changed.

Mr. GREEN. This is a very plain and simple proposition. The equity of the case that the Senator from Georgia presents, when he asks the question, "why should he not have as much as others?" is not the point before the Senate. The point before the Senate is a question of order—is it in order? The Chair says, "yes." I appeal from him, with all due respect, for I have a great deal of confidence in the parliamentary skill of the present occupant of the Chair; but the very presentation of the case, as made by the Senator from Georgia, shows it not to be in order. When this minister was appointed, the law fixed his compensation at a certain rate. Afterwards the law changed it; but that law did not take effect until 1857, before which he was a minister. That is all true. The proposition now is to make the law of 1857 reach back and apply to his case, because the equity of it is just as strong as—

Mr. IVERSON. But it reaches forward.

Mr. GREEN. Exactly. I understand both sides of the question. One is future, and one is retrospective, and all that is retrospective is illegal in its application as a present amendment to an appropriation bill. It is to grant a gratuity. Though it may be honorable, fair, just, and proper, yet why should you put the Minister to Mexico, in granting him what the Government owes him, on equity? It will not grant to David Myerle what it owes on principles of equity; and if I were to propose to amend, by adding to it that bill which is here pending for the relief of David Myerle, I should get a thousand attacks all round the Senate; and yet it is equitable, it is just, it is fair. This may be so; but it is a proposition to relieve Mr. Forsyth, to give him that which under the present law he is not entitled to, to make it reach back to a period at which it would not otherwise apply without this law. As such it is a private claim.

So far as the future application of the law is concerned, as to his infinit, his return compensation, it is a different question. I say nothing about that. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." That part of the amendment which is in violation of your rules, is in attempting to make his compensation commence at a period at which it did not commence under the law under which he was appointed, and for that very reason I say it is illegal, it is out of order, it is a private claim, it is a gratuity. It may be just, it may be proper, but it is in violation of the rule of the Senate. I will not say that I will not vote for it if it comes as a private claim; but I say that it is an attempt, because it connects a thing that is in order with one that is not in order, to make them both in order, and for that very reason it is out of order.

Mr. IVERSON. To show that this has been held to be not out of order, I will read precisely a similar case. In 1855, the Senate had under consideration, in Committee of the Whole, the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1856. To that an amendment was offered:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to M. C. Perry, of the United States Navy, the extraordinary expenses incurred by him on his recent mission to Japan," &c. "And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Robert C. Schenk, as minister, full compensation while employed as such."

It also covered Pendleton's case. That was back pay. A point of order was raised there, and on the decision of the Senate, it was ruled in, and the amendment passed.

Mr. GREEN. We all know that.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no doubt there are precedents of this kind; but I think the amendment is out of order. Suppose it had been proposed naming the individual alone who has been mentioned by the honorable Senator from Georgia; can there be a doubt that that would be anything more than a private claim, whether urged as a gratuity, or as appealing to the sense of equity and justice of the Senate? I mean to make no objection otherwise than as a question of order. If it included only a single individual there could not be a doubt; can there be a doubt that it is a private claim because it chooses to classify that individual with others, and to apply to retrospective service a compensation which the parties are not entitled to under existing law? Whether it is on the ground of equity or the ground of legal right, you say the parties ought to receive this because the law was not broad enough to include them, and ought to have been broad enough; yet it is nothing but doing equity to the parties, and it is a private claim. If the rule of the Senate is right, you must maintain it altogether; and however proper it may be to make this compensation in a different form, it is not proper to attach it to an appropriation bill. If you admit it by evasion in one case, necessarily it will lead to others; and the contrivances of language will enable you to have constant debates in order to elude your own rule. Repeal the rule, if you choose; but, if you mean to adhere to it, do so in good faith.

Mr. CHANDLER. If this is to pass, I desire to move an amendment, that no foreign minister or diplomatic agent who shall have received his outfit shall receive the benefit of this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator, that, at this time, the amendment is not in order; there being an amendment to an amendment now pending.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not prevail; for I understand it extends to those who have received their provision under the old compensation act.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall decide the question of order. It is time we were closing up this bill. We are getting on very slowly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment is proposed by the Senator from Georgia to provide "That all diplomatic and salaried consular officers who were appointed under an act entitled an act," &c. The effect of the amendment, as it appears on the face of it, is to increase the pay of those officers and to ante-date the increase of the pay. The Chair decides that that is not a private claim within the meaning of the rule. The Senator from Missouri appeals from that decision. The question is: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. If we adopt this, we shall have to apply the principle to other officers who are not allowed to be paid until they get to their posts of duty. That is the case with Indian agents and Governors of Territories, and there are many other officers who come within this category.

Mr. IVERSON. They get their salaries from the time of appointment.

Mr. HUNTER. Not the Indian agents, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and decided that the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. IVERSON. I call for a division. ["Too late."] I will state that my amendment is better than the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, for the reason that it restricts the operations of his amendment. My amendment only gives pay to those who have gone out since the passage of the law of 1856. I hope the Senate will indulge me in a division on my amendment, and then take the question on it instead of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Chair will divide the Senate on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GREEN. I object.

Mr. IVERSON. Then I trust we shall adopt the amendment as reported by the Senator from Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clay, Dixon, Douglas, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hale, Hammond, Houston, Iverson, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Thomson of New Jersey, Wright, and Yulee—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Chandler, Clingman, Collamer, Davis, Durkee, Fessenden, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Hayne, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Pearce, Pugh, Stuart, Wade, and Wilson—21.

So the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER,] to reconsider the vote adopting the amendment in regard to disbursing agents.

Mr. COLLAMER. I made the motion at the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Davis;] but I think that I can explain what it is. The amendment provides that disbursing agents shall be dispensed with in a certain way, so that superintendents shall disburse the money appropriated for the erection of court-houses, custom-houses, and marine hospitals; and then it adds, "and all other public works." These other works—the erection of fortifications and barracks, the public buildings in this District, &c.—were not intended to be included at all. I desire to have it reconsidered for the purpose of striking out the words "and all other public works." If the gentleman from Mississippi desires more, he can say so.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall be content with that.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move to strike out the words "and all other public works."

Mr. DAVIS. Then how will it read?

The Secretary read it, as follows:

"That the collectors of customs in the several collection districts be, and they are hereby and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the construction of custom-houses, court-houses, post offices, marine hospitals, &c."

The motion to strike out was agreed to; and the amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. SEWARD. I moved, in committee, an amendment in regard to the sale of public lands in Kansas Territory. I renew it now in the Senate; and ask for the yeas and nays on it. It is:

And be it further enacted, That the public lands in the Territory of Kansas shall not be offered at public sale until the expiration of one year from and after the 1st day of November next.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I only want to remark that it ought to be an object of the Government to put as much of their public lands into market as they can, in order to meet the wants of the Government for the next fiscal year.

Mr. DIXON. I have paired off with the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Toombs, and ask to be excused from voting on this question.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Collamer, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, King, Rice, Seward, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Wright, and Yulee—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. An omission has occurred in this bill, and I am instructed by the Committee on Public Printing to offer the following amendments:

For lithographing and engraving ordered by the Senate, during the present session, the sum of $45,000.
For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $40,000.

I will state to the Senate that this subject was before the Committee on Finance, and for want of any explanations in regard to it, as I understand, no appropriation was provided by them. My attention was called to it this morning, and I subsequently instituted some inquiries, and in reply I have received a letter which I will read to the Senate:

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT PUBLIC PRINTING,
WASHINGTON, June 3, 1858.

SIR: I learn from the office of the Secretary of the Senate that no appropriation exists for engraving and lithographing and for binding of the extra numbers of documents ordered to be printed during the present session of the Senate. A very considerable quantity of work has already been ordered by the Senate, amounting, for lithographing and engraving, to the sum of about forty thousand dollars, and for binding extra numbers of documents to about twenty thousand dollars. A very considerable amount, I also understand, will be required for binding the reserved documents for the present session of the Senate. I would, therefore, recommend that appropriations be made as follows, namely:

For lithographing and engraving ordered by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $45,000.

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $40,000.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. W. BOWMAN, Superintendent.

Hon. R. W. JOHNSON, Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

The first item is about five thousand dollars over what has already been ordered, and I presume presents a margin that will be entirely filled by orders that will be made even between now and the adjournment. For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $40,000 is needed. About twenty thousand dollars of work of this sort has already been ordered by the Senate up to the time of this letter, and the binding of the reserved documents will amount to about as much more. It is not possible that we can do without this appropriation, unless we mean that the documents which have been ordered by Congress shall go without binding, and that the documents which require illustration shall go without illustrations. With this explanation I ask for the adoption of the amendments. I have explained them to some members of the Finance Committee, and I believe they concur in their necessity.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have an amendment from the Committee on Finance:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for legislative and contingent expenses of Washington Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857, the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I will ask that a short letter I send to the Chair may be read. ["No, no."] If there is no objection, the letter need not be read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a change in an amendment moved by me, to carry out the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, about disbursing officers. After "public works," the words "herein specified" ought to be added.

There being no objection, the amendment was so modified.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to two amendments I indicated some time ago, one, striking out $10,000 for the improvement of the Mall, and the other, $750,000 for the extension of the wings of the Capitol. I move first to strike out the appropriation for the Mall, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I am not the author of that.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It is an amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN. It rather belongs to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I think if there is any provision called for for public buildings and grounds in Washington, this is one, and no one will fail to see it who will look at the present condition of the Mall.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bigler, Broderick, Clay, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Trumbull, and Wilson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Cameron, Clingman, Davis, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Johnson of Arkansas, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, and Yulee—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I move now to strike out the appropriation of $750,000 for the extension of the Capitol; and I call for the yeas and nays.

Several Senators. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Give us a record, gentlemen; do not be afraid.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Nobody is afraid to vote on these things; but they have been voted on a thousand times. There are a dozen records.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. A motion has not been made to strike it out this session.

Mr. BENJAMIN. But we have had a hundred records about it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It will not hurt to make another.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It will consume public time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Others have consumed as much public time as I have.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 3, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, and Pugh—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Sidel, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—43.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. YULEE. I ask the Senate to allow the vote to be taken on the amendment I offered with respect to the fees of the Patent Office. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Finance will accept it. It has been already read, and I presume it will be unnecessary to have it read again. It is understood by Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART.) Does any Senator desire the reading of the amendment?

Several Senators. Yes, sir.

The Secretary read it as follows:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That so much of the laws now in force as fix the rates of the Patent Office fees are hereby repealed, and in their stead the following rates are established: On filing each caveat, ten dollars; on filing each original application for a patent, except for a design, twenty dollars; and on the issuing of the patent, ten dollars in addition; on every appeal from the examiners in-chief to the Commissioner, twenty dollars; on every application for a patent for a design, fifteen dollars; on every application for the reissue of a patent, thirty dollars; on every application for the extension of a patent, fifty dollars; on filing each disclaimer, ten dollars; for all certified copies, fifteen cents per hundred words; for recording every assignment or other writing, of three hundred words or under, one dollar; for recording every assignment or other writing, over three hundred and under one thousand words, two dollars; for recording every assignment or other writing, if over one thousand words, three dollars; for copies of drawings, the reasonable expense of making the same.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will appeal to the Senator from Florida to withdraw his amendment. We cannot discuss such an amendment as this on an appropriation bill. Here is a whole new system for the Patent Office. If the amendment is pressed, it will be but keeping us here uselessly.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator was not present, I suppose, when it was before the Senate on a former occasion. I presume there will not be objection to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Everybody is against it. We cannot act on it now.

Mr. YULEE. I will not force it on the Senate if that is the sense of the Senate; I withdraw it.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. PUGH. I was one of a glorious minority of three a while ago; and I am willing to be one of another minority; and I call for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 35, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Douglas, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Wright, and Yulee—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Doolittle, Durkee, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Pugh, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—13.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

An act (H. R. No. 152) authorizing the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas;

An act (H. R. No. 300) declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases; and

A resolution (H. R. No. 26) authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 297) to extend an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1852.

Also, that the House had concurred in the Senate resolution for the extension of the session, with an amendment.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move to take up the Navy appropriation bill.

Mr. GREEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall not object to that motion after we take up the Navy bill, so that we may adjourn on it, and thus make it the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. GREEN. There is a great deal of executive business that we must transact.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us take up the appropriation bill first, and then we can transact that business.

The motion of Mr. HUNTER was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, took up the bill (H. R. No. 199) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were signed by the Vice President:

An act confirming locations of land warrants under certain circumstances;

An act for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, and others;

A resolution devolving upon the Secretary of War the execution of the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1852;

A resolution for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon;

An act to extend an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853;

An act for the relief of D. O. Dickinson;

An act for the relief of Samuel W. Turner and Alonzo A. Turner;

An act declaring the titles to land warrants in certain cases;

A joint resolution authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia; and

An act to continue the pension heretofore granted to Mary C. Hamilton, widow of the late Captain Fowler Hamilton, of the United States Army.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HUNTER. Now, I will agree to an executive session.

Mr. GREEN. I make that motion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Before that motion is put, I hope the honorable Senator will allow me to call up the resolution of the Senate fixing the final adjournment, which has come back to us from the House with an amendment, which ought to be disposed of. I simply wish to say—

Mr. HUNTER. We can dispose of that to-morrow.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish to say but a single word. If Thursday is to be fixed as the day of adjournment, it may guide us a little in the length of time occupied in debating questions by fixing it at once. It is very important to have the date fixed, so that we may remember it in the discussion of questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On a motion to go into executive session, debate is not in order.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. W. H. CHAPMAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, containing estimates of appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Pawnees; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TITLE TO LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. KELSEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table bill (H. R. No. 300) declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments. The amendments are merely verbal, except that the Senate have inserted the words "or legatees" after the word "heirs;" so that a will made by a person entitled to a land warrant will pass the title to the warrant.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that there are three bills on the Speaker's table returned from the Senate with amendments which can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to suspend the rules.

DELEGATE FROM MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot now be entertained, as there is a privileged question pending. The business first in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections, on the right of W. W. Kingsbury to a seat, as Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota; and the pending question is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KELSEY] to lay the report and resolutions upon the table.

Mr. KELSEY. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will withdraw his objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I have been endeavoring to get the floor this morning, because I wish to present to the House what I think is a privileged question, although I am not familiar with the rules of the House. It will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The matter now pending before the House is a question of privilege, and cannot be superseded by another question of privilege.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. This proposition would take but a moment. I am not disposed to be captious; but I want it to be distinctly understood that if I cannot have my privileges here, I shall interpose objections to everything that comes before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is not in order.

Mr. KELSEY. I desire to propound a question to the Chair. I desire to know whether the gentleman who has occupied a seat as Delegate from the Territory of Minnesota, will retain his seat as such Delegate if the resolutions are all laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The resolution referring the subject to the Committee of Elections, provided that the committee be authorized to inquire into, and report upon, the right of W. W. Kingsbury to his seat upon this floor as Delegate from that portion of the Territory of Minnesota outside of the State limits, and that in the mean time no person should be entitled to occupy a seat as Delegate from the said Territory. The Chair is of opinion that when the committee submitted a report to the House the proviso ceased to operate, and the Chair, following the precedents, without intimating whether the Chair thinks the precedents right or wrong, would recognize the Delegate from Minnesota.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. Then I hope the motion to lay on the table will be withdrawn.

Mr. KELSEY. Under that intimation from the Chair, I desire to withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and demand the previous question, which, I suppose, would bring us to vote first on the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES,] then on the proposition of the minority of the committee, and then on the resolution of the majority.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I renew the motion to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand the Chair to say that if the report and resolutions are laid upon the table, the Delegate from that country out there, who recently represented the Territory of Minnesota, will be entitled to a seat upon this floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would recognize him.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Believing that there is no Territory there which can be properly represented in this House, I hope the resolutions will not be laid on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. If we lay this subject upon the table, will the Chair recognize Mr. Kingsbury as Delegate any longer than this session?

The SPEAKER. Following the precedents upon the subject, the Chair will be under the necessity of recognizing him till the close of this Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. What will be the effect, if the subject is not laid on the table, but the resolutions of the majority and minority are voted down?

The SPEAKER. That will leave the report still before the House, and it will be competent to offer any resolution disposing of the subject.

Mr. MAYNARD. In that case would the Chair still recognize the Delegate?

The SPEAKER. He would; because the action of the House upon the subject would be negative, and he would be compelled to follow the precedents upon the subject.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. Would the Chair regard the action of the House, laying this subject on the table as equivalent to declaring that Mr. Kingsbury was entitled to a seat?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated what would be his ruling in that contingency.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. Has the previous question been called?

The SPEAKER. It has; but the first question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE] to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. I hope that motion will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. There are two motions pending, neither of which is debatable. The Chair cannot indulge the discussion any longer.

Mr. LETCHER. Was the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York received?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it still pending?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the motion to lay on the table. I think the House ought to decide this matter one way or the other.

Mr. STANTON. I understand the Speaker to say, that if the subject should be laid on the table he would recognize the Territory of Minnesota as an existing territorial organization, entitled to a Delegate, and that he will treat the sitting Delegate as the Delegate for this Congress. That is all I desire to accomplish. I do not care which gentleman sits here as Delegate, and I hope, therefore, that the report will be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I should like to offer an amendment to the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER. An amendment would not be in order while the demand for the previous question is pending.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I do not desire to occupy many minutes in discussing this question. The report of the committee presents nearly all I desire to say in respect to the right of Mr. Kingsbury to a seat upon this floor as Delegate. I only desire to make a remark in reply to some of the views presented yesterday. They were rather statements than arguments. In the first place it is contended by some gentlemen that the admission of a State formed out of a part of a Territory, abrogates or repeals the law organizing the Territory. Such has not been the practice under this Government heretofore.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, whether the gentleman now claiming a seat lives within the Territory which he now proposes to represent?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I have already replied to that question once; but I will answer again that I do not know and do not care whether he lives there or not—all I know is, that Mr. Kingsbury represents upon this floor, and has from the commencement of this session, the Territory of Minnesota; that the Territory of Minnesota does still exist; that it is so recognized by the Executive, and so recognized by the precedents which have been settled by this House, and it is not now questionable whether we can annul it by withdrawing the Delegate from this floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The honorable gentleman from Illinois does not answer the question as propounded by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee. I understood, in the course of certain statements made yesterday, that neither of the gentlemen now claiming seats as the representatives of that part of the Territory of Minnesota, outside the State limits, has resided in that part of the Territory. If I am misinformed on this subject, I shall be glad to be corrected by any gentleman now present. I see one gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CAVANAUGH] in his seat, and perhaps he can give us information on the subject.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I can meet the whole inquiry in its length and breadth. At the time the Delegate from Minnesota came here there was no State of Minnesota, and a residence in any part of the Territory was sufficient. The admission of a State formed out of a part of what then constituted the Territory of Minnesota, leaves it, in my opinion, a matter of election of the parties to recognize their residence in whatsoever part they please. Such has been the precedent heretofore in similar cases. I think the precedent is a correct one. It does not matter whether the parties lived inside of what is now the Territory of Minnesota, or in what was the Territory of Minnesota when they were elected. They were elected by the people of the whole Territory; they have the right to represent the people of the whole Territory, and the right to represent the people of each part of the Territory; and so long as a part of the Territory exists in its territorial condition, under the act organizing that Territory, it is entitled to be heard in this House by a Delegate here. There is nothing in the law creating the Territory, or in any law that I have seen which requires that a Delegate should be a resident of the Territory from which he comes. The law simply provides that the Territory shall be entitled to have a Delegate in Congress. Such an opinion may have existed by analogy supposed to exist between the requirements in respect to a Territory and those of a State. But, sir, there is no reason for such analogy, and such a requirement has never been made by any law of Congress. It would not be competent, in my opinion, for the House to undertake to put such a construction upon the law.

Mr. LETCHER. I know nothing about the facts in the case; but I desire to know whether an election was ever held in the Territory outside of the State limits for a Delegate to Congress?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I will reply to the gentleman that an election was held on the 13th of October last, a day fixed by law for the election of a Delegate to this House from the whole Territory.

Mr. LETCHER. That was under the Territory of Minnesota, as it then existed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. Under the territorial law of Minnesota.

Mr. LETCHER. And, under that law, the people outside held that election for member of Congress.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The people outside voted for a Delegate to Congress; and they voted outside, as well as inside, the State limits.

Mr. LETCHER. What was the state of the vote as between the two?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. It is not given in its aggregate. The certificate of the Secretary of the Territory, which was read yesterday, shows that the vote was two hundred for Mr. Kingsbury; and there is a written statement of another officer of the Territory, who resided on the Missouri river, outside of the State limits, showing that Mr. Kingsbury received the entire vote of the precinct where he voted.

Mr. LETCHER. Was that in Dacotah or Minnesota?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. It was in Minnesota. We do not know such a Territory as the Territory of Dacotah. It was outside the State limits of Minnesota, and in what is called Dacotah.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Did not the other party receive votes outside of the Territory; and a larger number than Mr. Kingsbury?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. It is stated that Mr. Fuller did receive votes outside of the Territory. The number of votes he received I do not know; nor can it be said by any one upon this floor, so far as I know, that Mr. Fuller received more than Mr. Kingsbury, or Mr. Kingsbury more than Mr. Fuller. The votes which were cast for Mr. Kingsbury were cast in conformity with law, before the proper officers authorized to receive them, and to make the returns. They did make the returns to the proper officer. They were canvassed by the Governor, the Secretary of the Territory, and the officers appointed to canvass the votes. The returns were made; and Mr. Kingsbury was declared the Delegate from the Territory. He came here under the operation of that law, and the result of the election, and occupied a seat without question until the admission of the State. It is entirely unnecessary to inquire into the number of votes Mr. Fuller received, because he received no votes cast in conformity with any existing law. There is no certificate from the functionary authorized to send certificates of election to this House that he ever received a vote. A paper was read here yesterday purporting to be from the President of the Board of County Commissioners of Midway county, Dacotah Territory, stating that Mr. Fuller had received a certain number of votes. It was verified by a seal of Dacotah Territory, or a picture representing it. There is no such Territory as Dacotah Territory; and the very fact that these officers, who assume to be returning officers, attached to their seal a territorial designation, which does not exist by law, unknown to law, is a piece of presumption and a piece of impertinence which ought not to be recognized for a moment. There is no such Territory as Dacotah; and it is time enough to receive certificates from officers of the Territory of Dacotah, when such Territory is organized.

Mr. WILSON made a remark here which was not heard at the reporters' desk.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. Whatever officers there are outside of the present State of Minnesota hold their offices by the appointment of Governor Medary, as the Governor of the Territory; all the justices of the peace, all the executive officers, except, perhaps, in this county of Midway where there may have been an election for officers. I do not know how that is; it is a matter of no sort of consequence. They seem there to have gotten up, for their own uses and purposes, a Territory which they call the Territory of Dacotah, and they want us to recognize it, when, in fact, the law recognizes the Territory of Minnesota, extending over and operating upon that very Territory. I prefer to follow the directions which the law gives, and to recognize the Delegate who came here through the forms of law to taking any Delegate who comes here with such papers as are presented by Mr. Fuller.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It seems to me that this question lies in a nutshell. We are simply to inquire whether there is now existing the Territory of Minnesota. If the Territory of Minnesota is not in existence, if it was absorbed or destroyed by the admission of the State of Minnesota, then there is no Delegate here; but if there is such a Territory now in existence, then there is a Delegate from that Territory, and it is the Delegate who was originally elected. If the Territory was destroyed, then there is no territorial organization; and upon the precedents in the case of Carr, who came from New Mexico in 1848; in the case of Babbet, who came from Utah, in 1848; and in the case of the Delegate who came from Kansas before it was organized; there is no Delegate here.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. My friend from Maine says that this matter is in a nutshell. It is a very large nut, according to his statement. The gentleman has presented the case strongly. I presented the case in that way yesterday, and it was only in view of the point that because Mr. Fuller received a certain number of votes of the people residing there, he ought to be received rather than Mr. Kingsbury, who is the legally-elected Delegate of the Territory, that I have said what I have. If there is a Territory of Minnesota in existence, (and that there is, the law declares,) then Mr. Kingsbury is the Delegate properly elected from that Territory, and entitled to a seat here.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Here is the act organizing the Territory of Minnesota, which declares that,

"From and after the passage of this act all that part of the territory of the United States which lies within the following limits, to wit," &c.

It goes on to give the boundaries of what shall constitute the Territory of Minnesota. Now, you have admitted as a State nearly all of this Territory, and the law says that it shall require all of it to constitute the Territory of Minnesota. Can a Territory exist there when you have admitted as a State that which the law requires shall constitute the Territory? I take it that there is no Territory, and nobody entitled as Delegate to a seat here.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. If Congress creates a Territory of one hundred thousand square miles area, and subsequently makes a State out of twenty-five thousand square miles of it, leaving seventy-five thousand square miles of the original area outside of the portion admitted into the Union, with a population scattered over it, and with the existing institutions of counties and towns, I ask if it is legal, if it is consistent, to hold that the admission of the one fourth abrogates and nullifies the laws as to the other three fourths, and deprives the people of their right to have represented here, by a Delegate, the important interests connected with the public lands, with their intercourse with the Indian tribes, and with everything that would render life desirable? And to do that, too, by the merest, wildest implication in the world! Not a word in the act contemplates such a thing. The precedents from the beginning of the Government down do not sanction such a thing, and the House certainly ought not to sanction it now.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether, if he were right, it would not follow, as a necessary, legal, logical conclusion, that all the Federal officers of the Territory of Minnesota might go back to the wilderness, organize a new Government, and hold their respective offices?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman begs the question. He proposes to ask if officers could not move back and organize a Territory, while the Territory is already organized under the law. The officers have been heretofore recognized as being in office. It was so in the case of Minnesota, after the admission of Wisconsin. It was so in the case of the Northwest Territory, after the admission of Ohio. The Territory was recognized as in existence, after the admission of a State formed out of part.

Now, as to the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] He undertakes to draw a distinction as to the area of the Territory that may be included in the State. That does not affect the principle. If the admission of one fourth or one tenth does not annul the law and destroy the existence of a Territory, then the admission of nine tenths does not do it. You must repeal your law by the same power which enacted it, or it still stands upon your statute-book.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me: I think the reverse has been the history of the action of Congress on that subject. The Northwest Territory was formed of all the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio river. When Ohio was about to be admitted as a State, the Territory of Indiana was organized by act of Congress. Subsequently, the Territory of Illinois was organized; subsequently that of Michigan, and subsequently that of Wisconsin; and finally, the remaining fraction of that Territory was included within the Territory of Iowa. If I am right in my recollection of it, Congress never, on the admission of a Territory as a State, recognized, in the Northwest Territory, a Territory under the organization under which a portion had been admitted as a State.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman is partly right, and partly wrong. He is right in saying that Territories were organized by law after the admission of the States respectively; but he is wrong in saying that the original Territory in existence was abrogated by the admission of a State. I stated yesterday, in my argument, the fact that the Delegate from the Territory northwest of the Ohio, who was elected after the admission of the State of Ohio, from the Territory west of the Ohio river, was received, and admitted to a seat on the floor of the House, showing that the House had recognized the existence of the Territory northwest of the Ohio river as entitled to a Delegate. I stated also yesterday the fact that the territorial officers of the Territory of Minnesota were continued, and a Delegate, elected after the admission of the State of Wisconsin, was admitted to a seat in the House. Judicial officers have been uniformly continued in office. All the laws passed by the Territory have continued in full force over all parts of the Territory, after the admission of the State. There is not a solitary departure from that principle—not one. Then, sir, under the provision of law, under the uniform practice of the House, I claim that the committee are right in their conclusions—that the Territory of Minnesota does exist; that it is entitled to a Delegate under the law creating it; that the Delegate has been already admitted to his seat here, and that he ought not to be ousted from it. This, Mr. Speaker, is all I desire to say on the subject. And now let the House take action upon it.

The question was first on Mr. HUGHES's amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that" in the amendment, and insert as follows:

—the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union with the boundaries prescribed in the act of admission operates as a dissolution of the territorial organization of Minnesota; and that so much of the late Territory of Minnesota as lies without the limits of the present State of Minnesota, is without any distinct, legally-organized government, and the people thereof are not entitled to a Delegate in Congress until that right is conferred upon them by statute.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered. The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Billingshurst, Bishop, Blair, Bocock, Bonham, Branch, Bratton, Buffinton, Burnett, Caskey, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Comins, Coming, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dowdell, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Eustis, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Gregg, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Hill, Houston, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leiter, Leitcher, McClay, McQueen, Maynard, Miller, Milson, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Parker, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Rufin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, William Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whiteley, Woodson, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Bliss, Boyce, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Coffax, Cox, Cragin, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Dawes, Dimmick, Dodd, English, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gillis, Gilman, Gooch, Granger, Groesbeck, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Heard, Horton, Kellogg, Kelly, Lowry, Humphrey Mar, Isaac N. Morris, Morgan, Morrill, Niblack, Palmer, Pendleton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Royce, Russell, Scott, Searing, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Robert Smith, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, Talbot, Tompkins, Vallandigham, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, Wood, and Augustus R. Wright—80.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Pending the vote, Mr. BARKSDALE stated that Mr. Hopkins was absent on business, at the request of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. JEWETT stated that if he had been in when his name was called, he would have voted "no."

Mr. HUGHES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred on substituting the amendment, as amended, for the original proposition; and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the proposition as amended.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I move to lay the whole subject on the table; and on that I ask the yeas and nays. I think this is a perfect monstrosity, and against the whole practice of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask what would be the effect of that motion? If it were carried, would it allow the Delegate from Minnesota a seat here?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it would.

Mr. LETCHER. Would the Chair still recognize the gentleman claiming to be the Delegate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would do so.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I hope it will not be laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object to debate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 128; as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bocock, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Bratton, Buffinton, Burnett, Case, Caskey, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Coffax, Comins, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dowdell, Durfee, Edmundson, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Goodwin, Gregg, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Hatch, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Houston, Howard, Hughes, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keltz, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Leiter, Leitcher, McClay, McQueen, Mason, Matteson, Maynard, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Quitman, Ready, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Rufin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Spinner, William Stewart, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whiteley, Wilson, Woodson, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—128.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The original resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. HUGHES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a resolution (S. No. 50) authorizing the President to designate a site for the equestrian statue of Washington and for other purposes, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate has passed, without amendment, a bill of the House (No. 446) for the relief of D. O. Dickinson.

Also, that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of this House to the bill of the Senate (No. 227) authorizing the organization of a fire department in the District of Columbia.

Also, that the Senate had adopted a resolution changing the day of the adjournment of Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled the following bills and resolutions; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act confirming the location of land warrants under certain circumstances;

An act for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland;

A resolution devolving upon the Secretary of War the execution of the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1854; and

A resolution for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy.

OUTRAGES ON AMERICAN VESSELS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas, visitation of American merchantmen is now being exercised in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and in the ports of Cuba, by British war steamers, in direct violation of international law, in the course of which lawless conduct an American citizen has been killed: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, required to give instructions to our Navy to arrest all offending vessels until ample and full reparation is made by the British Government for the outrages committed, and guarantee is given for future exemption from visitation.

Mr. CLAY. I desire merely to observe that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have this subject now before them. In respect to the telegraphic dispatch received this morning and published in the morning papers, the committee are now obtaining information from the Department, and expect to make a report upon the subject—

Mr. CLEMENS. Debate is not in order, and I object to it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will strike out that portion of the preamble in his resolution which assumes the fact of the murder of an American citizen. I think that is assuming too much.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I will strike that out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. The telegraphic dispatch published in the morning papers is from the interior of the country, and is not reliable.

Mr. SICKLES. I object to the resolution, on the ground that we have no official information before us.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce the resolution, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SICKLES. Do I understand the gentleman from Mississippi to have modified his resolution, by omitting that portion of it which assumes the murder of an American citizen?

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SICKLES. I should like to have the resolutions, as modified, read.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope there will be no objection to the reception of the resolution. I understand that the object of my colleague is merely to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The resolution, as modified, was read.

Mr. GROW. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLEMENS. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion. I want a record on this question.

Mr. KEITT. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether, if that resolution is introduced, it is his intention to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs or to have it put upon its passage? If it is to be put upon its passage, I shall certainly vote against its admission.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi stated that he wished to introduce the resolution for reference only.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to say that I would vote for it, if it was upon its passage.

Several MEMBERS. And so would I.

Mr. KEITT. I would not.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I only desire to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Blair, Becock, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Burlingame, Burnett, Burns, Case, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Clark, B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Colfax, Conning, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmondson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillie, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Goodwin, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kellogg, Kelsey, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Macley, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miles, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Phillips, Pottle, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Scott, Seward, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stanton, Stephens, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Vallandigham, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, Winslow, Wood, Woodson, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—154.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Bliss, Brayton, Buffinton, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Comins, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Gilman, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Horton, Howard, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Lovejoy, Matteson, Morgan, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Parker, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Robbins, Spinner, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Wade, and Walbridge—43.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was received.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina, stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted "ay."

Mr. SAVAGE stated that if he thought his vote would be construed as an approval of the resolution as drawn up, he would change it, and vote "no."

Mr. LAMAR stated that he voted "ay," for reference.

Mr. COBB made a similar statement.

Mr. HILL voted "ay," with the understanding that the resolution was to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The result of the vote having been announced, Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and demanded the previous question.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question for a moment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If there is to be debate upon the resolution, I trust that it will be unlimited.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that debate would not be in order. The motion to suspend the rules was for the reference of the resolution only. The Chair so understood it, and so stated it to the House.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will withdraw the demand for the previous question for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that in the opinion of the Chair debate is not in order.

Mr. CLAY. I do not wish to debate the question, but to make a personal explanation.

[Cries of "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, asking the return to that body of the resolution changing the day of the adjournment of Congress, for the purpose of correcting an error in the enrollment of said resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose there will be no objection to sending that resolution back at once.

There was no objection; and the resolution was ordered to be returned to the Senate.

Mr. KELSEY obtained the floor.

PURCHASE OF BUILDINGS.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from the select committee on the purchase, by the Government, of the banking-house of the Bank of Pennsylvania, in the city of Philadelphia. The committee was authorized to report at any time, and it will take but a moment. I ask that the report be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed, and that the resolution appended to it be adopted by the House.

The resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject referred to them.

The report was then laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to offer a resolution simply to pay a clerk.

Mr. KELSEY. The gentleman cannot take the floor from me for that purpose. I desire to take up three bills from the Speaker's table with Senate amendments. It will take but a very few minutes to dispose of them.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the consent of the House to offer a resolution to pay the stenographer employed by our committee. I do not think there will be objection.

Mr. KELSEY. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. FLORENCE. I had not relinquished the floor. This resolution is so nearly connected with the report of that committee that it may be properly considered as a part of the report.

The SPEAKER. If it is a part of the report, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to present it.

Mr. FLORENCE. It is not exactly a part of the report, but I do not think there will be objection. I ask that it may be read for information.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid to the stenographer employed by the select committee appointed to inquire into the facts and circumstances connected with the sale of the Pennsylvania Bank property, in the city of Philadelphia, to the United States, $200, for his services in reporting the testimony taken before said committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know how much testimony has been taken by this committee; but there is a regular rule established for paying these stenographers of committees.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am perfectly willing to put it at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will strike out the amount, and make it "the usual compensation," I have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The House has already passed a resolution regulating this subject. I object.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it is not such a report as the committee are authorized to make.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not say it was a report made by the committee.

The SPEAKER. That was the only ground upon which the gentleman obtained the floor.

LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. KELSEY. I now desire to take up, from the Speaker's table, House bills Nos. 300, 26, and 152, for the purpose of concurring in amendments of the Senate to the same. The first is a bill to declare the title to land warrants in certain cases, and I know it should be passed. The others I do not know so much about; but I think the House should take them up, and dispose of them.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to everything out of order.

Mr. CLAY. Then I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition can hardly be received until that of the gentleman from New York is disposed of.

Mr. KELSEY. I now ask first to take up House bill No. 300.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. Would it be in order to now amend the motion so as also to take up another bill?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I should like to amend so as to take up all the House bills on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion cannot be so amended.

Mr. KELSEY. I now ask to take up the first of the bills I have indicated.

No objection being made, the bill was taken up for consideration.

Mr. KELSEY. There is but a single amendment of the Senate, which is to insert after the word "heirs," the words, "or legatees." The whole section is rewritten, but this is really the only change. I demand the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to make a suggestion? I do not think Congress has the right, after the title of a warrant has vested, to declare the course of descent, or where the title shall go.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Kentucky is laboring under a misapprehension. There is no right to the warrants provided for in this bill at this time, but this bill proposes to create a right de novo. It is held at the Pension Office, under the present law, that if a person entitled to a land warrant makes his application and dies before the warrant is issued, he is not entitled to it. This bill is to vest that right, notwithstanding he may die. The amendment of the Senate proposes to amend the House bill so as to give the applicant the right to devise by will the warrant, if it is not received before his death. In the absence of a disposition by will, the warrant goes to his heirs.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I did not so understand it. I have no objection to it if that is the case.

Mr. KELSEY. I now insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and, under the operation thereof, the Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KELSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendment of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEXAS BOUNDARY.

The House then took up, by unanimous consent, and proceeded to consider the Senate amendment to the bill of the House (No. 152) to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary lines between the territories of the United States and the State of Texas.

The Senate amended the bill by adding a proviso, that no persons appointed by the State of Texas, in connection with running and marking said boundary, should be entitled to receive compensation upon the part of the United States, and also providing certain regulations in respect to the survey.

Mr. KELSEY demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put. The amendment of the Senate was then concurred in.

Mr. KELSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the amendment of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PHILADELPHIA POST OFFICE.

The House, by unanimous consent, next took up from the Speaker's table, for consideration of the Senate amendments thereto, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 26) authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I wish to say that the amendment of the Senate provides that any property sold shall be sold at public sale.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General, be, and are hereby, authorized to decide whether the custom-house at Philadelphia shall remain in its present location, or whether public convenience and interests require that the location of the custom-house be changed to the ground and building purchased of the Bank of Pennsylvania by authority of the law of the 2d of August, 1854, for the purposes of a post office, and the post office be removed to the present custom-house; and also to decide whether it is best to sell the building and lot of ground now used for the purposes of the United States court, and establish court-rooms in the building of the present custom-house; and that they be further authorized and empowered to so arrange the buildings for said offices and purposes as may, in their judgment, best promote the public convenience: Provided, That the expenses incident to such change and arrangement of the buildings shall not exceed the sum already appropriated for any or all of such purposes, and any additional sum that may be received for the building and ground herein authorized to be sold: And provided further, That should it be deemed best to sell the said court-house building and lot of ground, the President of the United States may cause the same to be sold after due public notice.

Mr. KELSEY. I demand the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PHILLIPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HALF PAY TO WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (S. No. 297) to extend an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If it be in order, I would wish that the House would proceed to the consideration of all the bills upon the Speaker's table. We are now extending privileges to particular members; but if we go to the Speaker's table we will all have a chance.

There being no objection, Senate bill No. 297 was taken up, and read a first and second time.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will yield to me that I may suggest an amendment.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana, and the House, to my amendment. There is in the bill a proviso that limits the pension to the half pay of a lieutenant colonel. I say that it is unfair to limit the pension of those above the rank of a lieutenant colonel to that of a lieutenant colonel. You have few generals and few colonels in the service, and it seems to me that the restriction ought to be stricken out. I think that the pensions ought to be according to rank. I am the more satisfied of that since the passage of acts in the case of the widow of General Worth, and in other like cases, where there was no more merit than there is in the remaining cases. I move to strike out the words:

"And that no greater sum shall be allowed to any such widow or minor children than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel."

Mr. FENTON. I ask leave to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I will hear the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COBB. Let us know what we are doing. The bill has not yet been read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Who is entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to his yielding to anybody. This is one of the most important bills which has come before Congress at this session; and if amendments are allowed to be put on it, it will be as large again. We ought to have an opportunity to discuss the bill, and have it rightly understood.

Mr. GROW. Had not the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fenton] the floor to move his amendment?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I do not yield for the amendment to come in. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the amendment of the gentleman from New York in order?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I have offered an amendment on which there has been no vote, and the gentleman's [Mr. Fenton's] amendment cannot come in as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. JEWETT. I hope my colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] will withdraw his amendment. It will kill the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask whether the amendment of the gentleman from New York is in order? If not, I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York is.

Mr. HOUSTON. Nor do I. I desire to hear it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I understand that this bill was taken up by general consent, with the understanding that it would be put upon its passage as it is, without any amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. In order to facilitate business, and let the bill pass, I withdraw my amendment.

The bill was read. It grants to all those surviving widows and minor children who have been or may be granted and allowed five years' half pay under the provisions of any law or laws of the United States, a continuance of such half pay under the following terms and limitations: to such widows during life, and to such child or children, where there is no widow, whilst under the age of sixteen years, to commence from the expiration of the half pay provided for by the first section of the act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853; provided, however, that in case of the marriage or death of any such widow, the half pay shall go to the child or children of the deceased officer or soldier whilst under the age of sixteen years; and, in like manner, the child or children of such deceased officer or soldier, when there is no widow, shall be paid no longer than while there are children or a child under the age aforesaid; provided, further, that the half pay of such widows and orphans shall be half the monthly pay of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the infantry of the regular Army of the United States, and no more, and that no greater sum shall be allowed to any such widow or minor children than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel; provided also, that the act shall not be construed to apply to or embrace the case of any person or persons now receiving a pension for life; and, further, that wherever half pay shall have been granted by any special act of Congress, and is renewed or continued under the provisions of this act, the same shall commence from the date hereof.

Mr. FENTON. I ask that my amendment may now be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the second section of the act approved the 3d day of February, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," shall be construed, in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Jane Smith, as granting pensions to the widows therein provided for, from the 4th day of March, 1848; and that all amounts due under said second section of the act aforesaid, for pensions accruing between said 4th day of March, 1848, and the 3d day of February, 1853, shall be paid to the persons respectively entitled thereto, at the several pension agencies, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no pension shall be allowed to any widow for the same time during which her husband was living, and in the receipt of a pension.

Mr. MAYNARD. I should like to state that the subject embraced in this amendment has been before the Court of Claims and before the Committee of Claims. It arises on the construction of the act of February 3, 1853. This is declaratory of the meaning of the act of 1853. The question arises in this way. In 1848, Congress passed a law granting pensions to widows of officers and soldiers—

Mr. COBB. If the question is open to debate, I desire to debate it.

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Louisiana called the previous question.

Mr. FENTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the previous question, so as to let me offer my amendment.

Mr. DAVIDSON declined to withdraw the previous question, and called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MARSHALL of Kentucky, and WALDRON, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 34.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DAVIDSON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. We have occupied two hours this morning in the consideration of general business. I wish now, if it be the pleasure of the House, to proceed to the consideration of the public business.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give me an opportunity of asking the unanimous consent of the House to put a private bill upon its passage. I am not in the habit of asking favors of the House, and I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I would yield for anything the House would give its unanimous consent to, except to put a bill upon its passage. I hope the gentleman will not ask me to do that.

Mr. BARKSDALE. That is my object. The bill can be disposed of in a moment. I have no idea that any gentleman will object to it.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I have one that is in the same predicament.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have one twenty-five years old.

EXCUSED FROM SERVING ON A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to present what I believe to be a privileged question to the House. I do not wish to debate it, but simply to explain my reasons.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAY. I ask this House to excuse me from further service on the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I ask it for this reason: during two weeks past, I have repeatedly asked the leave of this House, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to introduce a bill or resolution in reference to the recent outrages committed upon the American flag. That leave never has been accorded to me, a member of that committee; but it has been accorded, this day, to a gentleman who is not a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps it is due to the gentleman from Kentucky himself, that the Chair should call his attention to the fact that, when he asked the consent of the House, a single objection was sufficient to defeat it. An objection was made when the gentleman from Mississippi proposed to offer his resolution this morning; but it was then in order to move to suspend the rules, and it was under a suspension of the rules that the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi was received by the House.

Mr. CLAY. And I would respectfully observe that I have repeatedly asked for the same suspension of the rules. While I ask to be excused from further service on the committee, I wish to say that I am glad and happy, and congratulate the country that the subject of these outrages on the American flag has at last, by any means, got before the House, and been referred to the committee from further service upon which I now ask the House to excuse me.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I trust the House will not excuse the gentleman from Kentucky. I think he is one of the best men in the House to whom that resolution could be referred. [Cries of "Question!"] excused from further service on the committee—ayes 92, noes 63.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed a resolution changing the day for the adjournment of Congress, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it would not be better, before we proceed to any other business, to take up the resolution of the Senate on the subject of the adjournment, and dispose of it one way or the other.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to make one or two reports from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BURNETT. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to permit the House to dispose of the resolution upon the subject of adjournment. We shall then know what we have to do. If we intend to adjourn on Monday, it is important that the Senate should know it. It will not take long to dispose of the resolution, and it will expedite the public business.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I would inquire if the Senate have rescinded the resolution to adjourn next Monday?

Mr. BURNETT. They have, and the resolution is now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I am disposed to accommodate the wishes of the House. I have no feeling on the subject.

[Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, here reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act for the relief of D. O. Dickinson; when the Speaker signed the same.]

Mr. BURNETT. I now ask that the resolution of the Senate in respect to the final adjournment be taken up.

The resolution was read for information. It rescinds the joint resolution of the two Houses fixing the period for the final adjournment of Congress on the 7th day of June, and provides that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, shall declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Monday, the 14th day of June, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. PEYTON. I object to that resolution.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to suspend the rules.

The question was taken, and the rules were suspended, two thirds having voted therefor.

Mr. PEYTON. I hope the resolution will not be adopted. If we find we cannot get through by next Monday we can take it up and adopt it then.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to amend by inserting Wednesday, the 9th day of June, and call the previous question. I hope that amendment will be agreed to; because that will give both Houses abundant time to do all the public business.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BOCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion. I want my vote recorded in favor of doing the public business before we adjourn.

Mr. BURNETT. And I want the country to understand that it will not be the fault of this House if the public business is not transacted so that we may adjourn on Monday next.

Mr. HOUSTON. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to withdraw the motion to lay on the table, and let us take a vote directly on the resolution. I do not care whether it is the fault of the House or the Senate; we ought to remain until—[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky to substitute Thursday next for Wednesday. I think the Senate will be able to get through its business by that time.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well; I accept the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will allow me to move to insert Wednesday, so that the vote of the House can be taken on the two propositions.

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir; I move to insert

Thursday, at twelve o'clock, m., and call the previous question.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I renew the motion. Mr. REAGAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw the motion, and allow me one minute for explanation.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. COBB. I should like to be permitted to make a motion to strike out altogether the latter clause of the resolution, which fixes a day for adjournment.

Mr. DEAN. I object.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question being first on the amendment to strike out Monday the 14th, and insert Thursday the 10th,

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURNETT. I beg leave to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that without the consumption of time, we can as well settle this question by tellers.

Mr. CLEMENS. No, sir, I want the record for the country.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 105, nays 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bingham, Bishop, Bliss, Brayton, Bryan, Buffinton, Burnett, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clark B. Mr. MILLSON. I hope that motion will not be insisted on; for, if the resolution be now voted down, we may want to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was withdrawn.

Mr. McQUEEN. If the resolution as amended be not adopted, then we adjourn on Monday?

The SPEAKER. That will be the case if the existing resolution be not rescinded.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 142, nays 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Anderson, Andrews, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bingham, Bishop, Blair, Bliss, Boeck, Bonham, Bowie, Branch, Brayton, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caise, Caskie, East Clark, John B. So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BURNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARYLAND CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that on to-morrow I will call up the Maryland contested-election case. The reports are printed, and members can obtain them.

Mr. GROW. To-morrow is objection day in the Committee of the Whole House, and I hope that the gentleman will not call up the matter then.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I will call it up to-morrow, and then the House can do what they please.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill to extend an act entitled "An act (S. No. 297) to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 2d, 1853; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 26) authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia;

An act (H. R. No. 300) declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases;

An act (H. R. No. 502) for the relief of S. W. and A. A. Turner; and

An act (H. R. No. 578) to continue the pension heretofore paid to Mary C. Hamilton, widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, late of the United States Army; when the Speaker signed the same.

DISBURSEMENT OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have several reports to make from the Committee of Ways and Means. I am directed to report back House bill (No. 467) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for collection and safe-keeping, transfer and disbursement of the public revenue." I propose to put the bill on its passage. Under the act of 1846, the disbursing officers of the Government drew the money out of the Treasury and disbursed it from time to time as they thought proper. This subjects the public moneys to some considerable risk. Congress, on the 3d March, 1857, amended that act by providing that the disbursing officer should deposit the money in the various sub-Treasuries, and should not draw out in money more than twenty dollars at a time, and that for all sums over twenty dollars he should draw checks upon the Treasury. While the law is generally a good one, the inconveniences arising from it in certain cases is such that it is impossible for the Government to carry it out. The amendment reported, and which is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, provides that where it may be absolutely necessary, the disbursing officer may be allowed to draw more than twenty dollars. It keeps the general law still in force. It is utterly impossible to carry out the law in the distant Territories of Utah and New Mexico, and in other places. It is proposed to enforce the law wherever it is practicable, and where it is not practicable the proper Department assumes the responsibility, and allows the disbursing officer to draw more than twenty dollars. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 11, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 10th instant, asking for the form of such a bill as is proposed on the twenty-fourth page of the printed copy of my annual report on the finances.

The intention of this Department in carrying into effect the act referred to, of which copies are herewith ordered, have given a practical construction to its provisions. These instructions do not probably transcend the lawful authority of this Department, except where disbursing officers of the Department are directed in certain cases to pay money of the United States, intrusted to them for disbursement, without depositing it in any depository and checking for the same, as is expressly required by the terms of the act.

Perhaps in no case of the service under the direction of this Department would it be absolutely impracticable to make such deposits and payments by check—but in many instances it would be extremely onerous and expensive, without the slightest advantage or security. In the service in charge of some of the other Departments, the difficulty of carrying out the terms of the act in this respect, amounts to actual impossibility.

It is, therefore, respectfully proposed to modify the act in this particular, so as to place the responsibility of any other custody and mode of payment than allowed by the act, directly upon the head of the Department to which such disbursing officer belongs; as will be seen by the draft of a bill inclosed, agreeably to your request.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HOWELL COBB,
Secretary of Treasury.

Hon. J. GLANCY JONES, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage, and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that is a right sort of legislation.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. That is a matter of opinion entirely.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is a bill changing the whole law, and giving discretion to heads of Departments.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it is not. It is utterly impossible to carry out the existing law. This does not change it, but gives the Secretary a little discretion. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. It modifies and amends so much of the first section of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue,'" approved 3d March, 1857, as provides "that each and every disbursing officer or agent of the United States, having any money of the United States intrusted to him for disbursement, shall be, and he is hereby, required to deposit the same with the Treasurer of the United States, or with some one of the Assistant Treasurers or public depositaries, and draw for the same only in favor of the persons to whom payment is to be made in pursuance of law and instructions," so that whenever the Secretary or other officer at the head of any Executive Department to which any disbursing officer or agent is attached or shall belong, to whom money of the United States is or may be intrusted for disbursement, shall deem it necessary or expedient to order and direct that such money intrusted to such disbursing officer or agent shall be held by him, and paid directly to the person to whom payment is to be made in pursuance of law and instructions, without depositing the same in the manner required in said first section, such custody and payment of the money of the United States by such disbursing officer or agent, under the express order and direction of such head of the Department to which such disbursing officer or agent is attached or shall belong, shall be taken and deemed to be a sufficient compliance with that part of said first section of the act above mentioned.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman, the question which I wish to propound to him is this: by the law, as it is there quoted, all disbursing officers of the Government are required to deposit the money in their hands with the Treasurer or some one of the Assistant Treasurers, and to draw for it in favor of the persons to whom it is disbursed. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman if this bill does not propose so to modify that law as to authorize the head of each Department to give instructions to the disbursing officers under them respectively, to dispense with that observance of that law when they think proper, and let them, at their discretion, deposit funds or not—if, in other words, it is not to place within the discretion of each head of Department, to say whether its disbursing officers shall comply with the law?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. If my friend from Tennessee had listened attentively to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury he would not have propounded the inquiry he has propounded. The effect of this bill is not as the gentleman from Tennessee supposes. The law remains the same in regard to the deposits of disbursing officers, and as to checking out all sums over twenty dollars. It merely lodges a discretionary power in the heads of Departments in cases of absolute necessity, and to be exercised on their responsibility. As for instance, this bill does not touch the existing law, except where the disbursing officer finds that checks will not answer, as in Utah or New Mexico. The Secretary of the Treasury has written to this House that it is impossible to execute that law in all cases, and he merely asks you to give him a discretionary power in cases where it is impossible to execute it.

Mr. SPINNER. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has stated that this bill is only to apply in cases where it is absolutely necessary. Will he permit the words "or expedient" to be stricken out of the bill?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The head of the Department is to be the judge.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I regard this bill, from the hasty reading of it, as making a radical change in the principles of the Government since its foundation. I think it requires and ought to receive much greater consideration than we can give it now. I therefore move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot be entertained; the gentleman from Pennsylvania demanded the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the previous question will be voted down.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I hope we will have a vote upon it and let the House dispose of the matter.

The previous question was not seconded, only thirty-nine members voting therefor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled, an act to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas; when the Speaker signed the same.]

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I desire to make a brief explanation of the necessity of the passage of this act. At the last session of Congress, all disbursing officers were required to deposit their moneys with some one of the designated depositories, under the independent Treasury act; and where the payment which a disbursing officer had to make to an individual exceeded, in amount, the sum of twenty dollars, that disbursing officer was required to draw his check in favor of the person to whom the payment was to be made upon the depository for the sum of money to which he was entitled. Now it is an impossibility to execute that law. Your paymasters in the Army are required to pay the soldiers. Under the law of the last Congress, they are required to keep the money with which to pay the troops at some one of the designated depositories, and if the sum which a paymaster is to disburse to any one individual amounts to more than twenty dollars, he must issue his draft upon the depository for that sum of money. Your Indian agents are disbursing officers. They are required to pay the annuities to which the Indians are entitled, and those annuities are paid per capita. Many of the Indians have annuities payable to them, amounting from thirty to a hundred dollars, and if the agent executes the law of the last Congress, he must give his check in favor of each Indian on the designated depository, and thus expose the Indians to be cheated and swindled by those white men who hang about the tribes. The same remarks are applicable to pursers in the Navy, who disburse large sums of money, and to the disbursing officers at the several navy-yards, where sums greater than twenty dollars are frequently disbursed to individuals. There is therefore a necessity for an amendment of the law; and I think the provisions of the bill now before the House enforce a rigid accountability on the officers of the Government, and do not relax any provision of law designed for the safety of the public money.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move the previous question.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I insist on my motion. If the House does not see fit to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the previous question will bring us to a vote on the bill. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLAIR and SICKLES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 39.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was taken; and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means the bill of the House (No. 6) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859, with the amendments of the Senate.

First amendment:

Page three, line ten, strike out the word "for," and insert "and miscellaneous expenses of," so that the paragraph, as amended, would read:

"For the purchase of blank books, stationery, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, and for the payment of postages and miscellaneou expenses of the consuls of the United States, $40,000."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment. It does not affect the amount appropriated in the item which is for the ordinary expenses of consuls. The insertion of the words "and miscellaneous expenses of," merely enlarges the sphere of distribution. I suppose there will be no objection to concurring in the amendment. The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Strike out the second section of the bill, as follows:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury for any expenses which accrued, or shall accrue, before the commencement or after the termination of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1859."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] at an early day in the session. I believe by the common consent of the House a similar amendment, offered to another bill, was considered objectionable in this form, and was modified on motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] by adding a proviso that it should not take effect until after the end of two fiscal years. This provision, as it stands in this bill, does take effect immediately. I think gentlemen of all sides of the House are satisfied that the provision is not a proper one as it stands here.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JACKSON] the other day objected to the provision contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill for the reason that it did not apply to that particular bill.

Mr. JACKSON. I merely wish to say, as the gentleman has referred to me, that the objection which he has mentioned, was one of the objections which I urged; but I, at the same time, objected to the provision as being incongruous, and an improper provision to be attached to the bill.

Mr. STANTON. It seems to me there is a misapprehension about this amendment. It is not like the amendment which was rejected in the House the other day. That was a proposition that the expenditure of all appropriations whatever, made by Congress, should be limited to the fiscal year for which they were made; that balances going over from one year to another should not be used. This is simply a proposition that the money appropriated by this bill shall only be expended during the fiscal year for which it is appropriated. Now, if there is any difficulty in the practical application of that rule it passes my comprehension. I do not see the difficulty, I do not see the objection.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The difficulty is this. The estimates made for the consular and diplomatic service were based upon balances holding over from the current fiscal year; this amendment attaches to this bill, and if the bill passes with this provision in, not one dollar of the balances left over from the current fiscal year can be expended in the next.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. That is exactly what I want to do. I think the balances ought to go back into the Treasury.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I thought it was the unanimous opinion, the other day, that such a provision should not apply to the money now appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I think the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is mistaken as to the operation of that section. It merely applies to the money appropriated in this bill. It does not operate like the amendment offered by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] which was voted in and voted out of the bill a day or two ago. That was a general law, declaring that no money hereafter appropriated should be used for any purpose other than that for which it was specially appropriated, and for no other year than that for which it was specially appropriated. The effect of that amendment, as originally offered, would have been to prevent the Treasury Department from using any of the existing balances which now remain unexpended from last year's appropriations. To meet the difficulty a proviso was introduced that it should not apply to this or the following year. The difference between this amendment and that is, that it applies merely to the moneys appropriated by this act.

The balances of the last year are not appropriated by this act. Only the moneys included in this bill are appropriated by this act. The only effect, therefore, of this proviso is, that the moneys in this act shall not be applied to pay expenses incurred in the last year, nor to expenses to be incurred in the year following that for which they are appropriated.

Now I take it, Mr. Speaker, that that is the existing law of the Republic. I think that it is a violation of the existing law for any portion of the money appropriated for the use of one year to be applied for the use of another year. I take it that that is a direct violation of the language of the appropriation bill itself. I agree that it has been sanctioned, impliedly, by our making appropriations on the supposition that the balances unexpended under previous appropriation bills might be applied; and it is only that indication resulting from the proceedings of this House that can raise even a doubt upon the law; but I suppose that that indication itself only arises from the fact that each year we pass an appropriation bill upon the footing of accounts returned to us by the Secretary of the Treasury. We therefore see that the accounts returned to us embrace the balances which the Department contemplates it is to be at liberty to use; and that we receive those balances and impliedly sanction the use of them for the coming fiscal year, by making them the basis of our calculations, and appropriating only so much as will be necessary for the services of the Government after counting in the balances due us. I think that that is a bad system of procedure. I think that it is in violation of law. It only becomes valid by our adopting the reports of the Secretary as the basis of our legislation.

The provision in this bill does nothing more than put an express limitation on the moneys appropriated in that bill, which limit is already an implied one from the terms of the bill, and is only put there to set an example that hereafter the House means to adhere to what is now the law, that the money appropriated for a year shall only be used within that year. I think that the House set a bad example; that they defeated a great and salutary reform, when, for reasons quite inadequate, they receded from their adherence to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio—

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Does the gentleman want to force the officers of the Department to expend every dollar of the appropriations, and to leave not a cent of balance? The clause in respect to the surplus fund comes in every two years, and sweeps all balances back into the Treasury.

When this thing was first offered, believing that it might effect the object in view, I concurred in it; but it must be remembered that if applied to the present year it will make the reporting of another appropriation bill absolutely necessary. If the provision is made for future acts, so that all embarrassment will be prevented, I will cheerfully go with the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. My friend at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means has suggested a grave consideration. If I supposed that the amendment gave any additional incitement to any of the Departments to spend more freely than they have hitherto been spending, I am sure I would reverse the language of the amendment, and put it in other phraseology; for surely, sir, there has been no difficulty in getting money out of the Treasury for the past year, or for the four past years; and, indeed, I do not know at any time and under any Administration that there has been the slightest tendency in the money to remain there when there was any opening for it to come out. The purpose of the amendment is to stop the leak, if possible. The purpose of the amendment is to bring the Government back to what is the theory of our appropriation bills. Congress says that so much money, in our judgment, is needed for the use of this year. We choose to hold the Executive Departments responsible de die in diem, from day to day, from year to year. We do not propose to resign the power of controlling them, after we have once made the appropriations. We choose to require that there shall be an adjustment of the accounts and a review of the expediency of the appropriation every year. We make appropriations for this year, and at the end of the year, or when we get near the end of the year, we will have an opportunity of judging how that money has been expended, and we will apply such limitations as our experience makes necessary. I suppose that is the policy of all of our appropriation bills; and it is an abuse, without one shadow of legal authority, to apply one cent of money appropriated for the purposes of one fiscal year to the use of another fiscal year. And if my friend at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means will now rise in his place and show me any law that can raise even a doubt on that point, I will agree to vote against the amendment.

I desire to say that I have studiously and carefully examined all the statutory enactments that I could find relative to this subject; and that there is nothing to be found on the subject, except a proviso at the end of one of the acts which allows within the limits of the quartermaster's department some authority to make a transfer—a proviso to that authority to transfer from one head of appropriation to another, prohibiting a transfer of money appropriated for one purpose in one fiscal year for another purpose in another fiscal year. That proviso can have no meaning in the place where it is inserted, unless to limit the generality of the language declaring that moneys appropriated for one purpose within those limits might be used for another purpose within those limits without a limitation of time; those words not being in an appropriation act, but being general, that the moneys appropriated for one of these purposes may be used for another of these purposes. There was no limitation in that act confining its operations to the year for which the appropriation was made. It might have been supposed that the transfer might be made at any time. As the law now stands, there is not only no law authorizing the application of money for one fiscal year to purposes beyond it, but there is an inhibition where the generality of the act allowing transfers might otherwise have admitted possibly of that interpretation.

What was the objection when we substituted the Senate's amendment for an admirable proviso inserted by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN?]. The objection was made that money, which was not actually expended and paid out in the course of the fiscal year, would have to be reappropriated. I think the gentlemen who urged that objection were not aware of the real state of the law on this subject. When money is appropriated for the purpose and use of a fiscal year, if a contract is made and the money is due in the course of that year, of course the money can be paid whenever it is demanded. If the money is allowed to remain in the Treasury, still it can be drawn for at any subsequent time, but the two-year limitation restores it to the Treasury. If the money is not applied to the purpose for which it is appropriated in the course of that year, then, of course, it cannot be spent for that purpose after the expiration of the year.

Mr. Speaker it is possible there are two different classes of appropriations relative to which the law may be very different. There is a large class of appropriations for public buildings, for objects of a permanent character, not limited either expressly or by implication to the year, where the one amount is given for a particular purpose, and where there is no limitation in point of time. I suppose, for instance, if there was an order to build a custom house in New Orleans, and that there had been, in the bill providing for certain civil expenses, an appropriation made to carry on that building, it is possibly immaterial whether that money is drawn from the Treasury within that year or within the following year. It may be regarded as not an appropriation for an annual purpose, but as an appropriation for a definite object and is dedicated to that purpose—to be spent at any time when the purpose may require it. Consequently all that class of cases may not fall under the proviso, which says that money appropriated for the use of one fiscal year shall not be used and applied to the service of another fiscal year; because the money is not, if this view be right, appropriated to any particular fiscal year, but it is applied to the object and purpose without limitation of time; the only limitation on general appropriations of that kind is, that money which is not actually spent and paid for the purpose for which it is appropriated, irrespective of time, shall at the end of two years go back to the Treasury. If this distinction be not tenable then it is illegal now to use any money appropriated even for a particular building in an annual appropriation bill after the expiration of the year.

But I apprehend that money which is appropriated for the payment of the Army for the year 1851 cannot be applied to the payment of the Army for the year 1850. If it can, then the money appropriated for the year 1853 can likewise be applied to pay the Army for 1850; and all that the President has to do is to incur any expense he may choose in any one fiscal year, with respect to the Army, and then bide his time and apply the money which Congress may appropriate to subsequent years to pay the debt which has accrued in previous years; and I submit to every gentleman, that unless there be a limitation on the expenditures of the Government, the public service, in the War Department, for instance, may be seriously injured. I put that case, because it has already occurred for three years in succession. In the year 1855 there was a deficiency in the quartermaster's department beyond the amount of even the deficiency. They did not wait for the passage of a deficiency bill in the following year, but took the money appropriated for the year 1856 and applied it to pay the balance expended over and above the appropriations of 1855. The deficiency bill which was passed some days ago exhibits the startling fact that the quartermaster's department was deficient for the last year to the extent of $1,000,000, actually paid out of the appropriations for this year—not obligations incurred in that year, but deficiencies existing in the previous year, but paid out of this year's money, of which no mention was made to Congress, after Congress had last year passed a large deficiency bill of over a million dollars for that very department. Without any authority of law, without any leave of Congress, without any reference to us whatever, $1,000,000 more is sunk by the quartermaster's department in transporting the troops, in provisions, in clothing, and in such expenditures. The bill which we have passed this session of some nine million dollars has comprised in it not merely the amount over and above that which was appropriated at the last session of Congress for this fiscal year; but there is also included in it the $1,000,000 which was consumed in the last fiscal year over and above the amount that was appropriated in the deficiency bill in the last session of Congress.

I say that these are grave matters. I have not risen here for the purpose of wasting the time of the House, or to cast odium on any department of the Administration. But I desire to say that when the House yesterday voted down, under the previous question, the amendment of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] it took off a most important limitation that has been placed on executive abuse of the public money. It was to prevent abuses done, not only without law, but directly in the teeth of the very first principles on which we are called upon here to appropriate money. Why, sir, the only limitation that exists in the statute-books on the power of the House to appropriate money, is that no money shall be appropriated for the use of the Army or Navy for more than two years; and on the principles on which the department has been acting, I say that there is no limitation at all on the authority of the Executive; but he may incur any amount of debt, and make use of any amount of money, and dispose of the funds which we give him in any manner he sees fit, and then when we make the next annual appropriation for the use of the Army, why can he not leave the whole Army destitute within that year, taking the chance of our being willing to break up the military establishment, and apply the money to pay debts incurred in the previous year, in violation of his duty?

Mr. Speaker, allow me to make one other observation. One of the implied limitations on the use that is to be made of the Army is to be found in the amount appropriated for the Army. If we expect the Army to be employed in putting down disturbances, we appropriate a larger amount; if we expect it to be kept in cantonments, if we expect it to remain in the fortifications, we appropriate a smaller amount. But by the construction of the Administration for the last three or four years, that limitation is entirely disregarded; and one great cause of the enormous deficiency which we are called upon this year to make up is the disregard of that limitation by the Executive. It is because the President has seen fit, without consulting Congress, without asking its leave, to march an army on a war campaign under circumstances of improvidence and carelessness, which, in my judgment, entail a total loss of the whole deficiency in the quartermaster's department which that march has occasioned, that these vast deficiencies exist. Nobody will pretend that the troops now on the borders of Utah were sent there either prudently or wisely, or that their being exposed to the dangers of a winter attack, or to the no less danger of a winter spent on the plains, has at all promoted the object of reducing Utah to obedience to the General Government; and had application been made to Congress to authorize that proceeding, in my judgment, they would have refused authority to commence, at an inauspicious season of the year, an expedition which must necessarily result only in expenditure, and in nothing but expenditure.

I think, therefore, that the limitation in this bill is a salutary declaration on the part of Congress that they have reached the end of their patience with this perpetual misapplication and squandering of the public funds, and that they mean now to call the attention of the Executive Departments of the Government to it, so that they shall confine themselves to the expenditures within the year; and that if they wish to use the Army and Navy for purposes for which the money appropriated during the year is not sufficient, they shall come to Congress, specify the purposes, and ask a special appropriation, as they have done this session in asking for the new regiments of volunteers which we have authorized to operate in the campaign in Utah. It is for this purpose that I call the attention of the House to the importance of this amendment, and to the great loss the public service has sustained by the rejection of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the bill which we considered a day or two ago.

Mr. LETCHER. My colleague [Mr. HUNTER] in the Senate has explained this matter so clearly, in remarks submitted there, that I do not deem it necessary to do much more than to call the attention of the House to those remarks as they are reported in connection with the motion to strike out the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. They are as follows:

"Mr. COLLAMER. I wish the Senator from Virginia to explain the occasion of striking out the second section.

"Mr. HUNTER. There is occasion for doing so. That section proposes to restrict the expenditures within the year.

"Mr. COLLAMER. The second section confines the expenditures to the year; and why is it stricken out?

"Mr. HUNTER. Because it is found, from experience, that it is impossible to confine the appropriations of one year to the expenditures of that year. There is already a general provision, which is a sufficient safeguard, that when an appropriation is more than two years old, it goes to the surplus fund, and can no longer be used. I am assured by the State Department—and I should have known it if I had not been so assured—that the evidences of many of the expenditures, within the year for which it is designed to provide, do not come in during the year, but perhaps early in the next succeeding fiscal year; and the effect of this section would be, that the money could not be applied to them.

"Mr. COLLAMER. It could if the expense accrued within the year.

"Mr. HUNTER. Not according to the construction which the Department put upon it, and the construction which, I suppose, is designed by the House of Representatives."

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the extract which my friend from Virginia has read, shows that the gentleman from whose speech he has quoted, was laboring under the precise confusion of ideas which I think has prevailed somewhat in this House. I suppose that money is spent when it is due, that it is gone from the Government when the Government ought to pay it. I take it that if, upon the western coast, an obligation is incurred and the accounts only are not sent in here to the Treasury Department, so that the money can be drawn, that is not a case within the provisions of the amendment of my friend from Ohio. That money is spent, and, no matter how long it lay in the Treasury, it would be paid out on demand, till it goes back again with the unappropriated money; for two years the parties, by applying at the Treasury at any time, would have a right to receive that money. When, therefore, there is once an obligation on the part of the Government to pay it, the money is spent, and it may be paid after the year. For instance, suppose that on the western coast the Government has bought military stores in the quartermaster's department, to the extent of $1,000,000: that money is expended for the use of that fiscal year. When that expenditure is made, if the money is not on the coast, the person acting in the quartermaster's department sends in his account to the Department here. It is possible that that account may get here before the fiscal year has expired. If it does, then the money is immediately delivered over to him. If the account does not get here until after the fiscal year has expired, still the money has been expended within the fiscal year, for the service of that fiscal year, and can be paid at any time, at least within the two years under the existing law.

Well now, what is the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio? It is this: suppose that an amount of money is appropriated for the use of the quartermaster's department, and that all that money is not used in the course of the fiscal year for which it is appropriated; suppose that contracts have not been made for the supplies of the quartermaster's department within that year, and the year expires: then the effect of the limitation in the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is, that after the expiration of the year there can be no expenditure of that money made.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Both the gentlemen have fallen under misapprehension in regard to the phraseology of my proposition. They are both lawyers, and will understand the meaning of the words "expenses which accrued or shall accrue." The word "accrue" has a definite meaning, and it is different entirely from the meaning of the words "pay out." When a debt accrues, is when it becomes due, when it becomes payable; and therefore, whenever expenses accrue or become due and payable within the fiscal year, then they can be paid at any time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. That is exactly the view that I have been endeavoring to explain; that whenever the money is due and owing, it is, for all practical purposes, expended. Your Departments, under that provision of law, and, in my opinion, under the law as it now stands, have a right to make a bargain to spend money. But if the money is not already spent by a bargain, purchasing goods, or is not already due for the pay of soldiers, for instance, within the limits of the fiscal year, then the Government has no right to apply any portion of that money to the buying of new goods or the payment of soldiers after the expiration of that year, on the account of the next fiscal year.

Mr. MILLSON. With the permission of my colleague, I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. He avoids the difficulty that would result from the passage of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by supposing that where there is an amount due by contract, although it may not be actually claimed or paid during the fiscal year, yet that it is considered as appropriated, and may be paid after the expiration of the fiscal year. Now, I want to put a question to him from which he will see, I think, that he does not get rid of the difficulty at all, by such a construction of the law. Suppose that the Government asked an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of constructing or completing a particular work; a contract is made for materials involving an expenditure of only $20,000, but it is estimated at the Department that the cost of labor in constructing the work will be $80,000; and that work has to be done within the fiscal year. But the delay of the contractor to furnish the material within the fiscal year may prevent the Department from having the work performed, and the expense of the labor which is not performed until after the expiration of the fiscal year will not have accrued; and I ask the gentleman from Maryland, whether, under this provision, it can be paid?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I suggest that appropriations for the purposes of building may not, in their nature, nor by the language of the bill, be confined to the service of the fiscal year. It is for the accomplishment of a definite object, and not limited to any particular time. But if the language of the law show the appropriation to be confined to the year, then none can be used for expenses incurred after the year. But when money is appropriated for the service of the quartermaster's department for a particular year, it is limited to that particular period, and I say they have no right to go beyond. It is for the support of the Army for a particular period of time.

Mr. MILLSON. That begs the whole question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Well, sir, to satisfy the mind of my friend from Virginia, I will say that you cannot adopt any other principle without running foul of the Constitution. Suppose we appropriate money here to the amount of $100,000,000 for the service of the quartermaster's department for this year. The Constitution says that no appropriation shall be made for the Army or Navy for a period of more than two years. Does my honorable friend from Virginia suppose that is no limitation upon it; or does he suppose that because the money is appropriated to be used within that one fiscal year it may lie as an unexpended balance, to be used at any period beyond the two years to which the appropriation is limited by the Constitution itself? It all comes at last to the construction of each particular law. When the money is appropriated for a longer period no question can arise. If we appropriate money for the service of the Army or Navy for two years, then unquestionably that money cannot be used in any period beyond the two years; but if we appropriate money for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1857, is it conceivable that under the Constitution or law that money may be used for the payment of expenses which accrue in 1852 or 1860? Such a construction is in violation of the Constitution; nay, more, it assumes an inherent power in the Executive to use money appropriated for a particular time at any other time he may see fit. It assumes that the President can do anything we do not forbid, when the constitutional assumption is that he can do nothing with money but what we expressly authorize. If the law does not authorize the money to be used for any but one year, it is a gross usurpation to use it for another year; for an appropriation limits money not merely to an object but to a specific time, and the President can no more use money for a different year or object than he can without any appropriation at all.

Mr. LETCHER. It strikes me that my friend from Maryland begs the entire question when he undertakes to say that this section does not apply in all cases—in other words, when he undertakes to say that you cannot apply it to appropriations for the construction of buildings, although there is nothing in the section indicating a purpose so to apply it. I say the gentleman begs the entire question, and surrenders the principle which he is seeking to have ingrafted into our legislation.

Now, sir, if this amendment is to be regarded as excepting anything, I take it that the officers of the Treasury, in construing it, must ascertain that exception from the identical words employed in the law limiting it to particular cases, and declaring that it shall not apply to other cases. Well, sir, let us see if there is any limitation of this sort in this second section. It reads:

"That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury for any expenses which accrued, or shall accrue, before the commencement or after the termination of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1859."

Is there any limitation in those words which would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in case of a building, or of a contract for material, or in any other conceivable case, to so construe this law as to exempt any one thing for which an appropriation was made, if the expenditure was not strictly confined within the limits of the year? It strikes me that it could not be so construed; that it is patent and palpable that it could not be so construed.

But my friend from Maryland says there is no trouble at all in executing this provision of law. Why, sir, if he will take the trouble to look at the estimates submitted at the opening of this session, he will find there are some sixteen million dollars appropriated in the last year, which are to be expended for the purposes for which the appropriations are made, in the next fiscal year. Now, sir, will it not, under the terms of this section, be absolutely necessary that every one of these items of expenditure should be strictly confined to the year for which it is appropriated?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The language of this section only makes the provision apply to the money appropriated in this bill.

Mr. LETCHER. The principle is the same; and the gentleman undertakes, not only to apply it to this bill, but to every bill that comes up. The gentleman cannot get rid of the difficulty by telling me that it only applies to the moneys appropriated in this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. My friend will do me the justice to allow me to explain my position. I say the difference between this provision in the bill and the one which the gentleman from Ohio proposed to apply to another bill is, that in that case the existing estimates were made upon the supposition that the balances of the last year could be applied to the following year. To avoid that difficulty a proviso was added. That proviso was then necessary, because that was a general enactment covering all appropriations, and the difference between this bill and that is, that the limitation here only applied to the moneys appropriated in this bill.

Mr. LETCHER. There is no difference in principle, nor is there any reason why, if the principle is applied here, it should not be applied generally. I refer, for instance, to page 42 of the estimates, in which the Secretary reports that there was a balance of $173,750 for the salaries of consuls unexpended at the close of the last year. He reports that unexpended balance to the House, and asks that, instead of appropriating $273,000, which is the amount necessary for the present year, that we should only appropriate $100,000, leaving the balance to be made up from the surplus holding over from the last year. These two sums make up the required amount of $273,750.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. It is to prevent exactly that application of the appropriation that this section is intended.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I confess I cannot understand the difference; the money has to be used, whether you appropriate the whole amount, or only appropriate enough to make up the whole amount with the unexpended balance on hand.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. If there is an unexpended balance let it go back into the Treasury, and be reappropriated for the next year. The object I wish to have accomplished is to bring the Department under the control of Congress in their expenditures.

Mr. LETCHER. Cui bono? The money must go back into the Treasury, and be reappropriated if this provision is adopted. Now, if this $173,750 was appropriated for the payment of the salaries of consuls, what difference does it make whether it is applied to the payment of these salaries for the present year, and only $100,000 appropriated to make up the full amount required; or whether the money goes back into the Treasury, and you appropriate the full amount of $273,750?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. It makes this difference. It is the right of Congress to say whether we will appropriate any money at all for this purpose, and if Congress decides it will not, still the Executive may use the unexpended balance in defiance of the will of Congress, unless the principle which we contend for is recognized.

Mr. LETCHER. I put it to my friend to say whether the State Department or the President could use this excess for any other purpose than consular services?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Under the construction of the law and the practice of the Departments, it seems to me that they can use it for almost any purpose at any time.

Mr. LETCHER. I imagine the gentleman refers to the War Department. We have now upon the statute-book a provision of law which applies to the War and the Navy Departments, and which authorizes them, under certain circumstances, to make contracts beyond the amount appropriated for the purpose. Is there any such express authority, or can there be any contract connected with the consular and diplomatic service, where this money could be so applied unauthorized by law?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. My friend will allow me to make a suggestion. Suppose that this House should not be desirous of continuing a consularship at Liverpool, or anywhere else; if there is a balance of appropriation from the last year, it is out of our power to do so, unless we pass an affirmative law, because the President can go on and pay him. Whereas, if annually we are called on to appropriate, we will have, as we ought to have, the absolute control of saying affirmatively whether any money shall be expended for that purpose or not.

Mr. LETCHER. All very true, Mr. Speaker; but if Congress should think that a consularship should be abolished, of course they will abolish it, and will not appropriate the money, because there will be no reason then for the appropriation. There can be none; but does that relieve the difficulty here under this clause of the law? It strikes me, not; but let us see: here is the law in regard to the surplus fund; let us see where my friend's argument is going to take him. He says that, if money is appropriated now, and that money is intended to be applied to a particular purpose, and is not applied, it is still applicable to that purpose, and does not revert to the Treasury, even under the two-years law.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. No, sir; it does not say that. I am not sure as to the construction of the two-years law. I do not mean to express an opinion on it, but it is probable that the operation of the two-years law is to carry back to the Treasury everything which is not actually paid out. That is my impression of the effect of it. Not merely that which is unexpended, but that which is not actually paid out.

Mr. LETCHER. Precisely; and I maintain that there cannot be a constructive expenditure of the public money; that, under any law Congress passes, to be called an expenditure, it must be actually paid out. But let us look at the provisions of this act. The fifth section reads as follows:

"Where any moneys shall have remained unexpended upon any appropriations by law, other than for the payment of interest on the funded debt, or the payment of interest and reimbursement according to contract of any loan or loans made on account of the United States, as likewise moneys appropriated for a purpose in respect to which a larger donation is specially assigned by law, for more than two years after expiration of the fiscal year in which the act shall have been passed, all and any such appropriations shall be deemed to have ceased and been determined; and the moneys so unexpended shall be immediately thereafter carried, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the account on the books of the Treasury denominated the 'surplus fund,' to remain, like other unappropriated moneys, in the Treasury; and it shall not be lawful, for any cause or pretense whatsoever, to transfer, withdraw, apply, or use for any purpose whatever, any moneys carried, as aforesaid, to the surplus fund, without further and specific appropriations by law."

That act was passed on the 26th day of August, 1842. It was reported, sir, by Mr. Fillmore, and passed by his political friends, who then had a majority in each House of Congress. It was approved by the President, whom my friend from Maryland aided in electing, and is, I think, a most wise and excellent law, that ought not to be altered or repealed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. My friend must recollect that that does not vary the construction of the law.

Mr. LETCHER. It does this: where there is that restriction placed upon the officers of the Government, according to the terms and provisions of that law, it is clear and distinct that they cannot, under the concluding terms, apply this money in any other way, when the two years expire, than to return it to the Treasury; and there it remains until it shall be specifically applied by legislative action on the part of the two Houses of Congress, and approved by the President.

Well, sir, I now ask, in the terms of my colleague in the other end of the Capitol, whether that restriction upon the President and the Departments is not ample for the purposes of protecting the public funds from any misapplication on their part to any purposes not intended by Congress?

But let us see how this matter will work out, according to the views of my friend from Maryland. We had, some time ago, to run a boundary line between the United States and Great Britain. We made a specific appropriation of so much money for the purpose of running and marking that boundary line. It was not intended, at the time of its passage, that this line could be run and marked in the space of twelve months, but that it might be run and marked in the space of two years, or a less time. Now, sir, under the operation of the doctrine which is insisted upon by my friends upon the other side, whatever amount was unapplied at the close of the fiscal year after the passage of the bill, would have to go back into the Treasury, and could not be applied to the purpose of running or marking this line, for which it had been by law specifically set apart. But, if it is not done within two years, under this law of 1842, whatever was unexpended at the end of two years, goes back into the Treasury. Under their view, the object would be to return at the close of the first year whatever was left unapplied to the purpose, although it may then be in progress of execution; and it would require, therefore, the legislation of two successive sessions to accomplish what one act of legislation would effect as the law now stands.

Now, sir, can it be a matter of so much importance that where a purpose of this sort is to be effected you shall make an annual appropriation? You know, at the time you make it, you cannot accomplish the purpose within the year, and at the same time you make it with the understanding that you are to come back next year to appropriate again. What good end would such legislation subserve? Would it save the Treasury? Would it expedite the work? Would it facilitate the purpose Congress had in view in making the appropriation in the first instance? I apprehend not. While it would accomplish none of these purposes, it might be productive of very serious embarrassment and difficulty to the Departments of the Government who have these expenditures in charge.

But let us look at our own country. Here is a portion of it lying upon the Pacific coast, thousands of miles distant from this point; and when appropriations are made, it requires months to communicate with the officers there, and make the necessary arrangements for the purpose of executing the laws of Congress. My friend from Maryland [Mr. DAVIS] and myself both know that during the present session of Congress the returns for the Indian service from that distant portion of our country did not arrive here in time to be submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means with the annual reports at the opening of the session. And they never did come in to us, I believe, till the latter part of the month of April, some four months after Congress had convened. Now, we see, at once, that where this correspondence has to be carried on, where instructions have to be given, and parties to be heard from, you may lose one half or more of the entire year before you can apply a dollar of the appropriation to the purpose for which Congress designed it.

Then, I say, this restriction would operate badly; and I say that while we have this two-years restriction, we have every protection that the Treasury needs, and have, at the same time, none of the embarrassments that would grow out of the provision which it is proposed to insert in the appropriation bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move the previous question.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I think we had better have a call of the House.

Mr. GROW. I wish the gentleman would withdraw the demand for the previous question to let me introduce a bill to have printed and referred.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, declined.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. Is there a quorum in the House?

The SPEAKER. There was no division called for, and the fact whether there is a quorum or not was not ascertained.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. Did I understand the Speaker to announce his decision?

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the previous question had been seconded, and was just announcing that the main question was ordered, when the gentleman from Maryland rose.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. I do not insist on my point of order.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am applied to by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Indiana to give way to introduce bills. I desire to have a little private bill for the relief of one of my constituents taken up. It is a bill which passed the Senate, and if there is no objection I will move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from its further consideration. It is Senate bill (No. 230) for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules cannot be entertained.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I hope that my friend from Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is not a quorum here; the bill appropriates money, and I object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. This is a bill the exact counterpart of one which was passed at last Congress. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CLEMENS withdrew his objection.

Mr. GROW. I desire the consent of the House to permit me to introduce a bill for reference and to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. Is it in order to transact business without a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. But it has not been announced that there is no quorum.

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. I think the House is setting a bad precedent; and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLEMENS and BURTINOTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 45.

Mr. HOWARD demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 4, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. T. M. CARSON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Postmaster General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information relative to the lists of post offices, regulations, &c., published by George S. Gideon in 1855, and by John C. Rives in 1857; which, on motion of Mr. STUART, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of J. W. Cummins, for himself and other temporary clerks employed under authority of law, praying to be allowed the benefit of the act of April 22, 1854; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FOSTER presented the petition of George B. Bacon, who performed the duties of purser, while holding an appointment as captain's clerk, on board the sloop-of-war Portsmouth, praying compensation for his services as purser; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 538) for the relief of settlers on certain lands in the State of Illinois, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the enrolled bill entitled "An act authorizing the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary line between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas;" which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (No. 538) from the House of Representatives, for the relief of settlers on certain lands in the State of Illinois, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STUART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 432) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1856;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STUART also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 433) to run, mark, and survey the western boundary of the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the executive board of the American Indian Aid Association, reported adversely thereon, the existing law making sufficient provision on the subjects treated of in the memorial.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the petition of R. F. Hunter, praying to be credited for public moneys stolen while in his possession, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 556) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1859, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 555) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1858, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John H. Yewell, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire whether the post office laws authorize a postmaster to refuse to deliver letters to a person authorized to receive them by the individuals to whom they are addressed, and if any legislation be required on the subject, submitted a letter of the Postmaster General in relation to the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment, and recommended their passage:

A bill (No. 534) for the relief of Allen Smith;
A bill (No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge;

A bill (No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams;
A bill (No. 459) granting an invalid pension to Silas Stevens, of Virginia; and

A bill (No. 529) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 423) for the relief of Jane Perry, reported it without amendment, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw her papers; which was agreed to.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 366) for the relief of John Duncan, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 532) for the relief of Ebenezer Hitchcock, reported it without amendment and adversely.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 511) for the relief of Nehemiah S. Draper and William Holden, heirs-at-law of Mary Draper, deceased, reported it without amendment and adversely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 528) for the relief of Judith Nott, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 458) for the relief of Evelina Porter, widow of the late Commodore David Porter, of the United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 506) for the relief of the administrator of Horatio Boulbee, deceased, reported it without amendment and adversely.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 200) in relation to the duties of postmasters, reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, severally reported them back without amendment:

A bill (No. 531) for the relief of John Perry, of Illinois;

A bill (No. 346) for the relief of William Sutton;

A bill (No. 457) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien; and

A bill (No. 527) for the relief of Phineas G. Pearson.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe, reported it without amendment and adversely.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 529) for the relief of John C. Rathbun; and

A bill (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of Nancy Magill, of Ohio.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Theresa Dardenne, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 434) for the relief of Theresa Dardenne, widow of Abraham Dardenne, deceased, and their children. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 54) to revive an act entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Stephen Heard, and others," approved May 24, 1824, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James T. V. Thompson, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 435) for the relief of James T. V. Thompson. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Peter Trezvant, reported a bill (S. No. 437) to refund to the State of Georgia the amount paid by said State to Peter Trezvant for supplies furnished certain troops during the revolutionary war; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Charles M. Perry, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 439) for the relief of Charles M. Perry. The bill was read and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel Hayward, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of Nathaniel Hayward. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POLK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the report of the Court of Claims on the claim of Joseph Clymer, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 438) for the relief of Joseph Clymer. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print one thousand extra copies of the report on commercial relations, for the State Department, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print certain papers relating to the case of Schuyler Livingston, reported in favor of printing the same; and the motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the appointment and compensation of A. G. Penn and Emile La Sere, reported in favor of printing the same; and the motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF BOOKS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am directed, by the Joint Committee on Public Printing, who were instructed by a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th of April last, "to inquire into the propriety of suspending the printing of any books which may have been ordered by any previous Congress; and if the printing of any of said books has been commenced, that they inquire how far the work has progressed, and whether it is proper to discontinue their publication, and pay for the work which may have been done; and that they report, by bill or otherwise," to submit a report, accompanied by a couple of resolutions, counterparts of which have already been adopted in the House of Representatives, and which are the results of the investigations made by the Joint Committee on Public Printing. If these resolutions shall be adopted in the Senate, as they have been in the House of Representatives, they will effect a saving of some three hundred and thirty thousand dollars on the public printing this year in regard to three outstanding unfinished works, to wit: the Pacific railroad survey, the Mexican boundary survey, and the Chili astronomical exploration. I ask the adoption of these resolutions. I presume it will hardly be necessary to consume the time of the Senate by reading the report in full.

Mr. KING. If it is to be acted on it ought to be read.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Very well; read the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

That they have carefully examined into the matters referred to them, and have found that all the reports ordered to be printed by Congress previous to the present session have either been completed, or are in such a state of forwardness that the suspension of the publication of either of them would result in the loss of much valuable information to the country, which has been collected at very great expense.

Their investigations, however, have led them to the conclusion that, while they recommend the completion of the printing of all the reports heretofore ordered, the number of copies may be so reduced upon some of the volumes, not yet printed, as to effect a very considerable saving of the public money, and, at the same time, furnish as many copies of each as will meet all the just requirements of the Government and of the public.

The unfinished works are three in number, as follows:
1. The report of the results of the United States naval astronomical expedition to Chili, ordered to be printed at the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress. This work will comprise six volumes, four of which are printed; and the printing of the remaining two are progressing simultaneously. The number of extra copies being small—one thousand for the Senate and two thousand for the House—the saving of expense to be effected by rescinding the resolutions to print them would be so inconsiderable that the committee do not deem it expedient to recommend any interference with existing orders.

2. Reports of explorations and surveys to ascertain the most practicable route for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. These reports will make twelve large quarto volumes, (including one volume of charts,) elaborately illustrated. The Senate has ordered the printing of twelve thousand four hundred copies, and the House eleven thousand five hundred and twenty copies. The printing of eight volumes has been completed; the ninth and tenth have been nearly finished; the eleventh (comprising the narrative of Governor Stevens's expedition) has not yet been commenced, nor the copy furnished; and the printing of the twelfth, being the volume of charts, has not yet been commenced, though the whole expense of engraving these charts in copper, amounting to about forty-five thousand dollars, has been incurred. Inasmuch as the volume comprising the narrative of Governor Stevens's expedition will not be prepared in time to commence the printing previous to the next session of Congress, and, as a disposition is manifested to curtail all expenditures in reference to this work that can with propriety be made, your committee submit a resolution herewith which dispenses with the publication of this volume until Congress shall otherwise direct. The cost of this volume is estimated at $103,000.

The committee also recommend that the number of copies of the volume of charts be reduced from twenty-three thousand nine hundred and twenty to three thousand nine hundred and twenty copies, which will give the usual number of copies for the two Houses of Congress, five hundred copies for the use of the War Department, and fifty copies, heretofore ordered by the Senate, to each of the officers commanding expeditions. This will effect a saving of upwards of eighty thousand dollars. Should the wants of the Government hereafter require an additional number of these charts they could be procured at small expense, as the plates from which they are printed are the property of Congress, and will be preserved for future use.

3. Report of the United States commissioner to survey the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, ordered to be printed at the first session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress. This report comprises two volumes, the first of which has been completed. Of the second volume, the Senate has ordered the printing of two thousand extra copies; and, if the order of the House to print the report included also the printing of the appendix, or second volume, there are required for the House ten thousand extra copies. This volume will contain about five hundred pages of text and two hundred and eighty-two pages of illustrations, and its entire cost will be $107,900. The engraved plates for this volume have all been contracted for, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, and are nearly completed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1858.

NEW SERIES.....No. 169.

As the number of copies ordered appears to be more than the public interests require, the committee recommend that it be reduced to one thousand extra copies for the Senate, and three thousand for the House, thereby effecting a saving of about sixty thousand dollars.

There are, also, six large index maps, engraved on copper; but as they are not intended to be bound in either of the volumes of the report, and as there appears to be no general interest attached to them, it is recommended that they be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, who can have copies printed, from time to time, as the public interests may require.

The amount required to complete the printing and binding of these three reports, with the illustrations, is estimated at $643,423. To stop all of them, at present, would effect an apparent saving of probably four hundred thousand dollars; but this would cut off entirely the fourth and fifth volumes of the Astronomical Report, four volumes of the Pacific Railroad Report, and the second volume of the Mexican Boundary Report, and would render wholly valueless printed and engraved matter, which has either been paid for, or is yet to pay for, amounting to more than half a million dollars, much of which, doubtless, is absolutely necessary for the uses of Government, and all of which is valuable or interesting to the public. If, however, the recommendations of the committee meet the approbation of Congress, it is believed that the sum of $316,000 will complete all these reports in reduced numbers, (though sufficiently large for all necessary purposes), and a saving thereby effected of about three hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate of the 24th of February, 1855, directing the printing of eleven thousand extra copies of the reports of the explorations and surveys to ascertain the most practicable and economical route for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, be so far modified as that no extra copies of the volume of charts be printed for distribution by the members of the Senate; and that the printing of the volume comprising the narrative of the expedition under Governor Stevens be suspended until the further order of the Senate.

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate of the 15th of August, 1856, which directs the printing of two thousand extra copies of the appendix to the report of Major Emory on the Mexican boundary survey, be so far modified as to authorize the printing of only one thousand extra copies of said report.

The committee would further report, that the sums necessary to complete the works herein specified, in accordance with the plan recommended by your committee, are as follows:

For printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and paper for the same, $80,000.

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, $123,000.

For binding documents ordered to be printed during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, $113,000. All of which is respectfully submitted.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

JOHN JONES.

Mr. FOSTER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 456) granting an invalid pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, to report it back, with an amendment; and as this is a very peculiar case, and the petitioner is a very old man, I ask that the bill be considered at the present time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 456) granting an invalid pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee.

The original bill directed the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, from the 4th of September, 1856, and to continue during his natural life.

The committee reported it with an amendment to strike out all after the word "month," in the sixth line, and insert, "from and after the date of his application, and to continue during his natural life," so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension at the rate of forty dollars per month, from and after the date of his application, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. POLK. I should like to hear the bill, as it originally was, read.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. JONES. The amendment is simply to prevent the payment of back pay, to cut off three months' pension. The House proposes to give him three months more than we do by the amendment.

Mr. POLK. I think he ought to have it. I want the House bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. IVERSON. If there be no further reports I want to make a motion.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia to allow me to take up a bill that came from the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he is a member, and I think it will take no time. We have a letter from the Adjutant General on the subject.

Mr. IVERSON. Is it a private bill?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir. It is the bill in relation to enlistments and administering oaths in the Army.

Mr. IVERSON. To-day is set apart for the Private Calendar, and I am disposed to go on with it; but I will give way to the Senator, if his bill will lead to no debate.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to appeal to both the honorable Senators to call up the resolution in regard to the adjournment.

Mr. IVERSON. That is a privileged question, and I suppose the Senator can make the motion at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) The Chair will remark, that at the first blush he thought it not in order to consider this resolution to-day. On subsequent reflection, at the suggestion of gentlemen more conversant with the rules than the present occupant of the chair, he inclines to the opinion that it is a privileged question, and therefore, if the Senator makes the motion, it can be considered.

The Senate proceeded to consider the message of the House, announcing that the House had passed the resolution of the Senate in reference to the final adjournment, with an amendment to strike out "Monday, the 14th," and in lieu thereof to insert "Thursday, the 10th."

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to vote against that amendment, and ask the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. MASON. I submit to the better knowledge, on this matter, of the Senator from New York, that it would be proper to let the resolution lie until next week, and see if we cannot finish up the business. I presume we can.

Mr. FOOT. Without action, the old resolution stands.

Mr. SEWARD. We shall have to adjourn on Monday, if we do not act.

Mr. MASON. It shows that I was fortunate in appealing to the Senator's better intelligence.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we are all agreed that it is better to continue the session until Thursday, than to adjourn on Monday. If we vote this amendment down, in my belief, we shall adjourn on Monday.

I think it better, therefore, to adopt the House amendment; and if, on Thursday, a necessity should exist for a continuance, I have no doubt it will be continued. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. GWIN. I have not the most remote idea that the House will adhere to their amendment, if we vote it down. I hope it will be voted down. We are just as little qualified to adjourn on Thursday, as we are on Monday.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that I ever knew the business of the session done up so closely as it will be done if we adjourn on Monday, since I have been a member of Congress, now some fifteen years. Still, to gratify the whims of some gentlemen who think it is necessary to make a show, I shall vote to concur in the House amendment; but I can tell the Senator from California that if he thinks the House will back down further than that, he is exceedingly mistaken.

Mr. GWIN. Let us try them, anyhow.

Mr. HALE, and others. We will not try them.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Donnell, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Green, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Johnson of Arkansas, Pearce, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Simmons, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wade, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Davis, Fitch, Foot, Gwin, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wilson, and Yulee—27.

So the amendment of the House was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to submit a motion to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. YULEE. I hope the Senator will give us until one o'clock, before the motion is pressed.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to try the sense of the Senate. We have determined to adjourn on Thursday, and if so, we must go on with these bills.

Mr. SEWARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will give way and allow me to move to take up a bill.

Mr. HUNTER. If I give way to one, I must give way to all. I want the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope, if the Senator from Virginia will not give way, that we shall vote down his proposition. Give us the morning hour. We can pass a number of private bills. The parties are importunate about them. The Senator from Virginia has the whole day after one o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. After one o'clock, there will be an order for private bills. If it were not for that I might yield.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We shall all agree, I apprehend, by general consent, that at one o'clock we shall take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw my motion if the understanding is that we shall take up the appropriation bills at that time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will agree to it.

Mr. PUGH. I object to it. I think the Senator from Virginia took last Friday for his appropriation bills. We have had but one private bill day during the session, and I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. HUNTER. I think, then, we had better take the sense of the Senate. I shall submit to whatever it is very cheerfully.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. HUNTER. My motion is pending.

Mr. IVERSON. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To postpone all prior orders, and take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. IVERSON. I trust that motion will not prevail; but that the Senate will proceed to act on the Private Calendar, at least so far as to act on Senate bills that may not be objected to. We may postpone the House bills until next week, and act on them on Tuesday, because it is not essential that they should be acted on to-day; but we can make much progress with the bills reported in this branch, which may not give rise to debate, if we commence where we left off the last day we had the Calendar under consideration. It will be useful and proper that they should be passed, so that they can go to the House of Representatives before the termination of the session, in order that they may be acted on there, and receive the sanction of the House of Representatives.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOOT. I understand there are one hundred and fifty private bills on our table from the House of Representatives. Unless they are acted on to-day, I see no chance at all for acting on them in the Senate. I think we had better go to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I am as much in favor of disposing of the private bills as anybody here; but I think we ought to pass the appropriation bills first, and then we can pass the private bills.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bigler, Cameron, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hale, Hammond, Hayne, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Sidel, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Chandler, Doolittle, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Pugh, Seward, Simmons, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar, beginning where we left off when the Calendar was up before, and acting on those bills which shall not give rise to debate.

Mr. GWIN. I object to that, and hope the order will be reversed.

Mr. IVERSON. I can only say, that at the commencement of the Calendar the first two or three cases are the most debatable cases on the Calendar, and if we take them up, we shall occupy the whole day in debating them, and probably not pass one of them; whereas, if we go on with those bills that shall give rise to no debate, we shall do some good.

Mr. TOOMBS. I insist that we go through with the public business.

Mr. IVERSON. I submit my motion, and let the Senate decide it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Seward, Simmons, Sidel, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Clay, Clingman, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—11.

So the motion was agreed to.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 383) for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Myra Clark Gaines, widow of the late Major General Edmund P. Gaines, on the pension roll, at the rate of half the pay per month to which he was entitled at his death, to commence from the 6th of June, 1849, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report in that case.

Mr. PRESIDENT OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) No report accompanies the bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I object to it.

OLIVER P. HOVEY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, next proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Oliver P. Hovey $1,555, compensation for printing the "Kearny Code" of laws for New Mexico, in 1856.

Mr. KING. I do not see how this Government is liable. The claim should, I think, be against the government of New Mexico. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: I ask that the bill which was laid over in relation to printing the laws of New Mexico be passed. On examination and a statement of that case, I am satisfied that there is no just objection to it. I waive my objection, and ask that the bill be passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MONEY.

The bill (H. R. No. 398) for the relief of William Money, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into the alleged seizure of certain horses in California, by the orders of General Kearny, said to be the property of William Money; and the value of the horses seized, which were appropriated to the use of the Army of the United States, and to pay the value of each horse.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is there a report in that case? I wish to hear it read.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appears that the claim is for forty-five horses seized under the orders of General Kearny in California, and for other articles lost, as he avers, in consequence of the conduct of the troops. The horses are valued at $100 each. The memorialist alleges that he had been engaged for many years as a naturalist, in exploring California, studying the geology, geography, and productions of the country, with a view to publish the information accumulated by his observations and researches; and that he had compiled a large manuscript volume, containing many drawings, paintings, and maps, which was worth $10,000. He says he had instruments connected with his scientific investigations in natural history worth $320, and personal baggage and provisions worth $680. He states that in November, 1846, he left the town of Los Angeles for Sonora, and having reached an Indian village, called Howargo, was there deprived of his horses by the troops under the command of General Kearny, and thus deprived of the means of pursuing his journey or of returning. He moreover states that information having been given by General Kearny's troops to those Indians and to the neighboring tribes, that the country was under the American flag, and that it became the duty of those Indians to aid and assist in the American cause, and to prevent the passage of all persons from the settlements to Sonora, it was a sufficient incentive to the Indians for the exercise of their natural inclination for pillage; and after the departure of the troops of General Kearny, the Indians took prisoners the whole of the memorialist's party, and commenced an indiscriminate plunder of his property and baggage, and in a few moments totally destroyed all his valuable manuscripts, drawings, maps, and interesting documents, the result of more than twenty years' arduous labor, and upon which he placed his sole dependence for his future maintenance.

He also mentions the sufferings to which his wife was subjected in consequence of his losses. His statements on this subject present a case of female suffering of very aggravated character, and well calculated to make a deep impression on the sensibilities of the heart.

The committee determined to report a bill authorizing an inquiry into the truth of the allegations of the petition, and to provide for the payment of as many of the horses of the petitioner as were taken under the orders of General Kearny, and appropriated to the service of the United States. They would have reported a bill for the immediate payment of the value of the horses claimed, but for certain circumstances which in a great degree threw suspicion upon the whole claim. The affidavits which prove the value of the horses and the property, state, in words written at length, the value of the articles. It appears, from the inspection of the affidavits, that the value for each horse was first written forty or fifty dollars, and that the word "forty" or "fifty" had been erased, and "100," in figures, inserted in its place, preceding the word dollars. It is clear that the word erased was forty or fifty, but which, cannot be distinctly told. At the time General Kearny invaded California, the committee has ascertained from various sources that the usual price for the best horses in California did not exceed the price of twenty-five dollars per head, on an average. It seemed to the committee that the valuation put upon the horses by the witnesses whose affidavits are filed, was very extravagant, compared with reliable information obtained from other sources; but when the valuation as originally written in the affidavits has been erased, and figures inserted, doubling the price, such fact brings a just suspicion upon the whole claim.

The committee perceive no ground, no proof, upon which the Government of the United States can justly be made responsible for the depredations committed by Indians in the manner stated.

There is no evidence that General Kearny, or any of his officers or men, gave directions to the Indians to make prisoners of the memorialist and his family, or depredate on his property. Nor does the committee perceive that the loss of the manuscripts, &c., &c., was a necessary consequence of the seizure of the horses. Thieves may have stolen the property, even if the horses had not been taken. The damage complained of for the loss of all the property, except the horses, is too contingent and uncertain to constitute a valid claim against the Government. Moreover, the committee have no means of forming a judgment in regard to the value of the maps, drawings, manuscripts, &c., said to have been destroyed by the Indians; and some samples of the talent of the memorialist which have been exhibited to the committee do not produce any favorable opinion of the value of manuscripts said to be destroyed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. CANNON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of John F. Cannon.

It requires the Postmaster General to pay to John F. Cannon, at the rate of $120 per annum, for and during the time he carried the mail, according to his contract, in addition to the amount already paid to him, for additional expense incurred and extra service performed by him on mail route No. 2627.

Mr. KING. Is there a report accompanying that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; there is no report.

Mr. KING. Then let it go over.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

The bill (S. No. 400) to surrender the stock of the United States in the Dismal Swamp Canal Company, upon certain conditions, to said company, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The shares held by the United States in the stock of the Dismal Swamp Canal Company are, by this act, to be released and surrendered to the company, upon condition that the proceeds or profits thereof are to be applied to the prosecution and completion of the work commenced by the company to connect the southern termination of the canal with Pasquotank river, below the Moccasin Track; and also that the United States shall not be thereafter subject to any contribution or expense for the work, or for repairing or extending the canal, or for any object resulting from its interest as one of the joint proprietors.

Mr. KING. Is there a report or a statement of the facts?

Mr. CLAY. The report is among the papers; but I can state the case briefly if the Senate chooses to hear me. The Government of the United States has been a stockholder in this company for a good while.

Mr. STUART. To what amount?

Mr. CLAY. To an amount equal to about one third of the stock.

Mr. KING. What is the whole amount?

Mr. CLAY. The stock is of little value unless the work is completed in the way proposed. They came here with a memorial, and asked Congress either to appropriate money, its proportionate share, towards completing this work, or to afford such other relief as it thought proper. The Committee on Commerce unanimously determined that they would surrender the stock on condition that the Government should be discharged, and I think it was pretty generally agreed that we would surrender all other stock we have got in every other work of improvement.

Mr. KING. I am content.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is it provided that, if we go out, they will complete it?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, they undertake to do that. The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK INDIANS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 389) providing for the allotment of lands to certain New York Indians, and for other purposes.

The President is directed, as soon as practicable, to cause three hundred and twenty acres, or one half section of land, to be set apart and allotted to each individual Indian entitled to lands in the tract set apart for the use of the New York Indians, by the treaty of January 15, 1838, made and concluded at Buffalo Creek, in New York, and the treaty made at the same place on the 20th day of May, 1842: the lands are to be selected within the reserve, in Kansas Territory, in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public surveys, and so as to include the improvements of each Indian, and patents for the same are to be issued to the head of each family. When the selections shall have been thus made and allotted, the remainder of the reserve is to be considered a part of the public lands, and to be subject to settlement, preemption, and entry, as other lands belonging to the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment to insert in the seventh line, after the word "Indians," the words "and now residing thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE STEALEY.

The bill (S. No. 403) for the relief of George Stealey was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The account furnished by George Stealey, for services rendered and expenses incurred by him as agent, appointed by the Indian commissioners of the United States for the State of California, to visit the northern tribes of Indians in that State, is to be referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with authority to cause the same to be settled upon principles of equity and justice, and the amount thereof to be paid. This settlement is to be made upon satisfactory vouchers showing that the expenses were actually incurred, and that the prices paid were just and proper under the peculiar circumstances of the case.

Mr. KING. I call for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the report; from which it appears that the memorialist was employed in the winter of 1850-51 by the United States Indian commissioners in California to visit the tribes in the northern portion of that State, with a view to arrest the aggressions upon the miners in their neighborhood, and establish peaceful relations between those Indians and the white inhabitants until permanent treaties could be made, in which he was successful. In consequence of the separation of the commissioners before he had returned from his mission, and the exhausted state of the fund provided for the purpose, he, as he alleges, has not been compensated for his services, nor reimbursed the money expended by him out of his own funds in carrying out the object of his mission. He now asks payment for his services and reimbursement of his expenses, a list of which is among the papers, furnished under oath, but unaccompanied by any proper vouchers, other than the statement of one of the commissioners, also filed with the papers, that the memorialist was employed on the service indicated, which was one of great danger and exposure, and had succeeded in effecting the object of his mission, as the memorialist had alleged in a letter written to the commissioner. The committee are of opinion that the memorialist should be compensated for any services he may have performed under the direction of the United States commissioners, and reimbursed any expenses actually incurred in the performance of the duty assigned to him, on production of satisfactory vouchers, showing that the expenses were actually incurred, and that they were necessary to the attainment of the end that he had in view.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET WHITEHEAD.

The bill (H. R. No. 232) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Margaret Whitehead, widow of William Whitehead, a boatswain in the United States

Navy, on the pension roll, and cause to be paid to her the sum of ten dollars per month, from the 9th day of April, 1854, and to continue during her natural life or widowhood.

Mr. CLAY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read it; and it appeared that the petitioner is the widow of William Whitehead, deceased, who was a boatswain in the United States Navy. While engaged, under orders, in removing some cannon and balls at Old Point, he received a strain in the groin, resulting in hernia; and he died of strangulated hernia and hydrocele, April 9, 1854.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should think it was time the Senate was taking some action, and adopting some principle, in reference to these questions. Here, it seems, was a person in the civil service in time of peace, who, in lifting cannon, was supposed to have been affected at the time, and subsequently died; and his widow is to be pensioned. If that is a ground for a pension, it ought to be made a general rule for pensions. None of these cases ought to be entertained here at all. These are mere applications to us for gratuities; and all public business must stand aside that you may give people gratuities. If this man is entitled to a pension under these circumstances, what is the limit? You see it is a far-fetched case. When he died, or how he died, is not stated; but it is supposed that his death resulted from his services in removing cannon balls! If persons, by casualties in time of peace, contract diseases by which they may subsequently die, are they to be pensioned? If so, that ought to be a principle. We ought not to be lumbering up Congress here. They ought to go to the proper Department and get it. The class of cases that are beyond all principle come here. Because they are not within the principle, they ought not to pass. I object, therefore, to the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed over.

MILES JUDSON.

The bill (S. No. 407) for the relief of Miles Judson, surety on the official bond of the late Purser Andrew D. Crosby, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to readjust the accounts of the late Purser Andrew D. Crosby, and to allow credits therein for sundry suspended or rejected items to the aggregate amount of $1,196 87; and that that sum, together with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the 1st of January, 1843, to the date of payment, be reimbursed to Miles Judson, being so much of the amount paid by him upon a judgment obtained against him as one of the sureties on the official bond of Purser Crosby.

Mr. CLAY. Read the report.

Mr. IVERSON. I can state to the Senate the facts in the case. Crosby was a purser in the Navy; Judson was his security. Crosby died in the Gulf. He fell from the mast-head. He was ordered up aloft, fell, and was killed, under Commodore Perry, in the Gulf of Mexico. His accounts are unadjusted at the Treasury Department. There were a number of items objected to because of the want of vouchers, and the vouchers could not be produced on account of the death of Mr. Crosby. Judson was sued, judgment recovered on the bond, and he has paid the debt, amounting to something over four thousand dollars. Since that vouchers have been produced, and sustain some of the items, not all; but as far as the committee have had the vouchers we have authorized the money to be paid back to Mr. Judson. It is perfectly fair.

The particulars of the claim are more minutely set forth in the report from the Committee on Claims, from which it appears that Judson was one of the sureties on the official bond of Andrew D. Crosby, late a purser in the United States Navy. Purser Crosby was killed in 1846, while engaged in the duty of piloting the United States steamer Vixen, under the command of Commodore Perry, along the coast of Yucatan. On the settlement of his accounts at the Treasury, a balance was found in favor of the United States for the sum of $3,326 31, for which suit was instituted against the sureties, and judgment recovered, in 1855, against the petitioner, Miles Judson, who subsequently paid into the Treasury, through the marshal of the eastern district of Louisiana, in satisfaction of the same, the sum of $4,320 70, including interest and costs. This application is for the reimbursement of that sum, on the ground that the sudden death of Purser Crosby, in the active discharge of his duty in time of war, must have left his accounts in a deranged condition, and that the presumption, arising from his high character, is that, if he had not been thus deprived of the possibility of properly presenting his accounts and vouchers, no defalcation would have appeared.

A claim was presented to the Twenty-Ninth Congress, in behalf of the representatives of Purser Crosby, to be allowed certain sums alleged to have been paid by him to certain warrant officers of the United States ship Ontario, in 1841, and which had been disallowed in the settlement of his accounts with the Government. The amount thus claimed was $550 99. The claim was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, who reported in favor of its allowance, but it does not appear that any action was had upon the bill.

During the present session the committee referred the petition of Mr. Judson to the Secretary of the Treasury, with the request that he would cause the committee to be furnished with any information on the files of the Department calculated to lead to a proper decision of the merits of the present claim. In answer, the Secretary communicates a statement of the Fourth Auditor, containing a list of items rejected in the settlement of Purser Crosby's accounts, which is among the papers in the case, and sustains the report of the committee in 1847 in favor of allowing the sum of $550 99, and also an allowance of several other items in the heretofore rejected accounts of Purser Crosby, amounting to an additional sum of $218 97.

The committee concur in the opinion expressed by the committee of the Twenty-Ninth Congress in favor of the allowance of the $550 99 paid to the warrant officers of the Ontario, and with the Fourth Auditor, who thinks that, in addition to the above, a further sum of $218 97 on other items should be allowed.

There are amongst the papers lately filed by the agent of Mr. Judson several original vouchers for money paid out by Crosby, and which do not appear ever to have been allowed him, namely: First, one large table, March 5, 1843, $15. Second, for freight on specie, May 4, 1843, $30. Third, for beef, bread, and vegetables purchased for the United States ship Preble, April 12, 1845, $110 66. These vouchers and purchases appear to have been authorized and approved by the commanding officers of the ship in which Crosby was purser. These make up an additional sum of $155 66, which ought, in the opinion of the committee, to be allowed.

The Fourth Auditor, in his communication, admits the propriety of allowing the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth items of the suspended accounts of Crosby, if there was any evidence that he had ever received the drafts and Treasury notes which are the foundation of the items. Since that letter was received by the committee, the agent of the petitioner has filed the certificate of George Curtis, cashier of the Bank of Commerce, New York, in 1844, stating that Mr. Crosby, as purser of the Ontario, handed him $9,500 of Treasury notes to sell for him, which Curtis sold at a discount of three fourths per cent.; the loss being $71 25, the identical amount charged in item No. 28. In support of the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh items, letters of the then Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Upshur, are exhibited, of 9th May and 6th of July, 1842, authorizing Mr. Crosby to draw on the Department at thirty days' sight for such sums as he might want for the use of the ship, and to negotiate the drafts on the best terms that could be obtained in New Orleans. This is strong presumptive proof in support of these two items, and authorizes the committee to allow them. These three items make the sum of $271 25, and all added together make up an aggregate sum of $1,196 87. The committee think the above sum ought to have been allowed Purser Crosby in the settlement of his accounts; and that as his surety, Mr. Judson, has been charged interest on the amount of Crosby's liability upon his official bond, it is reasonable and just that interest should be allowed on the above sum from the average period of the various expenditures, which would be about the 1st of January, 1843. The committee therefore report a bill for the sum of $1,196 87, with interest at six per cent. There are several other items in Purser Crosby's suspended account which the committee have reason to think were just, but, as there is no proof to sustain them, they are compelled to reject them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND CLAIMS IN LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. No. 410) to confirm certain land claims in the Florida parishes of Louisiana, to the city of New Orleans, was announced as next in order.

By this bill the city of New Orleans is to be confirmed in its title to the one undivided one half part of several tracts of land following: First, nineteen thousand arpents of land sold to Don Louis de Clonet and Don Alexander de Clonet by Don Juan Ventura Morales, Governor General of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 15th and 16th days of November, 1803; second, one hundred and twenty thousand arpents of land sold to Don Jeronimo Chiapella by Don Juan Ventura Morales, Governor General of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 5th and 7th of October, 1803; third, thirteen thousand three hundred and thirty-three arpents of land, being the one third part of a tract of forty thousand acres of land, sold to Don Juan Delapize by Don Juan Ventura Morales, Governor General of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 16th of May, 1804; fourth, twenty-one hundred acres of land described in the acknowledgment made in favor of Philip Robinson by Don Thomas Estevan, commandant at the port of Galveston, on the 20th of January, 1804; and fifth, fourteen hundred and twenty acres of land, being the unconfirmed remainder of a tract of twenty-seven hundred acres of land granted by Don Thomas Estevan, then commandant of the Amite district, to John McDonough and Sheppard Brown, on the 5th of March, 1806.

Joseph Reynes is also to be confirmed in his title to a certain tract of land in the parish of East Feliciana, and State of Louisiana, containing about forty thousand arpents; which tract was sold to his late father, Joseph Reynes, senior, on his application, dated the 19th of November, 1803, and which sale was confirmed by Don Juan Ventura Morales, Governor of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 31st of December, 1803.

John Johnston, and Harriet Johnston, now widow Marshall, sole heirs of James Johnston, deceased, are also to be confirmed in their title to a tract of thirty-five thousand arpents of land, lying in the Florida parishes of Louisiana, on the waters of Thompson's creek, or Feliciana river, and the Cemite, immediately south of the thirty-first parallel of north latitude; the tract being the same which was sold to Don Manuel Langos by Don Juan Ventura Morales, Governor of Louisiana and West Florida, on the 2d of January, 1804.

The heirs, assigns, and legal representatives of Cristoval de Armas, and his son, Miguel de Armas, are also to be confirmed in their title to twenty thousand arpents of land, situated in the Florida parishes of Louisiana, sold to them by Don Ventura Morales, Governor of West Florida and Louisiana, by deed, dated at Pensacola on the 28d October, 1806.

And it is to be made the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause to be surveyed, under instructions to be issued by him, these several tracts of land, and to issue patents for them in favor of the several parties respectively confirmed; but if any of the lands are owned or possessed by third persons, claiming or deriving title from the Government of the United States, then the lands so owned or possessed by such third persons are not to be included in these confirmations, but in lieu thereof the parties entitled to confirmation are to receive from the Commissioner land warrants authorizing them to locate and enter, in legal divisions or subdivisions, any other land of the United States that may be subject to entry at $1 25 per acre, which land warrants shall be assignable in the same manner and according to the same rules and regulations as are now applicable to military bounty land warrants.

Mr. KING. Is there a report in this case? Let us hear it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will state that the report is nearly thirty pages long. If the Senator would like information, and will permit me, I will give it as succinctly as I can, and in a much shorter time than the reading of the report will occupy.

Mr. KING. I should like to know whether portions of the land are not settled, so that one of the objects of the bill is to get land clear?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Not at all. This whole section of Louisiana has remained almost unsettled, by reason of the difficulty of these titles. There may be some settlements, here and there, where the Government has sold parts of it. It is not proposed to disturb the settlers there, but to enter the same quantity elsewhere in the State.

Mr. KING. If most of this land was settled, I should prefer to leave it to the parties to litigate their claims.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is very little of it settled. That whole district of Louisiana has remained unsettled in consequence of these titles being in an incomplete condition. If the Senator would like to hear the case, I will state the facts.

Mr. KING. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to hear the Senator from Louisiana explain the last provision of the bill, giving unlimited authority to locate land warrants. I am willing to confirm the land claim if it be just; but I do not like to give this privilege.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I shall be compelled to trespass on the attention of the Senate for a few moments. This is a subject of great interest to the people of Louisiana, and has remained unsettled now for nearly fifty years. At the time of the acquisition of Louisiana from France, there was a dispute as to the eastern boundary of Louisiana. The United States claimed under the title from France that Louisiana extended eastward to the Perdida river, occupying a great deal of what is now the southern part of the State of Alabama. Spain contended that, on the contrary, all lying east of the Mississippi river and the island of New Orleans formed a portion of the province of West Florida, belonging to Spain. That title between the United States and Spain remained in litigation for some sixteen years. It remained in actual possession of Spain. It remained so, with the acquiescence of the United States, until the year 1810.

Mr. KING. The Senator will excuse me. I dislike to do so; but I think this bill had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie over, under the rule.

Mr. BENJAMIN afterwards said: A bill was a short time ago objected to by the Senator from Ohio, who joined with the Senator from New York in his objection to the bill to confirm certain land titles in Louisiana. The Senator from Ohio has examined the matter, and is willing to withdraw his objection. It is the bill (S. No. 410) to confirm certain land claims in the Florida parishes of Louisiana to the city of New Orleans and others.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any report accompanying it?

Mr. BENJAMIN. The bill has been read three times, and it has been examined by the Senator from Ohio, who made the objection.

Mr. IVERSON. It is suggested by a Senator near me that it confirms a title to the extent of five hundred and fifty thousand acres of land.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It does.

Mr. HUNTER. It is a large claim. I never heard of it before.

Mr. PUGH. The report is as large as the claim. It is very long.

Mr. CLAY. If it is not to be read, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill must be passed over.

EBENEZER RICKER.

The bill (S. No. 411) for the relief of Ebenezer Ricker was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ebenezer Ricker, late a corporal in the Army of the United States, on the invalid pension list of the United States at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 4th of March, 1856, and to continue during his natural life, on account of a wound received in the military service of the United States.

He enlisted as a private in the Army of the United States, and was attached to company A, second regiment United States dragoons, commanded by Captain G. A. H. Blake. On the 16th of October, 1839, he was made a corporal. In the month of May, 1840, he was put in charge of the guard, guarding the baggage train passing along St. John's river, in Florida. While in service in the line of his duty, he had occasion to take his carbine from its resting place in the saddle, when it was accidentally discharged, and the ball passed through his left wrist. The consequences of this wound were a permanent disability, and it has totally disqualified him from procuring his subsistence by manual labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IOWA SETTLERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 322) for the relief of purchasers of public lands within the timber reserve opposite Fort Kearny, and for the settlers within the Winnebago agency reservation, the Fort Atkinson reservation, and the timber reserve opposite Fort Crawford, all in the State of Iowa.

By this act all entries heretofore made at Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, by preemption or otherwise, of lands situated within the timber reserve opposite Fort Kearny, in township number sixty-eight north, of ranges forty-three and forty-four west, are confirmed, and patents are to be issued thereon. By the second section the privileges of the preemption act of the 4th of September, 1841, are extended to all bona fide actual settlers, who, prior to and at the passage of this act, have made actual settlements upon the lands heretofore reserved (and which remain undisposed of) for the Winnebago agency, in township ninety-six north, of range nine west; upon lands within the military reservation at Fort Atkinson, in the same township and range; and upon lands within the timber reserve opposite Fort Crawford, in township ninety-five north, of ranges three and four west—all in the State of Iowa; but within three months from the first newspaper publication of this act in the land district in which the lands are located, the settler is to file a declaratory statement with the register, showing the description of the land claimed by him, and to file proof showing his right under this act, and make payment at the rate of $1 25 per acre for the same, within twelve months.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill, with an amendment in lines nine, ten, and eleven, in the second section, to strike out the words, "and upon lands within the timber reserve opposite Fort Crawford, in township ninety-five north, of ranges three and four west."

From their report it appears that the timber reservation opposite Fort Kearny had been long abandoned by the War Department, and its existence, as a reserve, apparently forgotten. It was surveyed, brought into market, and sold as other public lands. The issuing of patents seems to have been suspended because these lands had not been formally transferred by the War Department to the Department of the Interior. The Fort Atkinson and Mission reservations, and timber reservations opposite Fort Crawford, were abandoned by the War Department many years since, and were settled on and improved by settlers as other public land. In 1854 the buildings at Fort Atkinson were sold to Catharine Newington, who, by a subsequent special law of Congress, was allowed to purchase one section, on which the buildings were situated, as a preceptor, at $1 25 per acre. The Secretary of War, after an examination of the subject, by special agent on the grounds, in the year 1857, ordered the sale of that part of the timber reservation opposite Fort Crawford, in the possession and occupancy of actual settlers, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each, at $1 25 per acre to the settlers; which sale has been made. The committee, therefore, as at present informed, see no sufficient reason for special legislation in relation to this reservation, but recommend the application of the same principle, in the sale of the Fort Atkinson and Winnebago reservation, as was applied in the sale of the timber reservation opposite Fort Crawford.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of purchasers of public lands within the timber reserve opposite Fort Kearny, and for the settlers within the Winnebago Agency reservation and the Fort Atkinson reservation, all in the State of Iowa.

WILLIS A. GORMAN.

The bill (S. No. 417) for the relief of Willis A. Gorman, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that there be paid to Willis A. Gorman, as Governor of Minnesota Territory, the sum of $820, as compensation for his services as commissioner to investigate the alleged frauds of Alexander Ramsey, late superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, and for reimbursement of his necessary expenses incurred therein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY G. CARSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 244) for the relief of Henry G. Carson.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Henry G. Carson, administrator, with the will annexed, of Curtis Grubb, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Curtis and Peter Grubb, the amount of a certain final settlement certificate numbered two hundred and sixty-five, letter N, dated January 5, 1784, issued by Benjamin Stelle, commissioner for settling debts of the United States in the State of Pennsylvania, to Curtis and Peter Grubb, on account of cannons, shot, and shells, furnished during the revolutionary war, now certified by the Register of the Treasury to be still outstanding and unpaid.

Mr. POLK. The Court of Claims have reported adversely on that case. The committee concur in the adverse report of the Court of Claims, and ask to be discharged.

Mr. STUART. Then I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

SUSANNAH REDMAN.

The bill (H. R. No. 335) for the relief of Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to pay to Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman, formerly of Captain Clay's company of Kentucky volunteers, $170, being the amount adjudged as due to Lloyd Redman for three horses lost by him while in the service of the United States during the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BISCOE.

The bill (H. R. No. 203) for the relief of George W. Biscoe, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit the claim of George W. Biscoe to indemnification under the first article of the treaty of Ghent, for the loss of the schooner Speedwell, captured in the Patuxent river by the British naval forces on the 22d August, 1814, and which was in the waters and within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States on the 17th day of February, 1815, the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty of Ghent, and was carried away out of the waters and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, in violation of the first article of the treaty; and that the officers shall ascertain the value of the schooner Speedwell, from such proof as may be exhibited to them, within six months from the date of this act, and that the amount so ascertained shall be paid, not exceeding the sum of two thousand dollars.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (S. No. 418) for the relief of Captain John B. Montgomery was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow to Captain John B. Montgomery, of the United States Navy, in the settlement of his accounts, the sum of $91 85, being for public money intrusted to him for recruiting purposes, and lost by the failure of the Phoenix Bank in Charlestown, Massachusetts.

In 1841 Captain Montgomery was ordered to take charge of the recruiting service at Boston. This service involved the disbursement of public money, which was placed in his hands for that purpose. This money he, in common with other disbursing officers in that vicinity, kept on deposit in the Phoenix Bank, then regarded as a safe and reliable bank, equally by the public officers and the mercantile community. In October, 1842, the bank suddenly failed, at which time Captain Montgomery's deposits amounted to $687 95, as appears from the official statement of the receivers of the bank assets. Of this sum $596 10 have since been paid in dividends out of the assets of the bank, and Captain Montgomery now asks that the balance of $91 85 may be passed to his credit on the books of the Treasury. Acts of Congress have been passed for the relief of Pursers Wilson and Taylor, whose funds were deposited in the same institution and lost at the same time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The joint resolution (S. No. 46) authorizing the payment of certain moneys to certain Cherokee Indians remaining east of the Rocky Mountains, was announced as next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount, if any, of the Cherokee appropriation of June 12, 1838, that was carried to the surplus fund June 30, 1847-48; and the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for reimbursement of the appropriation, and as much thereof applied as may be necessary to set apart in the Treasury a sum equal to $53 33 to each individual Cherokee Indian, or descendant of Cherokee blood, that remained in the States east at the time of the ratification of the treaty of New Echota, May 23, 1836, and who has not removed west of the Mississippi, or received the commutation for removal and subsistence; whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury is to cause to be paid to every such individual Cherokee now living east of the Mississippi the same amount, respectively, as provided for by the act of July 27, 1848, for the North Carolina Cherokees.

Mr. IVERSON. The committee was discharged from the consideration of that resolution. It is an adverse report.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) The Senate has to act on it. What motion does the Senator make?

Mr. IVERSON. I move to postpone it indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

CHEROKEE TREATIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 201) to execute the treaties of 1817 and 1819 with the Cherokees, by making provision for the reservations under the same.

It sets forth that whereas a reversion in fee simple, reserving to the widow her dower, was granted to the children of heads of families taking reservations under the eighth article of the treaty of 1817 with the Cherokees, and under the second article of the treaty of 1819 with the Cherokees, which reversion in fee simple and reservation of dower could not be affected by any act or omission of the tenants of the life estate in such reservations; and that many of these reservations are now held, under the laws of the States where they are situated, or otherwise, by titles or permission adverse to the just rights of the children and widows of such heads of families, the President of the United States is therefore required to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two suitable commissioners, whose duty it shall be to appraise the full and fair value of the reversion in fee simple of the children, and of the reserved dower of the widows, of the heads of families, where such reservations may now be held by adverse titles; but no appraisement is to be made of such reversions in fee simple, or of reserved rights of dower, which may have been heretofore paid for by the United States. The commissioners, after making the appraisement, are to report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, whose duty it shall be to pay the same—the children or widows, or legal representatives, first filing in the office of the Secretary full releases to the United States of their titles respectively.

Mr. HAMLIN. The committee have also been discharged from the consideration of that.

Mr. FOOT. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

M'ATEE AND EASTHAM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and J. N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Benjamin L. McAtee and J. N. Eastham the sum of $6,000, in full, for transporting extra mail matter over routes Nos. 3960 and 4169, between the 1st day of July, 1846, and the 30th day of June, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMEON STEDMAN.

The bill (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simeon Stedman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of War to instruct the proper disbursing officer to pay to Simeon Stedman, who served in Captain Christopher Ripley's company of the thirty-seventh infantry, during the war with Great Britain, in 1812, such sum or sums as may have accrued to him from the time of his last receiving payment for services till the end of the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD B. ALEXANDER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander.

It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Richard B. Alexander, late a major in the first Tennessee regiment, the sum of $250 in full of the value of one horse and one mule lost by him during the Mexican war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYLVESTER CHURCHILL.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the proper disbursing officer to allow and pay to General Sylvester Churchill, inspector general, the pay and allowances of inspector general, from the 29th of April, 1845, the date of his discharge, to the 21st of January, 1846, when he was reinstated in his office, according to the rates of pay then allowed, deducting from the pay and allowance any amounts which may have been paid to him for service performed between the time of his discharge and restoration to office.

Mr. HALE. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Perhaps the Senator from Mississippi can explain it.

Mr. DAVIS. Formerly, as now, there were two inspectors general. An act was passed to reduce them to one inspector general, and General Churchill was disbanded and remained out of service about nine months, when Congress repealed the law reducing the inspectors general to one, and restored the number to two, so far as I am advised, on account of the high consideration they had for General Churchill, and not anticipating that he was to be the particular inspector general who was to be retired. When disbanded, under a provision of law, he received three months' pay.

There are six months, then, for which he received nothing. When restored under the act of Congress, he took rank from the date which he had previously held, so as to leave no interval in his commission. It appears also, in the evidence before the committee, that during the period he was out of service the accounting officers frequently referred to him muster rolls—particularly the mustering in and mustering out of volunteers, in which he had been specially engaged in the Florida war—and that he was thus employed during a great portion of the time in the discharge of public duties, and of a character connected with the duties he had performed as an inspector general. This is to give him the pay for the time he was out of the service.

Mr. HALE. I think that is an unsound principle. If he had been illegally out or unjustly put out of the Army, I should not object; but I understand he was legally and fairly out.

Several SENATORS. Withdraw the objection.

Mr. HALE. If others do not object, I shall not; but I shall vote against the bill. I think it wrong.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE TURNBULL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 110) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Turnbull, which had been reported on adversely from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let it be passed over.

The bill was passed over.

The next was the bill (S. No. 229) for the relief of Jane Turnbull, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions.

The bill was passed over.

ROBERT W. CUSHMAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the United States Navy.

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Robert W. Cushman, acting purser of the Germantown, the flag-ship of the African squadron, the difference of pay between that of a purser and a captain's clerk, for such time as he so acted as purser.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN WAKEFIELD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield.

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Benjamin Wakefield the difference of pay between that of master's mate and boatswain, from the 1st of January, 1848, to the 19th of January, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON LAND OFFICES.

The bill (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon, for expenses incurred by them in the employment of clerks actually required for the transaction of the business of their respective offices, growing out of an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," approved September 27, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC BODY AND SAMUEL FLEMING.

The bill (H. R. No. 490) for the relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs that Isaac Body be allowed to enter at the land office at Springfield, Illinois, at the minimum price, at any time within one year after the date of this act, the southeast quarter of section nineteen, of township twenty-six north, of range twelve west; and that Samuel Fleming be allowed to enter, at the same land office, and on the same terms and conditions, the northwest quarter of section twenty, township twenty-six north, range twelve west; but this act is only to operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States.

Mr. TOOMBS. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. PUGH. These are parties who made locations without any fault. They are bona fide settlers. I think it is a short report. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appears that Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming, in or about the year 1842, settled, each for himself, upon certain quarter sections of land in the State of Illinois; that they have continued to reside, and have made considerable improvements thereon up to the present time; that the lands so settled upon by them were selected by the State of Illinois, under the act of Congress approved September 4, 1841; but for some reason such selections were not approved by the General Land Office, and were rejected; that such rejection, although notified to the State, were not notified to the local land office, and in consequence, Body and Fleming have been, and still are, unable to procure titles to their farms either from the United States or State of Illinois. They have often applied, both to the United States and State land offices to pay their moneys and procure titles; but each disclaiming the right to sell them, have failed to attain their object, and now ask Congress for relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOB STAFFORD.

The bill (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It instructs the Commissioner of Pensions to issue to Job Stafford, of New York, a bounty land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, the same to be held, located, or assigned, as if it had issued in the ordinary way, on application under existing laws.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. PUGH. I can explain that case to the Senate, as I reported the bill, probably sooner than the report can be read. This man was enlisted, and went out to fight the enemy, and received a wound from a cannon ball the next day after his enlistment, but they decided that it was not received in battle, although the man was disabled for life. I think it is much nearer to service than those fourteen-day gentlemen who never saw powder at all. I think it is a case for a bounty land warrant.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH M'BRIER.

The bill (H. R. No. 504) for the relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughrey, deceased, was next considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to issue land scrip in eighty-acre certificates, receivable in payment for public lands at any of the land offices in the United States, in favor of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughrey, deceased, or to her order, for an amount equal to six thousand six hundred and sixty-six acres and two thirds of an acre of land, which may be located on land subject to private entry, at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, or less.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the following report:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred the claims of Jane Thompson and Elizabeth McBrier, of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, make the following report:

That the Commonwealth of Virginia, on the 2d day of January, 1781, yielded to the Congress of the United States, for the benefit of said States, all right, title, and claim which the said Commonwealth had to the territory northwest of the river Ohio, subject to the conditions annexed to the said act of cession; which said act of cession, with the conditions annexed, the Congress of the United States accepted, among which conditions was the following: "That a quantity not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land, promised by the State of Virginia, should be allowed and granted to the then Colonel (now General) George Rogers Clark, and to the officers and soldiers of his regiment who marched with him when the posts of Kaskaskias and St. Vincent's were reduced, and to the officers and soldiers that have since incorporated into the said regiment; to be laid off in one tract, the length of which not to exceed double the breadth, in such place on the northwest side of the Ohio as a majority of the officers shall choose; and to be afterwards divided among the said officers and soldiers in due proportion, according to the laws of Virginia."

The committee further report that it appears, by the affidavits of credible witnesses, that Colonel Archibald Loughrey, father of the above-named claimants, (which affidavits are hereto annexed, and made part of this report,) some time during the summer of 1781 raised several companies of volunteers, of which he was chosen commander, for the purpose of joining the forces of General George Rogers Clark, in the expedition against the Mohawk and Seneca Indians, inhabiting the country now belonging to the State of Ohio; that in August, 1781, he marched with his men to Wheeling, Ohio, expecting to join the forces under the said General Clark; but when he and his men arrived at Wheeling, they found General Clark had left that place a few days before they arrived, but had left boats for Colonel Loughrey and his men to follow them; that they took the boats thus left for them; but somewhere near the mouth of the Big Miami river Colonel Loughrey and his men landed to cook and eat some food, and were attacked by a large body of Indians, and the said Loughrey and a number of his men were killed, and the remainder taken prisoners by the Indians, and never joined the forces under General Clark, as was intended.

Mr. WADE. I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANTON SHOLES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of Stanton Sholes.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to place Captain Stanton Sholes upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of January, 1853.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH WEBB.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Joseph Webb.

It directs that the monthly pay heretofore allowed by law to Joseph Webb, as an invalid pensioner, be increased to eight dollars per month; and that the Secretary of the Interior pay him at that rate from and after the 1st of January, 1852.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICAJAH BROOKS.

The bill (H. R. No. 455) for the relief of Micajah Brooks, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Micajah Brooks, of Georgia, on the pension roll, at the rate of four dollars per month, or forty-eight dollars per annum, and that he be paid at that rate from the 1st of January, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES FUGATE.

The bill (H. R. No. 462) granting an invalid pension to James Fugate, of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Fugate, of Missouri, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, instead of four dollars per month, the amount he now receives; the pension to commence on the 4th of March, 1853, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH CLOSE.

The bill (H. R. No. 512) for the relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Elijah Close, of Washington county, Tennessee, on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 3d of December, 1855, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONRAD SCHROEDER.

The bill (H. R. No. 514) for the relief of Conrad Schroeder, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Conrad Schroeder, who was a captain in the "Louisville Legion" during the war with Mexico, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension at the rate of $13 33 per month, commencing on the 22d of January, 1858, and continuing during life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER S. BEAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 515) granting an invalid pension to Alexander S. Bean, of Pennsylvania.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Alexander S. Bean, of Pennsylvania, on the invalid pension roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, and pay him at that rate from the 29th of May, 1856, during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WYATT GRIFFITH.

The bill (H. R. No. 523) for the relief of Wyatt Griffith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Wyatt Griffith, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 20th of June, 1854, and pay him at that rate during the term of his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN FELLOWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of Stephen Fellows.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Stephen Fellows on the invalid pension list, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the 20th of January, 1858, and continue during life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. M. JONES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. M. Jones.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mary A. M. Jones, widow of Brevet Major General Roger Jones, deceased, late Adjutant General of the Army, upon the roll of pensioners, and pay her a pension at the rate of one half the pay, monthly, to which her late husband was entitled at the time of his death; the pension to commence on the 15th of July, 1852, and continue during her natural life or widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY E. READ.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill (H. R. No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

It provides that the half pension heretofore allowed to Henry E. Read, of Kentucky, a non-commissioned officer in the Mexican war, be raised to thirteen dollars a month, to commence March 3, 1848, and continue for and during his natural life.

Mr. CLAY. I object to that bill.

Mr. PUGH. I hope the Senator from Alabama will hear the report in that case, and he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CLAY. I object to paying these arrears of pensions.

Mr. PUGH. If you will read the report, you will find that this is an exceptional case.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think there are any exceptional cases; but I will hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. JEWETT, in the House of Representatives, February 3, 1858:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Sergeant Henry E. Read, of Kentucky, having had the same under consideration, unanimously report:

That Sergeant Read entered the Army intended for the invasion of Mexico, in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the spring of 1847; that he was in every battle fought by the American arms from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, and until he fell desperately wounded in the abdomen, in the right shoulder and right arm, at the storming of Chapultepec; that his conduct in every engagement was that of a truly courageous citizen soldier, until his fall at the storming of Chapultepec, with the colors of his regiment in his hands, on the 13th September, 1847. Your committee would further report that Sergeant Read's profession or calling before he entered the Army was that of a blacksmith; and that he has been compelled, in consequence of the wounds received in the defense of his country, to abandon his trade, and that he is wholly unable to perform manual labor, and is in that condition at this time. Your committee beg leave further to report that Sergeant Read was honorably discharged from the service in the city of Mexico, while in the hospital, where he lingered for seven months, and had ultimately to find his way home as best he could.

Mr. CLAY. What does the bill give?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Thirteen dollars a month. I know this man, and I know how he was shot. He was shot all to pieces.

Mr. CLAY. I will let it go.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL A. DAVENPORT.

The bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and pay him a pension, at that rate, from the 5th of March, 1858, during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRIGHT FORE.

The bill (H. R. No. 522) for the relief of Wright Fore was the next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Wright Fore on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 9th of November, 1852, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line five, to strike out "eight dollars," and insert "six dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOOMBS. Let the report be read

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying papers of Wright Fore, of the State of Mississippi, report:

That the petitioner claims to have enlisted as a private in the mounted company of Captain David Smith, in Colonel Coffee's brigade of Tennessee troops, in the month of October, 1813. That in the battle of Talladega, on the 9th day of November, 1813, he was wounded in the left shoulder by a rifle ball fired from the camp of the enemy, which so disabled him as to render him unfit for duty; he was considered dangerously wounded, and left at Fort Strother; was carried from there to the hospital at Huntsville, Alabama, where he remained until February following, when he was sent for by his friends and taken home.

John Moore, Robert Haygood, and John Rutherford, who were in the same service and company with the petitioner, testify fully to his having been wounded in the service.

The Third Auditor of the Treasury, who has the custody of the rolls of the company to which the petitioner belonged, states that the name of Wright Fore appears on said rolls from the 24th of September, 1813, to the 16th of May, 1814. On said roll he is noted as "wounded 9th November, 1813."

John Shelby and Boyd McNairy, who sign themselves M. D., swear, on the 1st of December, 1817, that he is disabled one half by reason of said wound.

J. J. Thornton and H. H. Parker, who are certified to be reputable and credible physicians, swear, on the 11th of July, 1852, that said Wright Fore is disabled three fourths. All the witnesses are certified to be men of veracity and truth. The committee are unanimous in the opinion that this is a meritorious case, and demands relief at the hands of Congress. They therefore report a bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. If these allegations be true, he would have got the pension long ago at the Pension Office. I object to the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I want to say to my friend from Georgia that I know this man perfectly well, and have known him twenty years. I do not know why he does not get a pension at the Pension Office; but he ought to have one.

Mr. TOOMBS. If the facts stated in the report be true, he would. It does not come under the law, or the case would not be here; therefore I take the statement not to be true.

The bill was passed over.

FRANCIS CARVER.

The next in order was the bill (H. R. No. 524) for the relief of Francis Carver.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Francis Carver on the invalid pension roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, and to pay him at that rate from the 18th December, 1857, and continue during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the memorial and papers of Francis Carver, report:

That it appears, from papers submitted, that said Francis Carver, has been, for a period of seventeen years, a soldier in the Army of the United States, having served through the war with Mexico. After that war he was ordered to the frontiers of Texas, where for eight or nine months he was in active service, exposed to the damps and cold of winter, without tent or covering. During that service he contracted the disease with which he now suffers.

The discharge of the petitioner is filed with his papers. Said discharge is signed by C. A. May, brevet colonel, and states that Francis Carver is discharged for ordinary disability.

The certificate of J. A. Thompson, acting surgeon of the military asylum at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, states that the petitioner is laboring under a disease called St. Vitus's dance; that he is wholly disabled, &c. In view of these facts your committee think this a case of merit, and report a bill for his relief.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that.

The bill was passed over.

ROBINSON GAMMON.

The bill (H. R. No. 525) for the relief of Robinson Gammon was next announced.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Robinson Gammon, of Roxbury, Oxford county, Maine, upon the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 3d of December, 1856, during his life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and papers of Robinson Gammon, submit the following report:

That his case was before the Committee on Invalid Pensions at the first session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, and was favorably acted on, as will be seen by the following report, which your committee will adopt:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Robinson Gammon for a pension, ask leave to report:

"That said Gammon, on or about the 10th day of September, A. D. 1814, was called out on an alarm to serve in the war declared by the United States against Great Britain on the 18th day of June, 1812; that at the time of aid alarm the petitioner lived in Buckfield, in the State of Maine; that he marched from Buckfield to Portland, in said State, in a company commanded by Captain Chase; that after his arrival at Portland, he was drafted into Captain James Harlow's company of Colonel Ryerden's regiment of Massachusetts militia, and remained in service forty days, and was honorably discharged therefrom; that said march from Buckfield was a forced march, in which he contracted a disease in his feet and legs, which has continued from that time up to the present. Said disease has continued to increase, until the said petitioner is now a cripple, without any hope of recovery.

"From the proof it further appears that the petitioner is a poor man, with no visible means of support. The foregoing facts are proved to our satisfaction by the evidence accompanying the petition. There is also a petition signed by nearly all the legal voters in the town where the petitioner resides, in aid of his said petition.

"For the foregoing reasons the committee believe the said Robinson Gammon justly entitled to the relief prayed for, and report the accompanying bill, and recommend that the same pass.

"The committee report a bill granting relief, to commence on the 3d day of December, 1856."

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that.

The bill was passed over.

FREDERICK SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of Frederick Smith.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Frederick Smith on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of four dollars per month, and to pay him at that rate from the 1st of February, 1858, during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the papers of Frederick Smith, of Pennsylvania, reported:

That they have examined the same, and that the petitioner alleges that he enlisted into the service of the United States as a private in the company of Captain W. H. Irwin, of the eleventh infantry, in the month of May, 1846; that on the 11th day of June, 1847, he was wounded at the National Bridge, in Mexico, by a slug, which entered the left side of his head, and became "imbedded between the external and internal plates of the cranium, near the posterior margin of the left parietal bone;" said ball or slug was extracted on the 5th of May, 1856.

John J. Marks, who signs himself M. D., swears to the character of the wound, and to the fact of his having performed the operation by which the ball was extracted.

Captain William H. Irwin, under whom he served, swears that Smith was wounded while in the line of his duty.

The committee report a bill granting relief, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the 1st February, 1858.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to make this remark about all these claims: if they were entitled to a pension, they could get it without appealing to Congress; but they cannot make the proof that would be required in any court of justice to establish their claim, and that is required at the Pension Office; and, to supply the deficiencies of proof, they appeal to Congress.

The bill was passed over.

DAVID WATSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 535) for the relief of David Watson.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of David Watson, of Georgia, upon the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of four dollars per month, to commence on the 15th of February, 1858, and continue during his natural life.

Mr. HAMLIN. I object to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

WILLIAM HEINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition.

It provides that there be paid to William Heine, artist of the late Japan expedition under Commodore Perry, compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum during the time he was actually employed in that service; but the amount already paid him as master's mate on that expedition is to be deducted therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY ORNDORF.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) for the relief of Henry Orndorf, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the account of the Department with Henry Orndorf, for mail service on route No. 9157, from Zanesville to Columbus, Ohio, and to allow him full pay for the service, the same as if his bid had been for service six times a week, as required by the advertisement, instead of daily service.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object to that.

Mr. WILSON. And I object.

Mr. PUGH. It is merely to correct a mistake.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw my objection, if that is all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us hear the report read.

Mr. PUGH. The proposition was for a mail six times a week; and the party, under a mistake, bid for a daily mail, which included Sunday, and these fines are for that Sunday, when the Department really had no service for him to perform.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want to hear the report read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Henry Orndorf, of Ohio, report: That it appears from the papers filed in this case that George Manville contracted to carry the United States mail from Zanesville to Columbus, Ohio, (being route No. 9157,) daily, from July 1, 1856, to June 30, 1860. The mail was carried six times a week, and a deduction was made by the Department for deficiency of service, the Department insisting that the word daily, in the contract, required service seven days each week. The contractor, on the other hand, alleged that Sunday service was not wanted, and that his intention, when he made his bid, was for service six times a week. The Department did not allege that Sunday service was wanted on the route, but as the contract calls for daily service, the Department had no alternative but to make the proportional deduction from the pay.

In May, 1857, George Manville transferred his contract to Henry Orndorf, to take effect from April 1, 1857.

The Department continued to deduct $53 30 per quarter from the pay for the failure of the Sunday trip, the whole pay as per contract being $1,495 a year. Mr. Orndorf remonstrated with the Department. He asserted that it was not the intention, when the bid was made, to run more than six times a week, and that the postmasters on the route would neither receive or deliver the mail on Sunday.

Mr. Orndorf, failing to convince the Post Office Department, applies to Congress, and the matter has been carefully examined by your committee.

It appears from the papers before the committee that the advertisement issued by the Department was for mail service upon route 9157 three times a week and six times a week, and that the bidder used the term daily, as per the advertisement of the Department. This shows, to the satisfaction of your committee, that the bidder supposed he was bidding for daily service during the business portion of the week. To corroborate this view of the case, there are among the papers the affidavits of those conversant with the facts, that such was the understanding of the bidder when his bid was made out.

It is proper to add that it appears from the papers in the case that it had not been customary to have Sunday service on the route, and that neither the interests of the Department nor the public required it.

Your committee, therefore, come to the conclusion that Henry Orndorf is entitled to full pay, and they have accordingly reported a joint resolution to that effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am satisfied.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DEARMIT.

The bill (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of John Dearmit was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Postmaster General to pay to John Dearmit the sum of $295, in addition to the amount already paid him by the Government, under his contract for carrying the mail upon route No. 1601, from July 1, 1844, for four years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STUCKEY AND ROGERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 493) for the relief of Stuckey & Rogers.

It instructs the Postmaster General to pay to Stuckey & Rogers, mail contractors on route No. 6078 from Winstboro' to Pinckneyville, in South Carolina, at the rate of $333 per annum, for the transportation of the mails on that route; deducting therefrom whatever payments may have been made, at the rate of $138 per annum, by the Post Office Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY KING.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 496) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry King, deceased.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representative of Henry King the sum of $1,817 36, it being for his services in the third Maryland regiment, and in the commissary department, during the revolutionary war.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that.

The bill was passed over.

GEORGE H. HOWELL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 510) for the relief of George H. Howell.

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Dr. George H. Howell, an assistant surgeon in the Navy of the United States, the increased pay attaching to his increased rank as assistant surgeon, from the commencement of his increased rank to the time of the actual issue of his commission from the Navy Department.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that bill. He wants pay before he gets his office.

The bill was passed over.

ROSSELL MINARD.

The bill (H. R. No. 356) for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue to Roswell Minard, the father of Theodore Minard, deceased, a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, in lieu of bounty land warrant No. 34,754, heretofore issued to Theodore Minard, deceased, and when so issued it shall be in all respects of the same effect as the warrant No. 34,754 would have been had it been issued to Roswell Minard; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office is to be satisfied that Roswell Minard is the father of Theodore Minard, deceased; that Theodore Minard died without leaving a wife or lawful children; and that Theodore Minard never assigned or transferred the bounty land warrant. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is to be authorized to institute legal proceedings, in such manner as he may deem proper, to vacate the patent issued upon the last mentioned bounty land warrant to recover the land embraced in that patent, for the benefit of the United States, or for such other relief as he may deem suited to the case, and to cause the person or persons guilty of forging the assignment of the bounty land warrant, and all persons criminally connected with the forgery, or of uttering or passing the forged assignment, to be prosecuted for such offense; the lawful expenses of which legal proceedings and prosecutions are to be paid for by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PUGH. That appears to have general provisions in it: I should like to hear the report.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is no general provision in the bill. It is the case of a man whose warrant has been located by the Land Office on a forged transfer. They tell him that they cannot give him a right to his land, because it has been divested by a forgery. The committee say, the Government must retrace its own wrong, and give him his land, and sue the man who has possession of it under the forged transfer.

Mr. STUART. I know we cannot debate this question; but there is a part of this case which I do not like at all. A man that is in possession, an honest purchaser of the land under a forged assignment with which he has had no connection, should not lose the land.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator is mistaken. This bill simply provides that Government shall give the heirs of this soldier his bounty land. The answer made at the Land Office is, we have already given his bounty land to somebody else, on a forged assignment of the warrant.

Mr. STUART. The first part of the bill I am for; but it goes on further to provide that the Government shall out the man in possession under the forged assignment. That I do not think ought to prevail.

Mr. BENJAMIN. As a matter of course, if the party in possession is innocent he will retain his land.

Mr. PUGH. I would rather the second section of the bill were stricken out.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have no objection to its being stricken out.

Mr. PUGH. That will give the party all he claims. The prosecution will cost more than twice the value of the land. I move to strike out the second section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER—MRS. JONES.

Mr. TOOMBS. While I was out, a bill was passed granting a pension to the widow of General Roger Jones, on a bad principle. I move to reconsider it; and I should like to hear from the committee some reason for it. I ask that the motion to reconsider be agreed to at once.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to debate the motion to reconsider; and I suppose it will go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) The Chair thinks that, under the general order, all bills that lead to debate must go over to-day.

Mr. TOOMBS. After a bill has been passed, and the question is on reconsidering?

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose to debate that.

Mr. TOOMBS. The motion?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOOMBS. That is not under the rule. Whenever the passage of a bill is objected to, or gives rise to debate, it is to pass over; but here a bill was passed sub silentio. It escaped notice. I want to put it where it was before its passage. This has brought debate on its passage.

Mr. HAMLIN. I beg the Senator's pardon. It did not bring any debate on its passage; but he proposes now to reconsider it, and I notify him that I want to debate that proposition.

Mr. TOOMBS. You cannot pass any more pensions, until that is reconsidered, to-day. I give you notice of that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

Mr. TOOMBS. I want it understood that I object to all bills for pensions to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider, in the case of the bill for the relief of Mrs. Jones, will be entered.

Mr. HAMLIN subsequently said: I interposed an objection to a motion which was made by the Senator from Georgia, a few moments since. I have since made such examination as satisfies my own mind on the claim, and I have no objection to taking the question. It was the motion to reconsider the bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. M. Jones.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question occurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let the bill remain now as if it was objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, it lies over.

JOHN M'DONOUGH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceed to consider the bill (H. R. No. 543) for the relief of the legal representatives of John McDonough, deceased, late of Louisiana.

It provides that the claim numbered thirty-nine in the report of the register and receiver of the land office at New Orleans, Louisiana, made on the 22d of November, 1837, in the name of John McDonough, to a tract of about one hundred and seventy-seven superficial arpents of land, be confirmed; and that a patent issue, as in ordinary cases, to the legal representatives of McDonough; but this confirmation is only to be construed as a relinquishment of all right and title of the United States, and is not to prejudice the legal claim of any other party, should such exist.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEAN BAPTISTE DEVIDRINE.

The bill (H. R. No. 451) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Devitrine, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Devitrine, late of Louisiana, be confirmed in their claim to that tract or parcel of land known on the public surveys of the southwestern land district of that State as lot forty-five, in township four south, range three east, and lot seventy-three, in township four south, range four east, containing about four hundred arpents, or three hundred and fifty acres, of land, and that a patent issue therefor, as in other cases; but this act is only to be construed as a relinquishment of whatever title may be now vested in the United States, and is in nowise to interfere with any valid adverse claim of other or third parties, should such there be.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERIAH WRIGHT.

The next bill in order was the bill (H. R. No. 460) granting an invalid pension to Beriah Wright, of New York.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Beriah Wright, of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States and pay to him a pension, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the 16th of February, 1858, during his natural life.

Mr. CLAY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Beriah Wright, of the State of New York, report:

That he was in service in the United States Army as a corporal, and he testifies himself, very clearly, that owing to exposure for want of tents and clothing, he was attacked with rheumatism so severely, that Major Bayly, commanding the regiment, allowed him to procure a substitute and return to his home, some four or five weeks before the expiration of his term of service; which fact is shown by the major's affidavit. The term of service commenced May 19, 1813, and Corporal Wright left in the winter of 1813-14 to go home. Dr. Kenrick testifies that Wright left home in good health, robust and vigorous, and returned for medical advice; his complaint was rheumatism; and that it has disabled him, the said Wright, one half or three quarters. David Palmer, another physician, testifies that said Wright is disabled from same cause one half. These gentlemen are certified by justices of the peace as physicians of good repute. Amos W. Brown, a lieutenant in the thirty-first United States infantry, the regiment in which Wright served, swears to the disability of Wright having been incurred in the service of the United States, and in the line of his duty. The Hon. Francis E. Spinner, a member of this House, files a letter in which he refers to the extreme poverty of the petitioner; he is personally acquainted with Wright, and believes that his case is truly a meritorious one. Your committee are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to a pension of four dollars per month, from the 16th day of February, 1858. They therefore report a bill.

Mr. CLAY. There is no explanation there why he does not apply at the Pension Office, or why they will not give him a pension.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is that a pension?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to all pensions.

The bill was passed over.

LAND ENTRIES IN LOUISIANA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 327) to affirm certain entries of land in the State of Louisiana.

It provides that the following described entries of land made by the persons hereinafter named, in the southwestern land district of Louisiana, be affirmed and held to be valid: Lots one and two, of section five, township fifteen south, range eleven east, containing one hundred and fifty-four and forty hundredths acres, entered by John Dawson; lots two, three, four, and five, section six, township fifteen, range eleven east, containing one hundred and fifty-five and seventy-one hundredths acres, entered by John D. Alston, and fractional southwest quarter of section thirty-two and fractional section thirty-one, township fourteen south, range eleven east, containing sixty-eight and four hundredths acres, entered by Joseph T. Hawkins.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE FALLS BRIDGE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 414) to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a sum of money advanced towards the construction of the Little Falls bridge.

It provides that a sum be appropriated to repay the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, all moneys heretofore advanced by the corporation for and towards the construction of the bridge over the Potomac, at the point known as the Little Falls. And the corporation of Georgetown, by accepting the provisions of this act, is to waive and surrender all further claim or demand on the Government of the United States, founded on any advancement of money or other thing towards the object therein specified to any other purpose whatsoever.

Mr. IVERSON. That bill seems to appropriate nothing. The Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who reported the bill is not in his seat. It had better be passed over informally.

Mr. HAMLIN. We had the sum in our committee.

Mr. IVERSON. We had better let it pass over informally.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

The bill was passed over.

Mr. BROWN subsequently said: A few moments ago, while I happened to be out of my seat, a little bill for refunding to Georgetown certain moneys paid by her was laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take it to be the sense of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BROWN. The report shows that the amount is $4,600. The blank can be filled with that sum. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLK. I call for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the memorial of the Mayor of Georgetown, praying to be reimbursed the sum of $5,000, advanced by the corporation of Georgetown towards the construction of the bridge over the Potomac, at the Little Falls, have, according to order, had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

In the month of March, 1853, the sum of $30,000 was appropriated by Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac river, at a point known as the Little Falls, and the work was placed in process of construction under the direction of George Thom, captain in corps of topographical engineers.

In the fall of 1853, when the work had been prosecuted near to completion, the appropriation was found to be exhausted—the sum of $30,000 having been expended—and it became necessary to suspend operations until other funds could be procured applicable to the object.

It was supposed that several months must pass before an additional appropriation could be expected from Congress; and the abandonment of the work, in an unfinished condition, at the approach of winter, must expose it to serious injury, whilst its suspension would involve a necessity for a sale of the stock on hand, by which the Government would suffer a heavy loss. To avoid these evils, the officer in charge, on consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, applied to the corporate authorities of Georgetown to advance a sum of $5,000, which would enable him to continue his operations, and carry forward the bridge to a condition in which it might be used for travel during the then following winter. This proposition was acceded to, and, by several acts of the corporation, the sum of $5,800 was placed to the credit and subject to the order of Captain Thom, to be expended in the construction of the Little Falls bridge, his assurance being given, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, that the amount should be reimbursed to the corporation of Georgetown when the further appropriation should be made by Congress. It also appears that some lien on the stock on hand was executed in favor of the corporation of Georgetown, as a security for the reimbursement of the amount advanced; but it is believed that nothing was realized by the corporation from this lien, the entire stock having been applied to the uses of the Government.

In August, 1854, Congress appropriated a further sum of $15,000 for completing the bridge; but a serious accident had befallen it, which created a necessity for the appropriation of a large sum, and the corporation of Georgetown postponed its claim for immediate payment, unwilling to delay the completion of the work; accordingly, the sum of $13,800, part of the appropriation of $15,000, was applied towards the completion of the bridge, leaving a balance of $1,200, which was applied towards the payment of the sum of $5,800, leaving the sum of $4,600 due to the corporation of Georgetown; for the payment of which a bill is herewith reported.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM TURVIN.

The bill (H. R. C. C. No. 81) for the relief of the heirs of William Turvin, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs that the heirs of William Turvin, deceased, be authorized to locate, free of cost, nine hundred and sixty arpents of land, or as near thereto as the same can be done, not exceeding that quantity, according to the legal subdivisions, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry at private sale, at $1 25 per acre; which lands, when so located, shall be in full for the claim of their father to a tract of land lying on the east side of the Mobile river and west of the Bayou Pascual, under a grant from the Spanish Government, which was recommended for confirmation on the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephens.

Mr. PUGH. I do not understand that. Has the Court of Claims got to be giving judgment to be paid in bounty land warrants? It seems to be a judgment for a certain number of acres of land.

Mr. POLK. I will state to the Senator from Ohio the facts in the case. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. The committee were somewhat doubtful whether they ought not to report it back to the Senate, and ask to be discharged, and have it sent to the Committee on Private Land Claims; but they considered that the case was a very plain one, and that if that course was taken, perhaps it might not come before the Senate at this session, and they had better report in favor of it; which they did.

Mr. STUART. Do I understand that this case was adjudicated by the Court of Claims?

Mr. IVERSON. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The case must go over if it leads to debate.

Mr. IVERSON. I wish only to make an explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very brief explanations are usually received.

Mr. IVERSON. The case went to the Court of Claims, on an original petition. It was decided by the court in favor of the petitioners, and the decision sent to the House of Representatives.

It was referred to the Committee of Claims, of that body, at this session. That committee reported the bill with a recommendation that it should pass, accompanied by a report. The bill passed the House of Representatives, came here, was referred to our Committee on Claims, and reported upon favorably.

Mr. STUART. The difficulty I have, is that the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction whatever with specific performances of land titles. That is a power which we cannot recognize in that court.

Mr. POLK. The bill has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. STUART. I am aware of that. I do not mean to oppose the bill; but I wish now to say that I do not, and I trust the Senate will not, recognize any such jurisdiction as that in the Court of Claims.

Mr. IVERSON. The bill simply authorizes these parties to have the land.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD TARVIN.

The bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of Richard Farrin, alias Richard Tarvin, who was a friendly Creek Indian in the war of 1813 and 1814, the sum of $600, for losses sustained by him during that war.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the reading of the report, and it was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Neal Smith, administrator of Richard Tarvin, deceased, praying indemnity for property destroyed in the Creek war of 1813-14, ask leave to report:

That Richard Tarvin, alias Richard Farrin, was a friendly Creek Indian in the war between the United States and his tribe in 1813-14, and sustained loss by the depredations of the hostiles to the extent of $600, as reported by General D. B. Mitchell, the agent of the Federal Government; that, by the treaty negotiated with the said Creek tribe of Indians, at the close of said war, the United States guaranteed indemnity to those Indians who had remained friendly to our cause, for whatever property they had lost during the war by the common enemy. Claims were presented against the Government for such losses, on the part of the friendly Creeks, amounting, in the aggregate, to $195,417 90, all of which has been provided for and paid by Congress. In addition to the claims embraced in the above amount, a supplemental abstract of claims was presented by General Mitchell in favor of six other friendly Creek Indians, amounting, altogether, to $9,770. Among these latter claimants is found the name of Richard Farrin, alias Richard Tarvin; and his damages were assessed at the sum of $600. Of the half dozen claimants included in the said supplemental abstract of General Mitchell, the sum of $5,925 was paid to Peter Randall, in an act passed by the Thirty-third Congress. The claims of Arthur Sigeonond for $1,420, and of John Simmanee for $1,183, were provided for in the Indian appropriation bill of last Congress.

Your committee can see no good reason why the claim of the petitioner, Richard Tarvin, alias Richard Farrin, through his legal representatives, should not also be liquidated; and therefore they report a bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that. This is the third time that class of claims has been paid. The Creek treaty was on the very basis of that bill by which we paid them.

Mr. IVERSON. The objection of my colleague passes the bill over, of course; but he is wholly mistaken. This claim has never been settled.

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not say the individual claim, but the class of claims.

Mr. IVERSON. There were six cases that were exceptional cases, and this is the sixth. All the rest have been paid.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have no doubt they will all want to be paid over again.

Mr. SEBASTIAN subsequently said: A bill for Richard Tarvin's relief was passed over this morning, on the objection of the Senator from Georgia. I have since called his attention to the facts, and he is satisfied with my explanation.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAUDOUIN AND ROBERTS.

The bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts, was announced as the next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $2,000 to A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts, in full compensation for the damages sustained by them, arising from the sinking of a flatboat of ice, at New Orleans, by a steamboat in the service of the United States.

Mr. TOOMBS. I call for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom were referred the petition and proofs of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts, of New Orleans, was referred, report:

That the petitioners have, by proper proof, satisfied your committee that they were, on the 21st day of March, 1846, owners of a flatboat of ice, containing two hundred and twenty tons, which boat, loaded with ice, had on that day been towed down to the landing in the first municipality in the city of New Orleans, set apart to them by the wharf-ger; that just before she was properly fastened to the wharf, and whilst their boat was tied to another boat, the name of which is not given in the proof, but declared by the petitioners to be the schooner Commerce, Captain Pierce, she was run into by the steamer Colonel Harney, then in the service of the United States, and commanded by the officers of the Government. The proof shows that the Colonel Harney was under a heavy pressure of steam, and that the act was apparently the result of great carelessness or wantonly mischievous, whereby the petitioners lost the boat, which was sunk, and the ice, valued at $2,000; the proof is that there were two hundred and twenty tons; and that it was worth ten dollars per ton.

Suit was brought in the United States district court, and the evidence on file which makes this case was taken contradictorily with the United States district attorney, and would between individuals have given the plaintiffs a judgment for $2,000, but the case was dismissed upon an exception—which was that the Government could not be sued—whereupon the parties appealed to Congress for redress; and, on the 15th of December, 1846, this case was referred to the Committee of Claims, and referred to the same committee again on the 17th of December, A. D. 1847; that on the 30th of March, 1848, a bill was reported to this House for $2,000, accompanied by a report from Mr. Rockwell, which report and bill is herewith submitted; that the report and bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and recommended by the committee to the House for its passage, but was not reached. The papers were again referred to the Committee of Claims on the 23d day of January, 1850, and on the 13th day of February following a report was made from this committee by Mr. Nelson, with a bill for the relief of the parties, which report and bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and reported back with a recommendation that it do pass the House; that the report of the committee was not finally acted on. The bill went to the Speaker's table, and was not reached. In view of all these facts, the committee report back all the papers, with a bill for $2,000 for the relief of the petitioner.

Mr. J. A. Rockwell, from the Committee of Claims, made the following report:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the petition of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts, of the city of New Orleans, report as follows:

The petitioners represent, and prove to the satisfaction of the committee, that on the 21st March, 1846, a flatboat, belonging to them, loaded with ice, while lying at the wharf at the city of New Orleans, in proper place, was struck by the steamer Colonel Harney, which was coming up the river under full steam; that, by the force of the collision, the bottom and side of the flatboat were so broken and disjointed that it commenced filling with water so rapidly that the cargo could not be saved, and the boat and cargo soon sunk to the bottom of the river. The steamer was in the service of the United States at the time, and under command of an officer of the United States; and the act was one of manifest negligence. Under the state of facts existing in this case, as between individuals, there could be no doubt of the right of the party to claim the amount of damages sustained; and the obligation of the Government is the same. The steamer was libeled in the United States court at New Orleans by the petitioners, and most of the testimony was taken in the presence of the United States district attorney, who cross-examined the witnesses. The libel was dismissed on the ground that the Government could not be sued. The proof is, that the loss sustained by the petitioners was $2,000; and for this sum the committee report a bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that bill. It involves a very important principle.

The bill was passed over.

JAMES RUMPH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 476) for the relief of James Rumph.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Rumph the sum of $760, in full compensation for medical aid rendered to soldiers in the service of the United States in 1837.

Mr. SLIDELL. I desire to hear the report in that case.

Mr. IVERSON. I will state the facts. During the Creek war of 1836-7 there was a severe battle between the troops of Alabama, under General Wellborn, and the hostile Creek Indians, on the banks of the Pedee river in that State, in which many were killed and wounded on both sides. There was a large number of wounded troops. There was no medical attendant at all. They had to send for Doctor Rumph a distance of sixty miles, and he came and attended them for several weeks, and this is his account for that service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FERDINAND O. MILLER.

The bill (H. R. No. 480) for the relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and settle the account of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller, and allow him the pay of an assistant surgeon in the Army, from the 6th of July, 1846, to the 28th of February, 1847, for his services as surgeon and assistant surgeon during the late war with Mexico, deducting therefrom the amount paid him as a private soldier during the same time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DINAH MINIS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 481) for the relief of Dinah Minis.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dinah Minis, or her legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums due on loan office certificates—No. 93, for $37 27½; No. 94, for $74 55½; and No. 104, for $81 66; all dated August 19, 1791, and signed by Richard Wyly, commissioner of loans—on the surrender of the original certificates at the Treasury Department.

Mr. PUGH. Let us hear the report in that case.

The Secretary proceeded and read part of the report.

Mr. PUGH. I do not know that it is necessary to read the report. I object to the consideration of the bill. It appears to be a very old claim.

The bill was passed over.

LOOMIS L. LANGDON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 570) for the relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the account of Second Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon, first artillery, United States Army, with $1,176 66, being the amount stolen from his possession at Fort Brown, on the night of the 23d of October, 1857.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID M'CLURE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 571) for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased, the sum of $107 64, it being the amount of interest collected from McClure, in his lifetime, on a judgment in favor of the United States Government, which, it was afterwards ascertained, he did not properly owe, and the amount of which judgment has been previously refunded to him by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT A. DAVIDGE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 575) for the relief of Robert A. Davidge.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Robert A. Davidge the sum of $118 90 in full for his services as a temporary clerk in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury from March 26 to April 30, 1857.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

GEORGE MAYO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 290) for the relief of the legal representatives of George Mayo, deceased.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of George Mayo, deceased, late a clerk in the General Post Office Department, the sum of $400, in consideration in full of services performed by him, during six months, as an extra clerk in that Department, with the sanction and under the direction of one of the Assistant Postmasters General.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move its indefinite postponement. There is an adverse report in that case.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM HUTCHENSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchenson.

It instructs the Secretary of War to pay to William Hutchenson the sum of $150, in full settlement of his claim for compensation for services as a spy during the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make the same motion in that case. There is an adverse report. The motion was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

BENJAMIN WARD.

The bill (S. No. 421) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Benjamin Ward, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Benjamin Ward, of Maine, a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, in consideration of his detention as a prisoner in the Dartmoor prison, during a portion of the last war with Great Britain.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any report in that case? Why is the warrant to be given?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Several bills of this kind have passed for Dartmoor prisoners.

Mr. FOSTER. It stands on the same ground as a bill which passed the Senate at the last session, but was lost in the House of Representatives, and again passed the Senate at this session, for three individuals. It was a practice which I found was recognized in the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN R. BARTLETT.

The next bill on the Calendar, was the bill (S. No. 422) for the relief of John R. Bartlett.

It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, in the settlement of the accounts of John R. Bartlett, late commissioner on the Mexican boundary, to allow and credit him with the several items of his accounts for moneys paid by him in the discharge of his duties as commissioner, which have been heretofore rendered to the Department, with the proper vouchers, and disallowed, not exceeding in all the sum of $4,724 39; and that the balance which shall be found due to him after the allowance of those items, if any, be paid.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. SIMMONS. The report is pretty long, and I think I can state the facts briefly. These are the accounts of Mr. Bartlett, who was commissioned to run the Mexican boundary line. Some of the vouchers were not sworn to under circumstances like these: he was away off in an Indian country; and sometimes he appointed a secretary, for instance, who happened to be a doctor, as surgeon, and allowed him a certain additional sum for serving as surgeon to the corps. He divided the corps into two. One portion went to the Pacific, and the other started from the Rio Grande. The accounts appear to be all fair, and the sums due have been paid, and the vouchers were proper, but some of them were not sworn to. He had no justice of the peace before whom they could be sworn to in the Indian country. I know the money has all been paid out by him; and it is said by the Auditor to have been in conformity with the allowances made to the commission that ran the northeastern boundary.

Mr. TOOMBS. I know something of these accounts of Mr. Bartlett, and they were very unsatisfactory to the Government at the time. I object to the bill, until we can look into it further. The bill was passed over.

LEWIS W. BROADWELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 572) for the relief of Lewis W. Broadwell was considered, as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lewis W. Broadwell the sum of $12,938, in full compensation for transporting the United States mails, in steamboats, from Vicksburg, Mississippi, to Grand Lake, Arkansas, from the 4th of September, 1854, to the 17th of April, 1857, at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to hear the report.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I can in a word state the facts. This mail service was contracted for under the head of the Department at $100 a week with another contractor. After running ten or twelve weeks, he gave it up, being unable to do the service for the price. The contract had been made by the local postmasters, under the instructions of the Postmaster General. When the contractor gave it up, the price being limited to $100 a month, the mail was stopped, and the local postmasters induced Mr. Broadwell to carry the mail on the promise that they would endeavor to get him a reasonable compensation, to be approved by the Postmaster General. He carried the mail for about two years, until the Postmaster General readvertised and relet the route. When that had been done, the price was found to be $10,000 a year. The Postmaster General was applied to for the purpose of fixing, according to the subsequent contract, what was a reasonable rate to Mr. Broadwell, and he has fixed the proper rate at the sum which the committee have reported. The mail carried by him was not in conformity with a contract, but it was carried without a contract on the promise of a fair compensation, the previous contractor having abandoned the service.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. YULEE. I will state in addition, that not being fully satisfied myself in reference to the case, I had an interview with the Representative in the House for that district, who communicated to me the fact, which, at my request, he placed in writing among the papers, that the Postmaster General (Mr. Campbell) had agreed with him to adopt the service, and to pay for it, but that agreement was not carried into effect in consequence of some misunderstanding on another subject.

Mr. POLK. I believe a part of this claim is for money actually paid by this party for the transportation of the mail from the boat to the post office.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN FERGUSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 419) for the relief of John Ferguson and others.

Mr. WILSON. I object to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

JOHN LEE.

The bill (H. R. No. 461) granting an invalid pension to John Lee, of the State of Maine, was next announced.

It provides that the name of John Lee be placed upon the pension list of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 22d of December, 1857, and to continue during life.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John Lee for a pension, ask leave to report:

That said Lee, under the name of John Richards, a private, enlisted into the service for the war on the 3d of February, 1813, in the ninth regiment of United States Infantry, and has been traced on the rolls of his company up to the 15th of May, 1815. Said Lee fought in five pitched battles: Battle of Williamsburg, in said regiment, in General Covington's brigade; at Fort Erie; at Chippewa, Queenstown, and Fort George; at Bridgewater, or Lundy's Lane; the siege of Fort Erie, which lasted fifty or sixty days; and was in the fight when Fort Erie was blown up, and at the sortie near said fort when the enemy's batteries were taken and blown up by the American forces. It further appears that in said ninth regiment, at said battle of Lundy's Lane, that all of said Lee's company, with the exception of himself and one other private, were either killed, wounded, or left the field before the termination of said battle. From the proof it further appears that at said battle, and in the night time, he was hit by a musket ball in the left shoulder and badly injured; that in consequence of said injury his left arm and hand have become almost disabled. For the foregoing reasons the committee believe the said John Lee justly entitled to the relief prayed for, and report the accompanying bill, and recommend that the same pass.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am satisfied.

Mr. CLAY. I object to it.

The bill was passed over.

R. F. BLOCKER AND OTHERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 425) for the relief of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to pay to R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis, the sum of $1,500, in full for their claim against the United States for their professional services in defending Lieutenant Anderson and his detachment, who were arrested and tried for a criminal offense alleged to have been committed while acting under orders of their commanding officer in Texas, in the year 1834.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that bill.

The bill was laid over.

RUSSELL FITCH.

The bill (S. No. 426) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Russell Fitch, of Ohio, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land to Russell Fitch, of Ohio, in consideration of military services rendered in the Army of the United States during the last war with Great Britain.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no written report in that case, but I can state the facts very briefly. The petitioner shows service to within a very few days of the amount required at the Pension Office, by proof which they agree to be sufficient. The amount of time claimed was much more than sufficient but was not within their rules; but a letter from Mr. Whittlesey, of Ohio, who is well known to the Senate, recommended the case as being within the equity and within the reason of the law, as he thought. It was a question of technical deficiency of proof at the Pension Office as to a portion of the time. There were six days which they required which were not proved technically.

Mr. TOOMBS. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVALID PENSIONS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 395) to authorize the increase of invalid pensions in certain cases.

It provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the same power to increase the pension in case of increased disability of all persons who may receive an invalid pension by virtue of a special law that he would have in case of like pensions granted by a general law.

Mr. PUGH. That is a general bill. I object to it.

THOMAS W. WARD.

The bill (S. No. 427) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late United States consul at Panama, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of State to settle, upon principles of equity and justice, the account of Thomas W. Ward, late consul of the United States at Panama, for expenditures made by him in procuring testimony in relation to the outrages committed on American citizens in the riot at Panama, on the 15th of April, 1856, and appropriates such sum as may be found due.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HOWELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 513) granting an invalid pension to William Howell, of Tennessee, was next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Howell, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, and that he be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 23d of February, 1858, and continuing during his life.

Mr. CLAY. Read the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the papers of William Howell, of the State of Tennessee, asking an invalid pension, for injuries received in the war of 1812, report:

That it appears from the evidence filed, that said William Howell enlisted on the 15th July, 1812, for eighteen months, under Captain Martin Hawkins, in the twenty-seventh regiment of infantry; was transferred shortly after to the company of Captain Thornton S. Posey, in the same regiment. Whilst on his way from Fort Knox to Fort Harrison, with a load of provisions for the army, he was shot in the left breast by a ball fired from a gun in the hands of an Indian; from the effects of said wound he has never recovered, but is now wholly disabled from obtaining a living by manual labor.

William Hargies and Abraham Dye, who were in the same company with him, swear to the fact of his having received the wound whilst in the line of his duty.

D. B. Cliff and S. S. Mayfield, who are certified to be physicians of good standing in Franklin, Williamson county, Tennessee, certify that he is now disabled one half or more.

The committee are of opinion that he is entitled to relief, and therefore report a bill.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Georgia, I believe, objected to all these cases.

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir; I object to them. The bill was passed over.

WILLIAM BULLOCK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 520) for the relief of William Bullock.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Bullock upon the roll of invalid pensions, and that he be paid a pension at the rate of six dollars a month, from the 1st of January, 1854.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and papers of William Bullock, beg leave to submit a report:

That there is good and sufficient evidence of said Bullock having rendered service in the war of 1812; that he received severe injuries whilst in the line of his duty, which now unfit him for labor. At a former session of Congress a bill was introduced for his relief, but for want of time it failed to become a law. Your committee now report a bill granting him relief.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object.

The bill was passed over.

SHOVE CHASE.

The bill (H. R. No. 533) for the relief of Shove Chase, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Shove Chase, of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 1st of January, 1856, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition and papers of Shove Chase, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report:

The petitioner proves by his own oath, and the certificate of the captain, that he enlisted at Staten Island, in the State of New York, the 19th day of December, 1812, for one year, in the war of 1812. That while in said service he had the misfortune to break his arm by a fall, while passing from one post to another in the dark. He also proves, by the surgeon of the army who attended him, and also by the certificates of two surgeons of his own county, by the former that he was in the line of his duty when the injury was received, and by the surgeons of his county that the injury still continues. His neighbors certify that he has not at any time been qualified to perform manual labor, excepting with the right hand; that he has refused to receive, or rather apply, for a pension while he was able to earn his board by doing small favors for his neighbors. He is now aged, and unable to support himself; the injury of his wrist increasing instead of getting better. The committee, deeming this a case where relief should be granted, introduce the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELI W. GOFF.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 353) for the relief of Eli W. Goff, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Commerce.

It provides that the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon satisfactory proof being presented that Eli W. Goff, late inspector of customs for the district of Vermont, actually sustained damages and losses by his efforts faithfully to execute the revenue laws of the United States, shall audit his account, and pay to him the amount of his damages and losses; but the amount allowed is to be for damages resulting directly from a proper discharge of his legal duties as inspector of customs, and is not to exceed the sum of $5,000.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CLAY. I reported it adversely; but the Senator from Vermont [Mr. COLLAMER] asked me not to act on it in his absence.

The bill was passed over.

ALONZO AND E. G. COLBY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 486) for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby.

It appropriates $2,502 11 for Alonzo Colby and Elbridge G. Colby, of the town of Buckport, in Maine, that sum being the balance due to them on their contract with the United States, dated July 24, 1855, for constructing a breakwater at Owl's Head harbor, Penobscot river, Maine.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GARDNER AND VINCENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 569) for the relief of Gardner & Vincent and others.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the production of satisfactory evidence, to audit and settle the several accounts of Gardner & Vincent, A. S. Gardner, A. F. Holmes, G. B. Murphy, C. C. Carlton, N. E. Crittenden, O. A. Brooks & Company, and W. Bingham & Company, for goods, &c., furnished the United States marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, during the superintendency of John Coon, and to pay the amounts found to be due.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HASAM AND BREWSTER.

The bill (H. R. No. 573) for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Its purpose is to require the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster, for services as inspectors of hulls and boilers, at New Orleans, Louisiana, and to allow them their regular compensation from the date of their appointment as if they had been sworn and properly qualified.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS ANTISELL.

The bill (H. R. No. 452) for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. Thomas Antisell, the sum of $274 65, in full of his account for services rendered as acting assistant surgeon to the command (company G, third artillery) escorting Lieutenant Parke's party of survey from California to New Mexico in 1855.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID BRUCE.

The bill (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It empowers the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent of David Bruce, dated November 6, 1843, for a new and improved mode of casting type, for seven years from the date of its expiration, subject to the rules and regulations now in force for granting extensions; provided it shall appear on examination that the failure to extend his patent occurred through an official mistake.

Mr. PUGH. I object to that bill.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator permit me to make a remark, which I think will satisfy him in relation to the bill?

Mr. PUGH. Certainly.

Mr. REID. This is not to grant an extension of a patent. It expired some time during the last year. Before its expiration, the patentee made application for a renewal in time, and the examiner made his report, but one of the clerks misplaced the report, so that the Commissioner did not act upon it until after the expiration of the time, and then decided that he could not take up the case because the clerk had made the mistake, and the papers had not reached him in time. This bill is merely to permit him to take up the case and examine it as he could have done if his clerk had not made the mistake. The case is not at all changed. The bill only gives the right to examine it, as the Commissioner would have done if the clerk had not made the mistake.

Mr. PUGH. How long did the patent run? Has it ever been renewed before?

Mr. REID. It has never been renewed.

Mr. PUGH. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MYER.

The bill (S. No. 428) for the relief of James Myer was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the payment to James Myer, late quartermaster to the Mexican boundary commission, of the sum of $1,093 71, being in full for his time and expenses in returning to his home after he was relieved from duty as a member of the commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE J. WINGERD.

The bill (S. No. 429) for the relief of Jane J. Wingerd was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the payment to Jane J. Wingerd, of the sum of $233 33, in full for two months' services of her late husband, Jacob B. Wingerd, deceased, as a temporary clerk in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury in 1843.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that bill.

Mr. IVERSON. Will my colleague allow me to make an explanation of the case to him?

Mr. TOOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. IVERSON. This is a poor woman; and the facts of the case are simply these: in the Comptroller's office, one of the clerks became largely behindhand; and the Comptroller found it necessary to employ a temporary clerk to bring up the business, and, by doing that, he was enabled to transfer another clerk to a higher branch of duty. This man Wingerd was employed in the office to perform the service for two months.

Mr. TOOMBS. This purports to have been in 1843, fifteen years ago.

Mr. IVERSON. I do not recollect the time.

Mr. TOOMBS. That is the date given, fifteen years ago.

Mr. IVERSON. I hardly think it was so long ago.

Mr. TOOMBS. I wish to know why the services have never been paid for before, as they were rendered fifteen years ago?

Mr. IVERSON. Read the report.

The Secretary read the report; from which it appears, from a statement of James W. McCulloch, Esq., late First Comptroller of the Treasury, that, in consequence of a large accumulation of business in that office, in the year 1843, Mr. Jacob B. Wingerd was duly sworn and employed as a temporary clerk in that office for two months, on a grade of service for which the regular clerks were paid at the rate of $1,400 per annum. For this service no payment has been made, there being no fund out of which to pay compensation to extra clerks. Although the committee disapprove of the employment of extra clerks in the Departments or bureaus without authority of law, yet, as this service appears to have been regarded as necessary by the Comptroller, and to have been faithfully rendered, they think a proper compensation ought to have been made.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object, unless some account can be given of the fifteen years' delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. TOOMBS subsequently said: The Senator from Texas [Mr. Houston] having satisfied me in regard to the case of Jane J. Wingerd, I withdraw my objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham.

It requires the Secretary of War to place the name of Sylvanus Burnham upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and cause to be paid to him eight dollars per month, commencing from and after the 14th of November, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. CLAY. I object to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

CORNELIUS H. LATHAM.

The bill (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to allow and pay Cornelius H. Latham, of New York, an invalid pensioner, the sum of eight dollars per month during his natural life, in lieu of the pension now allowed him by law, to commence on the 25th of February, 1856.

Mr. PUGH. Let us hear the report in that case.

The Secretary read it, and it appears that the petitioner was, by special act of Congress for his relief, approved July 17, 1854, placed on the pension list, at the rate of four dollars per month, on account of disease contracted while in the line of his duty, in the service of the United States, as a private in Captain E. V. Sumner's company of United States dragoons.

The petitioner now states that the disease has continued to this time, and renders him unable to perform any labor. He presents the affidavits of two physicians, who are certified to be reputable in their profession, who state that he is not only still disabled, but, in consequence, is disabled to a degree amounting to a total disability.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DUNCAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 366) for the relief of John Duncan.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the list of Navy pensioners, at the rate of sixteen dollars per month, the name of John Duncan, who was a landsman in the United States Navy on board the United States ship-of-war Brandywine, and who has become totally blind in consequence of disease contracted and injuries received by him while in the line of his duty in the service of the United States; the pension to commence on 1st of December, 1855, and continue during his natural life; but it is not to be paid if he remains a beneficiary in the United States naval asylum.

The bill was reported, with an amendment to strike out "sixteen dollars," and insert "eight dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in; and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

EBENEZER HITCHCOCK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 532) for the relief of Ebenezer Hitchcock, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ebenezer Hitchcock, of Massachusetts, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and to cause him to be paid at that rate from the 1st of February, 1858, during his natural life.

Mr. CLAY. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ALLEN SMITH.

The bill (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Allen Smith, was next considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It requests the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Allen Smith, of New Hampshire, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 21st of January, 1858, and continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLAY. I move to reconsider that vote. I ask for the reading of the report.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Read the report.

The Secretary read it; and it appears from the affidavit of the petitioner, (and his statement is corroborated by the certificate of the Adjutant General,) that he enlisted in the company of Captain Weeks, eleventh regiment of United States infantry, on the 20th May, 1812, for five years, and served the full period of his enlistment, and was honorably discharged. It further appears from his statement that he was transferred to the recruiting service, being a drummer, and was ordered from place to place; that whilst stationed at Plattsburg, New York, he had an attack of measles, and before he had entirely recovered, was ordered to Champlain, in the same State, and whilst there, and in feeble health, he was obliged to encamp in the woods, without covering, exposed to the cold, wet and snow, which produced sickness, and from the effects of which he has never recovered; but, on the contrary, he has grown worse, until he is now wholly incapable of supporting himself, and that his present disabled condition is owing to disease contracted whilst in the discharge of his duty as a soldier. Two or three respectable physicians fully confirm his statement as regards his present disability, and give it as their opinion that it is in consequence of exposure to the inclemency of the weather. It also appears from the affidavit of the officer who enlisted the petitioner, (Gould,) and who served with him during the whole five years, and also by that of Lieutenant Stephenson, who also served with him, that he was, at the time of entering the service, a strong, able-bodied man, and that his present disability is the result of an incurable disease, contracted whilst in the Army, and in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. CLAY. That case is obnoxious to the common objection which I make to all these cases. When they fail to make the proof required at the Pension bureau, they come before Congress; and sometimes by sympathy, and sometimes from the importunities of friends of these parties, their bills are passed, while others, equally meritorious, are rejected. I object to it.

The bill was passed over.

MARY BAINBRIDGE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge.

It directs the name of Mary Bainbridge, of Massachusetts, to be placed upon the pension list of the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior is to pay, or cause to be paid, to her the sum of thirty dollars per month, commencing on the 1st of June, 1857, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. PUGH. Read the report.

Mr. CLAY. I can state in a word the character of the bill, and the point in issue. I will state here that I oppose all these claims, but I am but one in the committee. Her husband did not die in service, and therefore it does not come within the general law; but this bill proposes to pension her.

Mr. PUGH. The report will explain the case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is of no use to read the report, if the bill is objected to.

Mr. CLAY. I understand the Senator from Georgia to object to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, if the report was read, the bill would not be objected to.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object.

The bill was passed over.

ZINA WILLIAMS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Zina Williams, of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 4th of December, 1855, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. TOOMBS. Read the report.

The Secretary read it; and it appears that the petitioner was called into the service in the war of 1812, in September, 1814, from Montgomery county, New York, and marched to Sackett's Harbor, in New York, where he was on duty, without shelter, sleeping (if at all) upon the ground; sickness prevailed in camp, and on the 1st of October, 1814, he was taken sick of the prevailing camp disease, and was sent to the hospital, where he was attended by two surgeons; his sickness settled into a fever; his friends sent for him, with difficulty carried him home on a bed; he was confined to his bed eighteen months, the fever concentrating in his left hip, causing great pain and contraction of the muscles, resulting in almost the entire loss of the use of the left leg; the disability continuing from that time to the present, and of a nature incurable; that he is a farmer, a sober, temperate, prudent man, and is clear from any charge of imprudence or exposure as the cause of the continuation of his disability.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object.

The bill was passed over.

SAMUEL GOODRICH.

The bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr., was announced as next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Samuel Goodrich, jr., of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and to pay him a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during his natural life, to commence on the 1st of January, 1856.

Mr. TOOMBS. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read it; and it appears that in September, 1814, the petitioner entered the service of the United States in the militia, in Oswego county, New York, and marched to Sackett's Harbor, New York; there in camp he was exposed to the hardships of a soldier; destitute of barracks, exposed to the wet, sleeping on the wet ground, he was seized with the prevailing camp distemper, which soon became a bilious fever and inflammatory rheumatism, which caused the formation of many tumors upon his body and limbs, that were often lanced, resulting, finally, in the formation of an abscess on the left hip, injuring the hip-joint, contracting of the muscles, shortening of the left leg, making it almost useless, attended with extreme pain; on reaching home he was confined to his bed or room one year and a half, and since that day he has continued a cripple, unable to perform hard labor, with a diseased hip, incurable, and without hope of improvement.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object. I know no reason why he could not get a pension at the Pension Office.

Mr. CLAY. Because he cannot make proof to satisfy the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. TOOMBS. So I thought.

Mr. CLAY. But it requires a much less amount of proof to satisfy Congress.

Mr. TOOMBS. It does not require any proof here.

The bill was passed over.

SILAS STEVENS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 459) granting an invalid pension to Silas Stevens, of Virginia.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Silas Stevens, of Virginia, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension, at the rate of four dollars a month, from the 1st of February, 1858, during his natural life.

Mr. PUGH. I do not think it worth while to go through with these cases, as we are satisfied all this class of pension bills will be objected to. If the rest are objected to, I think they ought all to stand together.

The bill was passed over.

STEPHEN BUNNELL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell.

It provides that the name of Stephen Bunnell, of Indiana, a sergeant major of the war of 1812, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, for and during his natural life, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from and after the 1st of January, 1855.

Mr. CLAY. I object to it.

The bill was passed over.

THERESA DARDENNE.

The bill (S. No. 434) for the relief of Theresa Dardenne, widow of Abraham Dardenne, deceased, and their children, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that Theresa Dardenne, widow of Abraham Dardenne, or, in case of her decease, any one of her children by Abraham Dardenne, deceased, be allowed to enter, in legal subdivisions, at any land office in Arkansas, free of cost, the quantity of six hundred and forty acres of unappropriated land belonging to the United States, and subject to private entry, as an indemnification for losses sustained on account of an erroneous sale of land by the land officers at Little Rock, Arkansas, on the 20th of January, 1836.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will state that this case has passed unanimously every committee it has been before, and it has passed the Senate heretofore, but never passed the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN DONNELSON AND OTHERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 54) to revive and extend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others," approved May 24, 1824, and the several acts extending, continuing, and reviving the same.

The original bill proposed to revive and extend the provisions of the act approved May 24, 1824, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others, and the several acts extending and reviving the same," to the representatives of John Donnelson, deceased, subject to the conditions imposed by those acts, for the term of two years. The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provisions of the act approved the 24th May, 1824, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others, and the several acts extending, continuing, and reviving the same," be, and the same are hereby, revived and extended to the representatives of John Donnelson, deceased, subject to the conditions and limitations imposed by the aforesaid acts, for the term of two years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to revive and extend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donnelson, Stephen Heard, and others,' approved May 24, 1824, and the several acts extending, continuing, and reviving the same."

MARY BOYLE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle.

It directs that the name of Mary Boyle be placed on the pension roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1858.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the report be read.
Mr. CLAY. The point is that her husband did not die in the service. I object to all such cases.

The bill was passed over.

EVELINA PORTER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 458) for the relief of Evelina Porter, widow of the late Commodore David Porter, of the United States Navy.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Evelina Porter, widow of the late Commodore Porter, deceased, of the United States Navy, upon the list of invalid pensions, to be paid at the rate of thirty dollars per month, for five years, from the 9th of February, 1858.

Mr. CLAY. I object.

Mr. GREEN. Let it be considered. Vote it down if it is wrong. I consider it a very meritorious case.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I object. Let them all go the same way.

The bill was passed over.

JUDITH NOTT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 528) for the relief of Judith Nott.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Judith Nott upon the pension roll of the United States, at the rate of nine dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1855, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. PUGH. Read the report.

The Secretary read the report. It appears from the evidence in support of the application of Judith Nott that her husband, John Nott, now deceased, was a seaman in the Navy of the United States during the late war with Great Britain. It further appears, from the certificate of Jonathan D. Ferris, late lieutenant in the United States Navy, (who is also deceased,) that in December, 1814, when the British were off the coast of Louisiana, and threatened their attack upon New Orleans, he selected, among others, the said John Nott as one of a picked crew to man gun-boat No. 5 on Lake Borgne, of which he was in command, to resist the landing of the enemy. It further appears that Nott was in command of a piece of ordnance, and that the boat, among others, had a severe engagement on the 14th of December, 1814, with the enemy on the lake. After the battle Lieutenant Ferris observed that the hand of John Nott was wounded, and that he appeared lame. Upon inquiry into the cause, he learned that while John Nott was in the act of elevating his gun the breech fell and smashed his fingers; and that the lameness proceeded from a splinter entering his hip, but neither supposed the wounds serious, or of much moment. It appears from the certificate of Lieutenant Ferris that he did not consider the wounds sufficiently serious to report in his return of casualties to his commanding officer, though he was wounded by a splinter at the same time, which he passed unnoticed, but which subsequently became serious. The wounds subsequently assumed a serious character, and John Nott was confined a year at the hospital in Philadelphia, and was subsequently discharged, his wounds still uncured.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORATIO BOULTBEE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 506) for the relief of the administrator of Horatio Boulton, deceased, which had been reported upon adversely by the Committee on Military Affairs.

It provides that there be appropriated the sum of $588 50 to the administrator of Horatio Boulton, deceased, being payment in full for a stack of wheat which was burned by the troops of the United States on the 21st of February, 1847, at Agua Nueva, in Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES T. V. THOMPSON.

The bill (S. No. 435) for the relief of James T. V. Thompson was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that there be paid to James T. V. Thompson, the sum of $627 75, in full for loss or damage on a quantity of flour purchased by him at a public sale, under the direction of the United States commissary, at Fort Leavenworth, in August, 1851, and which flour proved to be unsound.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appears that by order of the commissary of subsistence, a sale of about one thousand bags of flour was advertised on July 25, 1851, to take place on the 16th of August following, at Fort Leavenworth. The advertisement represented the flour to be "in good order, and perfectly sweet." The petitioner purchased four hundred and five sacks, at $1 95 per sack, amounting to $789 75. After the flour was delivered and paid for, it was ascertained, as is alleged, to be sour and unfit for use, and was afterwards sold by the petitioner for the best price he could get, and netted him about forty cents per sack, subjecting him to a loss of $627 75, which he asks to have reimbursed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There have been two favorable reports. That is enough for me.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES M. PERRY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 439) for the relief of Charles M. Perry.

It provides that there be paid to Charles M. Perry the sum of $1,172 94, being the difference between his salary as a messenger and the salary of a clerk, the duties of which he performed from the 23th of September, 1853, to December 30, 1856.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I object to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

NANCY MAGILL.

The bill (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of Nancy Magill, of Ohio, was announced as next in order.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Nancy Magill, widow of James Magill, of Ohio, on the pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, for five years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1858.

Mr. PUGH. That is an exceptional case, to which I presume my friend from Georgia will not object.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us hear the report.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think that it is a good case.

The Secretary read the report; and it appears that James Magill, the husband of Nancy Magill, enlisted as a private for the war, in the company of Captain Hoagland, Colonel Morgan's regiment of infantry, on the 28th of April, 1847, was wounded at Chapultepec 13th September, 1847, and discharged from the service August 4, 1848; was subsequently appointed brevet second lieutenant, and promoted first lieutenant for his bravery during the war. On the 29th of March, 1849, he was compelled to resign his commission as lieutenant, on account of ill health. Some time in the year 1849, after he resigned his commission as lieutenant, he left his residence in Coshocton, Ohio, for the purpose of going to Cincinnati on business, since which time he has not been heard from.

Mr. PUGH. The case appears to be this: this man resided—

Mr. HAMLIN. I object, if nobody else does.

Mr. CLAY. Just let me say one word.

Mr. PUGH. I can show the Senate that it is a proper case.

Mr. CLAY. I want to show the great difference between this and the other cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill lies over.

JOHN C. RATHBUN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 529) for the relief of John C. Rathbun.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John C. Rathbun on the list of retired pensioners, at the rate of four dollars per month, to commence on the 15th of February, 1858, and continue during life.

Mr. PUGH. I object to the bill.

The bill was passed over.

PHINEAS G. PEARSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 527) for the relief of Phineas G. Pearson.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Phineas G. Pearson on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 22d day of January, and continue during life.

Mr. PUGH. I object to the bill.

The bill was passed over.

JOHN PERRY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of John Perry, of Illinois.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Perry, of Illinois, on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 15th of February, 1858, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The Secretary read it; from which it appears that Perry was a private in company C, commanded by Captain John M. Moore, in the second regiment of Illinois volunteers, commanded by Colonel James Collins; that he enlisted on the 15th day of July, 1847, to serve during the war; that he marched to the seat of war, and while in the line of his duty as a soldier at the town of Puebla, in Mexico, in the month of March, 1848, he was attacked with serofulous irietus, which has so affected his eyes as to produce almost total blindness.

Mr. CLAY. There is nothing on the record to show all this sickness, and therefore I object to the bill.

The bill was passed over.

KENNEDY O'BRIEN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 457) for the relief of Kennedy O'Brien.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Kennedy O'Brien on the list of invalid pensioners, and that he be paid a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 1st of January, 1854.

Mr. PUGH. I object to the bill.

The bill was passed over.

WILLIAM SUTTON.

The next bill was the bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of William Sutton.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Sutton on the roll of invalid pensioners, and cause him to be paid the sum of six dollars per month, to commence from and after the 5th of February, 1858, and to continue during the period of his natural life.

Mr. PUGH. I object to the bill.

The bill was passed over.

NEHEMIAH S. DRAPER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H.

R. No. 511) for the relief of Nehemiah S. Draper and William Holden, heirs-at-law of Mary Draper, deceased, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TIMOTHY L. O'KEEFFEE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keeffe, which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN B. ROPER.

The bill (H. R. No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper was next considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Postmaster General to pay to John B. Roper, in addition to the sum already paid him, the sum of $300 for services performed on mail route No. 13336.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report; from which it appears that Roper, at the mail lettings in the winter of 1854, put in two bids on routes Nos. 13335 and 13336. The first-named route, running from Carlyle, Clinton county, Illinois, to Muscota, is twenty-seven miles, and the other, from Carlyle to Hillsboro', Montgomery county, is forty miles' distance. Route No. 13336, a distance of forty miles, was given to him under his bid, as stands upon the books of the Department, for $200, and route No. 13335 was given to another for $169. The petitioner alleges that he intended to have reversed the order of his bids, making the highest bid cover the longest route; they should have been, and were designed by him to be, on route No. 13336, forty miles, $275, and on route No. 13335, twenty-seven miles, $200, just transposing them. He has performed the service on route No. 13336, forty miles, for $200 per annum, and the committee are clearly of the opinion that he is justly entitled to the additional sum of seventy-five dollars per annum, which, for the four years, the period of his contract, amounts to the sum of $300.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH CLYMER.

The bill (S. No. 438) for the relief of Joseph Clymer, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that there shall be paid to Joseph Clymer the sum of $15,670, in full for all claims by him for losses or damages on account of the contract entered into between himself and the United States, represented by Thomas Swords, lieutenant colonel, quartermaster of the United States Army, on the 18th of April, 1851, and by reason of the failure of the United States to perform the same.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to the consideration of the bill. The Court of Claims, I understand, have decided against the claim.

WIDOWS' HALF PAY.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) giving construction to the second section of the act of February 3, 1853, to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested; which, on motion of Mr. HAMLIN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, the 3d instant, the following acts and resolutions:

A resolution devolving upon the Secretary of War the execution of the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December 22, 1854;

A resolution for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy;

An act confirming locations of land warrants under certain circumstances;

An act for the relief of the heirs of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, and others; and

An act to extend an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

An act for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky;

An act making appropriations for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon;

An act for the relief of George W. Biscoe;

An act for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey;

An act for the relief of Richard B. Alexander;

An act for the relief of Simeon Stedman;

An act for the relief of Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman;

An act for the relief of Captain Stanton Sholes;

An act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859;

An act for the relief of Joseph Webb;

An act for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the Navy;

An act for the relief of Micajah Brooks;

An act for the relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming;

An act for the relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York;

An act for the relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughrey, deceased;

An act for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield;

An act for the relief of Lewis M. Broadwell; and

A resolution for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill.

THOMAS LAURENT.

Mr. PUGH. I objected the other day to the consideration of a small bill (S. No. 334) for the relief of Thomas Laurent, surviving partner of the firm of Benjamin & Thomas Laurent. I withdraw my objection, and move that that bill be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It requires the Secretary of War to pay to Thomas Laurent, surviving partner of the firm of Benjamin & Thomas Laurent, or to his legal representatives, the sum of $15,000, being the amount paid by that firm, on that day, to Major General Winfield Scott, in the city of Mexico, for the purchase of a house in that city, out of the possession of which they were since ousted by the Mexican authorities.

Mr. PUGH. I offer an amendment, in line seven, after the word "dollars," to insert "with interest at the rate of six per cent. yearly, from the 11th of November, 1847."

Mr. HUNTER. I must object to the consideration of this bill, if we are to have a discussion about interest.

Mr. PUGH. If this bill does not pass, which is a plain case, the parties will sue General Scott, and we shall not only have to pay the money, but have to pay four or five lawyers. It is a plain case of having got the money of these people on a failure of title. The bill is simply to pay back the purchase money.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SLIDELL. I object to the third reading of the bill to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it must be passed over.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the prior orders, and take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. GREEN. I hope the Senate will not take that course. We have gone through the Calendar, and passed bills to which there were no objections. There are other bills that one or two Senators may object to, and yet a majority may want to pass. I desire to give those men a hearing, and I think it is right, and just, and proper, that they should have a hearing. I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I would submit to the Senator from Virginia, whether, as the Senate has been going on very successfully with the private business, he had not better allow us to conclude the Private Calendar entirely.

Mr. HUNTER. We have got through the Private Calendar; none but objected cases remain, and we might lose the whole day on a single one of them. I have waited until we got through the Calendar before making this motion. If we are to adjourn on Thursday next, we ought surely to dispose of the appropriation bills.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We have not got through with the Calendar. There are a large number of bills that have not been disposed of, because some one Senator said, "I object." I think we could very soon pass from thirty to forty private bills which have not been acted upon to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us take the sense of the Senate; I have not a word more to say.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I agree with the Senator from Missouri, in expressing the hope that the Senate will not proceed to the consideration of the Navy appropriation bill this evening, and if the Senate decline to take up that bill, I shall ask for an executive session. I am, of course, not at liberty to do more than allude to the nature of the business calling for an executive session, but the Senator understands it, and I think the majority feel quite as much interest in the accomplishment of that business confided to my charge as any other. I know it is equally as pressing; and if the Senate does not afford me an opportunity of considering it early, and some days before the adjournment, we shall probably be called upon to consider it in such a manner as not to please many of us who are desirous to get home soon. I hope the Senate will vote down the motion of the Senator from Virginia, and then proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the yeas and nays on Mr. HUNTER's motion; and they were ordered.

Mr. IVERSON. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia. If we take up the naval appropriation bill, does he expect us to go on with it and finish it to-night? If not, I do not see any use in taking it up.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bigler, Bright, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hale, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Broderick, Brown, Crittenden, Doolittle, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Hamlin, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Pugh, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Wade, and Wilson—22.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (C. C. No. 84) for the relief of Ferdinand Cox; and

A bill (C. C. No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 13, noes 23.

Mr. SEBASTIAN's motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 21, noes 19; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 4, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSULAR BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the business first in order to be the consideration of the Senate amendment to House bill (No. 6) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] was, yesterday, excused from further service on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will not ask that the motion be disposed of now, as the gentleman is not in his seat; but I desire to have it entered.

CREDITORS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GROW. I desire the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to introduce a bill to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States, so as to permit creditors of the Government to sue in the district courts of the United States. I desire simply to have it referred.

Mr. PHILLIPS and others objected

SETTLERS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I desire to submit a motion to discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 538) for the relief of settlers on certain lands in the State of Illinois—simply to secure the right of preemption. I ask that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DAVIS] be allowed to report back the bill.

There being no objection,

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, reported back the bill above described, and asked to have it put upon its passage.

The bill declares that all settlers in good faith, prior to the passage of this act, on any of the public lands heretofore selected by the State of Illinois, but which have not been confirmed to said State, under the provisions of the act of September 4, 1841, shall be entitled to preempt their several claims by legal subdivisions, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres, at the ordinary minimum of $1 25 per acre, except within the six-mile limits of any railroad grant; and in that case at the double minimum of $2 50 per acre; provided such settlers shall establish their rights according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the act of September 4, 1841, and that they pay for the same within three months from the date of the publication of this act by the register of the proper district, and provided that no declaratory statement shall be required to be filed by such settlers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KEEP, BARD AND CO.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 318) for the relief of Keep, Bard & Co. I desire to have it read for the information of the House, and then to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection till he shall have heard the bill read.

Mr. DEAN. Would it be in order to move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, and to dispose of all these bills?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

PENSION BILL.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take up the bill for granting pensions to the officers and soldiers of the war of 1812.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee until the House shall dispose of the pending proposition on which the previous question was seconded yesterday evening, and the main question ordered to be put.

CONSULAR BILL—AGAIN.

The Senate amendment to the consular bill, pending when the House adjourned yesterday, was then taken up for consideration. The Senate proposed to strike out the following section of the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1859:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid out of the Treasury for any expenses which accrued, or shall accrue, before the commencement or after the termination of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1859."

The question being on agreeing to the amendment of the Senate,

Mr. DEAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bonham, Bowie, Burnett, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochran, Cockerill, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Eustis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Goode, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Hughes, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miles, Millson, Moore, Niblack, Peyton, John B. Phelps, Phillips, Quitman, Rengun, Reilly, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Vallandigham, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Woodson, Wortendyke, and Augustus R. Wright—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Branton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawes, Denn, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hill, Hoard, Howard, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Mattoon, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Richard, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Stanton, William Stewart, Thayer, Tompkins, Trippe, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and John V. Wright—81.

So the Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1859.

SLOOPS-OF-WAR.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report a bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MARYLAND CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. If the gentleman will give way for a moment, I wish to make a statement. I gave notice yesterday that I desired to call up to-day the Maryland contested-election case; but from the disposition of gentlemen to proceed with other business, I am willing to waive that, and propose to call it up to-morrow. In the mean time I hope gentlemen will give what consideration they can to the case.

ACCOUNTS OF THE LATE CLERK.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am directed by the special committee appointed to investigate the conduct and accounts of the late Clerk, to present to the House a report, accompanied by a resolution. I move that the report be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed; and ask that the resolution be put upon its passage. I move the previous question.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee, appointed by the resolution of the House of Representatives of December 18, 1857, to investigate the conduct and accounts of William Cullom, late Clerk of the House of Representatives, have leave to sit at the next session, and then to submit their final report.

Mr. STANTON. How does the resolution get before the House? I understood that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCKOCK] had the floor, on a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia was recognized, and the gentleman from Tennessee rose and stated that he rose to a privileged question. On examination, the Chair learns that the resolution constituting the special committee authorizes that committee to report at any time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is this the report?

The SPEAKER. It is a report in part.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose their authority was to report the result of their investigation, not to report a resolution for the extension of time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this comes within the scope of the authority, the committee not being able to conclude its investigation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose they might report the testimony they have got, and let us have it to examine during the recess. I suppose that what testimony is taken is perfect, and will not be amended.

Mr. MAYNARD. The report we now submit was agreed to unanimously. We understand that it is necessary to adopt this resolution, in order that the committee may continue in existence. There is no time, nor am I authorized, to inform the House what we have been doing, what is the state of the investigation, or anything about it. I ask that the report may be read, and that will give the House such information as I am directed to impart at this time.

The report was read. It sets forth that the subject was found to be very extensive, embracing the disbursement of between one and two million dollars, generally in small sums, and to many persons, involving the whole administration of the House contingent fund; that the committee had devoted to it all the leisure they could command from other, and, as they considered, paramount duties; that their labors had been greatly aided by their prompt, attentive, and efficient clerk, Mr. William Blair Lord; that they had taken a large amount of testimony, written and oral, having examined seventy-seven witnesses, several of them more than once; and that the approaching close of the session prevents them from examining the voluminous evidence already taken so as to report the facts. They therefore ask leave to sit during the next session.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the resolution was adopted.

The report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOORKEEPER'S ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to call up the report of the select committee on the conduct and accounts of the late Doorkeeper, so as to have it disposed of by the House, either by postponing it, or otherwise.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I must raise a question of order in respect to this matter. I would have done so on the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD], but that I want to get all the votes that I can for my proposition, and I did not wish to press a point of order which I might legitimately have made; but since I see that privileged questions are the order of the day, I must make the point of order on the gentleman from Indiana. Although he may have the right to call up his report at any time, he must get the floor in order to do so. He has not the right to take the floor from me. If he can take it at the beginning, he can take it when I have been on the floor for half an hour.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 170.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. If I had known that the gentleman from Virginia was on the floor, I should not have sought it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Virginia. The floor was taken from him by the gentleman from Tennessee; but, had the point been raised, the Chair would have ruled that the gentleman from Tennessee could not have taken the floor from the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BOCK. I ask the consent of the House to introduce, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, a bill to construct ten small sloops-of-war. I hope there will be no objection to the introduction of the bill. I hope the House will then, without objection, allow the bill to take its first and second reading, and let it be finally acted upon. If there is objection I shall move to suspend the rules.

Mr. SEWARD. I object.

Mr. BOCK. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I wish to give notice, that if the rules are suspended I shall move to amend so as to make the number twenty instead of ten.

The bill was read.

Mr. BOCK. I now offer my motion to suspend the rules, in the following form:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended for the purpose of allowing the Committee on Naval Affairs to report a bill authorizing the construction of ten sloops-of-war, and that the bill be considered in the House at this time.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to give notice, that if the rules are suspended, and the bill brought before the House, I shall move to amend so as to provide for the construction of three war steamers for the northwestern lakes.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to suspend the rules.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 127, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bock, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Burnett, Burns, Caskey, Cavannah, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Burton, Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, English, Eustis, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Gilman, Gilmer, Goode, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Landy, Leidy, Letcher, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miles, Miller, Millson, Moore, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Niblack, Nichols, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Kegan, Reilly, Ricard, Robbins, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Savage, Seales, Scott, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, William Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Tripp, Underwood, Vallandigham, Ward, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Wood, Woodson, Wortendyke, Augustus K. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollisoff—127.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Iowa, Davies, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, Horton, Howard, George W. So the rules were not suspended, two thirds not having voted therefor.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, stated that he had paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS, otherwise he should have voted "ay."

Mr. DICK stated that Mr. ADRAIN was ill, and was unable to attend.

Mr. MORGAN stated that Mr. SHERMAN, of New York, had paired off with Mr. SEARING.

Mr. BRANCH stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SANDIDGE stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HALL, of Massachusetts. With the understanding that my vote shall not be construed into an approval of this war humbug, but because I am in favor of an increase of the present peace establishment, I change my vote, and vote "ay."

HALF PAY TO WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, as it is private bill day, to introduce a joint resolution, which will dispose of thirty-six bills on the Calendar. It is a subject which this Congress should not adjourn without disposing of. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following joint resolution:

Resolved, &c., That the second section of the act approved the 3d day of February, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," shall be construed in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Jane Smith, as granting pensions to the widows therein provided for, from the 4th day of March, 1848, and that all amounts due under the said second section aforesaid, for pensions accruing between the said 4th day of March, 1848, and the 3d day of February, 1853, shall be paid to the persons respectively entitled thereto, at the several pension agencies, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no widow shall be allowed any pension for the same time during which her husband was living, and in the receipt of a pension.

Mr. COBB. I hope I shall be allowed to make a statement in reference to this bill. I was the chairman of the committee of conference when the bill which this proposes to construe was passed; and I can state exactly what was the intention of the committee of conference.

Mr. STANTON. I will first state, if the House will permit me—

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement then?

Mr. STANTON. I have no objection, if no other gentleman objects.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have no objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio if he will demand the previous question, and cut off debate upon it.

Mr. STANTON. Very well. I will call the previous question after having made a short statement.

Mr. COBB. Then I shall object to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a statement?

Mr. STANTON. Let me first have a single minute.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand that the resolution has been received?

Mr. STANTON. No, certainly not. But I wish to make a single statement, if the House will permit me. The Committee of Claims were divided upon the construction of the law. There is a majority report and a minority report. It is purely a question of law; and I propose, if the rules are suspended, to have the report of the majority and minority read, which will present a fair view of the case on both sides; and I then propose to demand the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I object to the resolution, if that course is to be taken. I know as much about this case as the Court of Claims do, and I shall object, unless I can be heard. I know the court has made a wrong decision.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman has made his statement about it, and now I wish to say a word. I concur with the gentleman from Ohio that it is right that the House should act upon this question during the present session. There are various claims under this law—I do not know how many widows of revolutionary soldiers there may be under it—and unless a general act is passed, they will bring their claims here, perhaps, until every one is disposed of. And not only that, but they will have to apply to the Court of Claims for similar decisions, and pay attorneys for prosecuting their claims. There are now, I understand, thirty-six cases upon the Private Calendar, coming under this construction of the law. I think the decision of the Court of Claims is wrong, but I think it is better for the House to dispose of this matter in some way by a general law.

Mr. COBB. I object to this debate, unless I can have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. It is not in order for three gentlemen to speak at the same time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Virginia has made one of a dozen before now.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I object to all debate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is one other point I should like to notice.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I withdraw all objection, so far as the gentleman from Tennessee is concerned.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, and members of this House—

Mr. CHAFFEE. I object to debate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If that is the disposition, I hope that the rules will not be suspended.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays. Mr. McQUEEN demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House was divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 27.

So the rules were suspended, (two thirds voting in the affirmative.)

The resolution was read a first and second time.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had concurred in the amendment of the House to the joint resolution changing the day for the adjournment of Congress.]

Mr. STANTON. This resolution proposes to put a construction upon the law of 1853, upon which pension certificates have already issued to the pensioners. It may be that, under the resolution which was read at the Clerk's desk, it would be necessary to issue new certificates to entitle the parties to the pensions accruing between 1848 and 1853. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DAVIDSON] has placed in my hands a substitute, which is like my own resolution, except that it has incorporated in it a provision that the pension shall be paid by the several pension agencies, on the certificates heretofore issued under the law of 1853. I desire, if it is in order, to accept the substitute of the gentleman from Louisiana, in lieu of the proposition I have offered.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose that the resolution was got in under the suspension of the rules. It has been read a first and second time, and is now upon its engrossment and third reading. It is, therefore, now open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is open to amendment. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio was to accept the substitute of the gentleman from Louisiana. The Chair was going to suggest that the purpose the gentleman had in view could be better answered by moving an amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman can offer that, and the House can vote between the two.

Mr. STANTON. I move to insert, then, as a substitute, what I send to the Clerk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the second section of the act approved February 3, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," in the following words: "that the widows of all officers, non commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the revolutionary army, who were married subsequent to January, 1800, shall be entitled to a pension in the same manner as those who were married before that date," shall be construed as granting pensions to all widows therein provided for from the 4th day of March, 1848, instead of from the date of the act hereby amended, as decided by the Court of Claims in the case of Jane Smith; and the amount due under said act from the 4th of March, 1848, to the 3d of February, 1853, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the persons respectively entitled, upon the pension certificates heretofore issued to them, upon proof of identity, under such rules, regulations, and instructions to the several agents for paying pensions as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Pensions: Provided, That no pension shall be allowed to any widow for the same time during which her husband was living and in the receipt of a pension.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to have read a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which fully explains this whole question, and shows that it involves $1,000,000, or more.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. It can be read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio, if he has no objection.

Mr. STANTON. I think myself that the case is as well presented in the report of the Committee of Claims as in any other document. The views of the Department are known to be adverse to this construction of the law.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia. I should be very glad if the gentleman from Ohio would permit the paper to be read. We want to vote understandingly.

Mr. STANTON. Very well; let it be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the paper.

Mr. STANTON. I think I will ask the Clerk to read the reports of the majority and minority of the Committee of Claims instead of that paper, so that we may hear both sides. I shall then, under the pledge I gave the House before the suspension of the rules, move the previous question.

Mr. MOORE. I think it but an act of justice to the Department, that the reasons which influenced the Department should be understood. This is a matter of great importance, involving over a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object to the reading of any document from the Department. I think we are capable of discussing this question for ourselves.

Mr. MOORE. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Ohio consented that the letter should be read during his time, and the Clerk commenced to read the letter. It was then too late to interpose any objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio had a right to withdraw his assent to the reading of the paper.

Mr. MOORE. But the reading had been commenced.

The SPEAKER. It was being read during the time of the gentleman from Ohio, and he has a right to control it.

Mr. STANTON. I propose, now, in lieu of speaking myself, to have the reports of the majority and minority of the Committee of Claims read, thus arguing the case on both sides, and then I shall move the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. As I understand the joint resolution, it makes an appropriation of money, and must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON. If we had not suspended the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. The rules were suspended for the purpose of allowing the joint resolution to come into the House; but now that it is in the House, I ask the Chair if it must not go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? The gentleman admits that the joint resolution makes an appropriation, and it has not been considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I understand that the resolution does not make an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. STANTON. I move to suspend the rule requiring the joint resolution to be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask the Chair a question. If the rule is suspended, will it be in order to offer the general pension bill giving pensions to all soldiers and widows of soldiers as a substitute for this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bowie, Brayton, Bryan, Bufington, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Shaw, Shorter, William Smith, Stallworth, Stevenson, Talbot, Vallandigham, and Wortendyke—54.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rule requiring the joint resolution to be first considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was suspended.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SAVAGE stated that, if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, stated that he had paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS.

Mr. STANTON. I now ask for the reading of the reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the majority report is not at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. STANTON. Well, let the minority report be read first. The majority report will be here before the reading is through.

The Clerk read the minority report, as follows:

The minority of the Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill from the Court of Claims for the relief of Jane Smith, with accompanying documents, beg leave to submit the following report:

The only question involved in this case is purely a legal one. It is a question as to the true legal construction of an act passed by a prior Congress. There is no controverted question of fact in the case. The claimant is the widow of a revolutionary soldier, whose service during the whole period of the revolutionary war is undisputed. She was married to him subsequent to the 1st of January, 1800, and he died prior to the 4th of March, 1848.

After the passage of the act of February 3, 1853, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," she applied for the benefit of said second section, and of a prior act of July 29, 1848, she was entitled to a pension from the 4th of March, 1848, during her widowhood; but she was allowed a pension from the 3d of February, 1853, only. She filed her petition in the Court of Claims for the purpose of recovering the arrears of pension from the 4th of March, 1848, to the 3d of February, 1853, alleging that, according to the true legal construction of existing laws, she was entitled to a pension from the former date. The Court of Claims (all the judges concurring) has decided that she is so entitled, and reported a bill to carry that decision into effect.

In a case of this kind, where a question of mere legal construction has been submitted to and decided by the Court of Claims, and then comes before Congress for affirmance or reversal, it becomes the province of this body to act in a judicial rather than in a legislative capacity. Sitting as a high court of appeal, Congress is called upon to say what the law of the case is, and not what, in the judgment of members, it ought to have been. All questions, as to the wisdom or expediency of enacting the law, which we are called upon to interpret and expound, are matters foreign to the issue.

The minority of your committee, taking this view of the subject, and regarding their duties in the premises to be merely such as judges reviewing the decision of a court on a strictly legal question may rightfully exercise, after a very careful consideration of the question, have found it impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than an entire concurrence in the decision of the Court of Claims in this case.

By the first section of the act of July 29, 1848, entitled "An act for the relief of certain surviving widows of officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army," it is provided: "That the widows of all officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, soldiers, marines, or marines, and Indian spies, who shall have served in the continental line, State troops, volunteers, militia, or in the naval service, in the revolutionary war with Great Britain, shall be entitled to a pension during such widowhood, of equal amount per annum that their husbands would have been entitled to, if living, under existing pension laws; to commence on the 4th day of March, 1848, and to be paid in the same manner that other pensions are paid to widows. But no widow now receiving a pension shall be entitled to receive a further pension under the provisions of this act; and no widow married after the 1st of January, 1800, shall be entitled to receive a pension under this act."—First Session Thirtieth Congress, chapter 120.

The second section of the act of February 3, 1853, simply declares: "That the widows of all officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the revolutionary army, who were married subsequent to January, anno Domini 1800, shall be entitled to a pension in the same manner as those who were married before that date."

When these two statutes are examined together, it seems to us impossible to arrive at any other legitimate conclusion than that said second section of the act of 1853 was intended to extend the benefits of the act of 1848 to a class of widows not originally embraced in it, namely, to widows married after the 1st of January, 1800. In other words, it was intended to abolish and repeal so much of the first section of said act of 1848 as excluded widows married after the 1st of January, 1800, from enjoying its benefits, and to place them on an equal footing, under said act, with those married before that date. In the opinion of the undersigned, that intention is clearly expressed, in language free from any embarrassing ambiguity. It must be admitted that said second section of the act of 1853 grants some kind of pensions to widows married subsequent to the 1st of January, 1800, but in and of itself it prescribes none of the conditions of such pensions, neither the rate of the pension per annum, nor the time of its commencement, nor the time of its continuance. All these conditions it prescribes by referring to the act of July 29, 1848, and declaring that the widows married subsequent to January, 1800, shall be entitled to pensions "in the same manner" as widows married prior to that date are entitled to pensions under that act. The conditions prescribed by said act of 1848 are as follows: first, the pension is to be of equal amount per annum that the husband would have been entitled to, if living, under existing pension laws; second, it is to "commence on the 4th day of March, 1848;" and third, it is to continue "during widowhood." If widows married subsequent to January, 1800, are "entitled to pensions in the same manner," do not all these conditions necessarily attach?

It has been contended that the second section of the act of 1853 would refer as well to the act of July 4, 1836, and the act of July 7, 1838, as to the act of July 29, 1848; and that consequently it might, with as much propriety, be construed to grant pensions from the 4th of March, 1831, or the 4th of March, 1836, as from the 4th of March, 1848. An examination of the several acts referred to, however, will show that this argument is utterly untenable. The act of 1836 grants pensions only to widows married before the expiration of the last period of their husband's service, to commence on the 4th of March, 1831. The act of 1838 grants pensions only to those married prior to the 1st of January, 1794, to commence on the 4th of March, 1836. But the act of July 29, 1848, grants pension to all widows married prior to the 1st of January, 1800, whose husbands would be entitled to revolutionary pensions, if living, to commence on the 4th of March, 1848. To say that the act of 1853, when it speaks of the pensions to which widows married prior to January, 1800, are entitled, refers to the act of 1836, or the act of 1838, just as specifically as it does to the act of 1848, is to ignore all distinction in point of time between the 1st of January, 1800, the 1st of January, 1794, and the close of the revolutionary war. On this point the reasoning of the court is so clear and conclusive, that any attempt on our part to make it clearer would be a work of supererogation. It is in substance as follows: To prove merely that a widow was married to a revolutionary soldier before January, 1800, would not entitle her to a pension under the act of 1836, or the act of 1838. To be entitled under the act of 1836, she must prove that she was married before the termination of her husband's service. To be entitled under the act of 1838, she must prove a marriage prior to the 1st of January, 1794. But to entitle her to a pension under the act of 1848, it would be sufficient to prove merely that she was married prior to January, 1800. Hence, when the act of 1853 refers to the pensions of widows married prior to January, 1800, it clearly and indubitably refers to the act of 1848, specifically, that being the only act which grants pensions to widows who were married before that date merely.

Again, it has been contended that the words "in the same manner," &c., in the act of 1853, refer only to the mode in which the claim is to be established, the money paid, &c., and not to the time of the commencement of the pension. But will the language admit of this construction? The words "in the same manner" relate expressly to the title by which the pension is to vest and be enjoyed. The language is, that she shall be "entitled to a pension in the same manner," &c. Can it be said that two widows, one of whom is entitled to a pension from the 4th of March, 1848, and the other entitled to a pension from the 3d of February, 1853, only are "entitled to a pension in the same manner?" This point will be best illustrated by putting a case; not a supposed case, merely, but one of common occurrence in the execution of these laws. Two widows of revolutionary soldiers come forward asserting their claims to pensions. The facts upon which their rights depend are exactly alike in every other particular, except that one was married prior to January, 1800, and the other subsequent to that date. The law declares that the latter is "entitled to a pension in the same manner" as the former. Yet the Department gives the law a construction by which one is allowed a pension going back to the 4th of March, 1848, and the other is allowed a pension going back only to the 3d of February, 1853. Is not this construction clearly repugnant to the plain letter of the law? To limit the application of the words "in the same manner" merely to the mode of adjudicating and paying the claims, and not to extend their application so as to embrace the conditions of the pension itself, would render the second section of the act of 1853 utterly void for uncertainty. For, to leave out of view the question as to the time of the commencement of the pension, there is nothing in said section to show at what rate per annum the widow shall be pensioned, nor how long her pension shall continue. If the words "in the same manner" do not refer to the act of 1848 in a sufficiently comprehensive manner to embrace all these conditions of the pension, how is it to be determined whether the widow is to be allowed a pension of twenty, forty, eighty, or one hundred dollars per annum? Or how is it to be determined whether she is to be allowed a pension to continue for life, or during her widowhood only?

It will be seen that, in order to execute the second section of the act of 1853 at all, it must be construed to refer to the act of 1848, so as to embrace the provisions of that act in relation to the rate of the pension, and the time of its continuance, at least. Is not the time at which a widow's pension is made to commence as much an element of the manner in which she is entitled to her pension as the rate of her pension per annum, or the time of its continuance? It has been attempted to draw a distinction between the rate of the pension and the time through which it shall run, and to argue that the words "in the same manner" may be construed to refer to rate but not to time. But the words must be construed to refer to time as well as rate, else you cannot determine when the pension under the act of 1853 is to cease, whatever rule you adopt as to its commencement. The Department has construed it to cease on the subsequent marriage of the widow. And why? Simply because the prior act to which it refers gives the pension "during widowhood," only. It will hardly be contended that the words "in the same manner" have reference to the time for which the pension shall continue, and not to the time at which it shall commence. And yet this position must be assumed to render the argument on the other side at all consistent.

But the argument that the words "in the same manner," do not refer to the time of the commencement of the pension, and that, consequently, the pension can only commence at the date of the act of 1853, fails for another reason, which we deem entirely conclusive.

The first section of the act of July 29, 1848, in the body of it, grants pensions to all widows of revolutionary officers and soldiers, whose husbands, if living, would be entitled to pensions, without reference to the time of their marriage; and then comes in a final clause, in the nature of a proviso, which declares that widows "married after the 1st day of January, 1800, shall not be entitled to receive a pension" under said act. But for this final clause, or proviso, widows, married after the 1st of January, 1800, would have been entitled to pensions under said act of 1848, as well as those married prior to that date. The second section of the act of 1853 is nothing more nor less than a simple repeal of the final clause of the first section of the act of 1848. That final clause simply declares that widows married subsequent to the 1st of January, 1800, shall not be entitled to pensions under said act. The second section of the act of 1853 declares that the same class of widows shall be entitled to pensions, in the same manner as other widows are entitled who are embraced by said act of 1848. It thus entirely nullifies said final clause, and leaves the act of 1848 to be executed precisely as if it had never been inserted therein; consequently, widows married subsequently to the 1st of January, 1800, are left entitled to all the benefits of the act of 1848, in as full and perfect manner as if the clause excluding them therefrom had never existed.

When a subsequent statute is passed, which is directly repugnant to a prior statute, or any clause in a prior statute on the same subject, such prior statute or clause is thereby repealed, by implication, although no express words of repeal are used. This is a rule of law so well established that no one will deny it. The attorney for the petitioner in this case, in his brief before the Court of Claims, has cited numerous authorities upon this point; but it is deemed unnecessary to incumber this report by authorities in support of a position so well established. It is impossible to conceive of two propositions more directly repugnant to each other than the last clause of the first section of the act of 1848 and the second section of the act of 1853. The one declares that a certain class of widows shall not be entitled to certain pensions, while the other presumptively affirms that the same class of widows shall be entitled thereto. The latter clause, therefore, just as effectually repeals the former as any express words of repeal could have done.

If, then, the last clause of the first section of the act of 1848 has been repealed, what is the legal effect of such repeal upon the rights of widows who were excluded from the benefits of said act of 1848, by virtue of said final clause only, while it remained in force? On this point, also, the law is so well settled as to leave no ground for doubt or controversy. In the case of Doe vs. McQuilkin, (8th Blackf., 161,) in which it was decided that a certain statute was repealed by implication, the learned chief justice, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The law is well settled, that when a statute is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions passed and closed) as if it had never existed."

And for this reason, when a statute is repealed, whether by express words or by implication, it is so completely nullified, ab initio, that an action at law based upon it, pending at the time of the repeal, will fall to the ground, although the verdict of a jury had been rendered in the case, if the repeal takes place before final judgment. (Commonwealth vs. Kenhall, 21 Pick., 373.)

The same point has been more recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case arising under one of the celebrated compromise acts of 1850. A suit had been commenced in the United States circuit court of Indiana, to recover the $500 penalty imposed by the fourth section of the act of 12th February, 1793, "respecting fugitives from justice and persons escaping from the service of their masters," against any person obstructing a claimant, his agent, or attorney, in arresting a fugitive from labor, or rescuing such fugitive, after he had been arrested, or harboring or concealing the fugitive, knowing him to be such. While the action was pending, the act of September 18, 1850, was passed, the seventh section of which provides, that for committing either of said offenses, the party so offending shall be subject to a fine of $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months. Although the act of 1850 does not expressly repeal the fourth section of the act of 1793, yet the court held that it repealed it by implication. Judge Catron, in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The act of 1850 has repealed, so far as relates to penalty, the fourth section of the act of 1793." (Norris vs. Crocker, 13 How., 429.) And consequently it was decided that the action brought to recover the $500, under the act of 1793, was barred by the repeal, though pending at the time of the repeal. This was but the legitimate result of the well-known rule of law above stated, that "when a statute is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions passed and closed) as if it had never existed."

If it be true that the second section of the act of 1853 does repeal the last clause of the first section of the act of 1848, and if the effect of the repeal of that clause be to leave the act to be executed as if that clause had never existed, then it necessarily follows that widows married subsequent to the first of January, 1800, are entitled to all the benefits of the act of 1848, in precisely the same manner as if they had been expressly embraced by the act originally. And this view of the subject disposes of all questions as to whether the words "in the same manner" have a more limited or comprehensive application to the provisions of said act of 1848.

It has been said that the act of 1853 cannot be construed to take effect prior to the time of its passage; and thus we admit. We apprehend that it is not claimed by any one that it ever took effect before its passage. But when it did take effect, it took effect according to its own express provisions. It will hardly be contended that Congress lacks the power to grant a pension commencing at a day anterior to the date of the granting act. If so, then Congress has exceeded its powers in passing every revolutionary pension act, from that of May 15, 1828, down to the said act of 1853, at least—for every one of these acts grants a pension to commence at a date anterior to its passage. The acts of 1828 and 1848 each grant pensions commencing more than two years anterior to their dates; and the act of 1853 grants pensions commencing more than five years anterior to its date. Every act passed prior to said 3d of February, 1853, grants the pension from the 4th of March of some year anterior to its passage. Is there any such strong reason for supposing that Congress intended to depart from this uniform practice in passing the act of 1853 as will justify a forced construction of its language to give it that effect?

In some cases, where there are strong reasons for believing that the Legislature intended that a statute should have a different effect from that which the most obvious import of the words used would seem to indicate, a forced construction of the language is resorted to (whether justifiably or not) for the purpose of carrying out the supposed intention of the Legislature. But there can be no such excuse in this case. There can be no strong reason for supposing that Congress intended to make an invidious distinction between the pensions of widows married to revolutionary soldiers in 1800, and those married in 1799. It would be difficult to point out any difference between the merits of the two cases on which to base any such distinction.

In fact, if it were allowable to refer to the debates in the House in which said second section of the act of 1853 originated, at the time it was under consideration, in order to arrive at the intention of Congress, it could be shown that those who supported the measure in debate avowed their object to be to put widows married subsequent to the 1st of January, 1800, upon precisely the same footing as those married before that date. But inasmuch as courts do not allow what was said in debate, on the passage of an act, to control the construction of the act, we forbear any further reference to that subject.

In conclusion, the minority of your committee beg leave to say that, in their opinion, the Court of Claims, in giving the construction which it has given to the acts in question, has but made a fair and legitimate application of the fundamental rules of law for the interpretation of statutes, and that said decision cannot be impeached without disregarding rules of construction which have been consecrated by the wisdom of ages.

Entertaining these views, we cannot but regard it as the bounden duty of Congress to pass the bill which has been reported by the court, for the purpose of carrying its decision into effect in this case.

THOMAS G. DAVIDSON,
For the minority of the Committee.

Mr. STANTON. The majority report is very long, and if the House will be as well satisfied, I am willing that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior shall be read instead of the majority report.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object to that. Let both of them be read. I want to understand this whole case.

Mr. STANTON. Very well, let the majority report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the majority report.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to dispense with the further reading of that report. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. CLEMENS,] who insisted on it, seems to be satisfied, and has left his seat.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. STANTON. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will allow me five minutes.

Mr. STANTON. There are at least twenty gentlemen who want five minutes, and I do not know any reason why they are not as much entitled to it as the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. COBB. I was on the committee of conference when the bill in question was passed.

Mr. STANTON. Insist on the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make a request of the House, and that is, that the reports of the majority and the minority, and the letters of the Secretary of the Interior, may be reported in the Globe.

No objection was made.

Mr. CLEMENS. I was called out for a moment to see a gentleman. I should like to hear the rest of the majority report.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The following is the report of the majority of the Committee of Claims:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the report of the Court of Claims (No. 65) in the case of Jane Smith, have had the same under consideration, and now report:

The question presented in this case grows out of the second section of the act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853, which declares: "That the widows of all officers, non commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, of the revolutionary army, who were married subsequent to January, Anno Domini 1800, shall be entitled to a pension in the same manner as those who were married before that date."

The petitioner, Jane Smith, made application as one of the beneficiaries under the act. The claim was admitted, and her name was placed on the pension roll, and a pension, beginning on the day of the approval of the act, has since that time been paid to her, under the construction given to the act by the officers charged with its execution. This construction of the act is now called in question. The petitioner claims that of right, under the law, the pension allowed her should have begun on the 4th of March, 1848, because the second section of the act of 1853 has, by necessity, a direct reference to the act approved July 29, 1848, to fix the rate and duration of the pensions granted by it, and that, in consequence of this reference for those purposes, it necessarily follows that the same act must be referred to in like manner to fix the time when the pension should begin.

Before the Court of Claims the pretensions of the petitioner were supported by counsel who strenuously enforced their views on the court, while the solicitor of the United States, in his brief, printed among the papers of the case, declared that it seemed to him the claim was well founded. The only argument before the court, in support of the construction given to the act by the executive department of the Government, was contained in a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions to the solicitor of the United States, dated on the 25th of May, 1856, and written in reply to one to him from the solicitor, inclosing a copy of the "brief" of petitioner's counsel, which will be found at page 10, in the report from the Court of Claims. After hearing the case, the court overruled the construction given to the act by the Department of the Interior, and decided that the claimant was "entitled to the arrears of her pension, from the 4th day of March, 1848, to the 3d of February, 1853," the date of the act in question.

This decision is based by the court upon the ground that, inasmuch as it was clear that the act of 1853 was passed with reference to the act of 1848, and it was necessary to go to that act to determine the intent and meaning of the act of 1853 for some purposes, it was therefore proper to go to it for all purposes. In the opinion of the court, the expression in the act which declared that the widows who were married after the 1st day of January, 1800, should "be entitled to a pension in the same manner as those who were married before that date," was decisive of the whole question. Speaking with reference to this expression, the court said: "In what manner, then, were those who were married before 1801 entitled to a pension?" and then say: "The answer to this is that they were entitled to a pension equal to that which their husbands would have received under existing laws, commencing on the 4th of March, 1848, and continuing during their widowhood; and this answers the question in all its details, so far as relates to 'the manner.'" The court then proceed to show that "it follows as a necessary consequence that a widow who was married subsequent to the year 1800 is entitled to a pension equal to that which her husband would have received under existing laws, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1848, and to continue during her widowhood; because she is entitled to it in the same manner as if she had been married on or before the 1st of January, 1800."

From this language of the court it is at once apparent that the judges of the Court of Claims construe the words "in the same manner" as necessarily referring to the clause in the act of July 29, 1848, which fixed the time when the pensions granted under that act should "commence," as well as to the other portions of it, which determined their rate and duration. This construction, in the opinion of your committee, is clearly erroneous, and is in direct conflict with well-settled principles of law, and with the plain significance and meaning of the word "manner."

It is an elementary principle in the construction of statutes that they take effect from their date of promulgation, unless they contain within themselves provisions fixing some other time for their going into operation. The act of 1853 contains no such provision in express terms; and, under the operation of this rule, it must have gone into effect on the day of its date, and the rights created by it must have then begun to exist, unless there is something in the act which necessarily gives them a different time of beginning. The Court of Claims in this instance say that that something in the act under consideration is to be found in the expression "in the same manner." Your committee think that this is a mere assumption on the part of the court, growing out of a misconception as to the meaning of the word "manner," and that it is in no degree sustained by the authorities to which they refer.

There are three distinct and separate facts necessarily involved in every particular event or occurrence which transpires, to wit: the place where, the manner how, and the time when. Neither of these classes of facts have any necessary connection with, or relation to, each other. The manner or mode in which a particular thing is done may be the same at different times and places. And it is the same with respect to "rights," as connected with individuals. Every "right" is distinguished by three distinct features, which exist independently of each other. If the right be one to real property, there are—first, the thing with respect to which the right exists; second, the nature of that right and its extent; and third, the time when it began to exist. If the right be a personal one, then, also, there are three distinct facts involved, namely: first, what is its nature and extent? second, who is entitled to it? and third, when did it begin to exist in his favor?

In the case under consideration, an act of Congress created a right—first, of a particular nature and extent; and second, in favor of a particular class of persons. Nothing whatever was said as to the time when the persons entitled to this right should begin to enjoy it. The rule of law is, that a legislative act takes effect from its date. In this case, however, owing to the language of the act creating the right, it is necessary to refer to another act, in order to determine the nature and extent of the right; and because of this necessary reference to that act for that particular purpose, it is insisted that the same act must be referred to for another purpose—that is, to fix the time when the right accrued. The act itself is complete upon its face; first as to the creation of the right to a pension; and second, as to the persons who were to be entitled to enjoy it. And it is also complete as to the time when their enjoyment of this right to a pension is to begin by the operation of that rule of law which makes all laws take effect from their date; so that there is no necessity to look beyond the act itself, but for a single purpose, namely: to ascertain the nature and extent of the right; or, in other words, the rate and duration of the pension. And now your committee ask, if there is no necessity to look elsewhere, why look?

There is nothing whatever in the expression "in the same manner" to require, or even justify, a reference to another act to fix the time when the right to a pension is to begin. The word "manner" not only has no relation to time, but it is used invariably to describe the mode or fashion in which a particular transaction or event transpires, or thing exists, in contradistinction to the time when it transpires or exists. And this use of the word is distinctly shown in the very sentence of the Constitution of the United States to which the court referred for a very different purpose. "The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but that Congress may at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators," says the Constitution. Here the word "manner" is used in its only proper sense, as referring to the mode how, as contradistinguished from the times when, and the places where; and it will be in vain for any one to look into dictionaries or books of synonyms, in the hope of finding any instance in which it has a different signification.

Neither is there anything in the case of Ludlow's heirs, 23 Ohio Reports, 571, cited by the court, which tends in the opposite direction. Indeed, when critically examined, it will be found that the language of the court in that case is, in point of fact, opposed to the conclusion it was cited in support of; for the word manner is used in it in the sense of the mode how, and it declares that "when in one statute a reference is made to an existing law in prescribing the rule or manner in which a particular thing shall be done," "the effect generally is not to revive," "the statute referred to for the purpose for which it was originally enacted, but merely for the purpose of carrying into execution the statute in which the reference is made." If this be true, and there can be no doubt that it is, then the act of 1853 alone is to be executed; and as that act is complete in itself, except as to the rate and duration of the pensions granted by it, the act of 1848 can be referred to to ascertain their rate and duration only, and for no other purpose whatever.

Your committee, then, believe that, upon a fair interpretation of the words of the act of 1853, in obedience to the established rules of statutory construction, the pension of the petitioner rightfully began on the 3d day of March, 1853, the date of the act; and this view, as to the intention of the law maker, is, in their opinion, supported by the history of the act itself.

On January 3, 1853, the Senate took up the bill "to revive a portion of the act for the relief of widows of deceased soldiers," and Mr. Hamlin (pages 185, 186 of Congressional Globe) moved to amend it by adding an additional section. This additional section is in the very words of the second section of the act of 1853, under which the question under consideration has arisen. Mr. Rusk, in speaking of the bill before the Senate, said that "it revives the pension from the expiration of the act of 1816;" upon which Mr. Borland remarked: "It commences from this time." Mr. Butler then observed: "I am entirely confident the last section, added by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin,] will have the effect to give a pension from 1834, when the act was passed."

The next day the Senate resumed the consideration of the same bill, when the amendment of Mr. Hamlin was concurred in without a division. Mr. Borland then said, (Congressional Globe, 204, 205:) "That, during the discussion yesterday, some objection was made to this bill, upon the ground that its phraseology was not sufficiently precise to define at what time the pensions proposed by it should commence. I propose, therefore, to amend the bill in the first section, by adding, after the word 'extended,' the words 'from and after the passage of this act.' &c." This amendment was also agreed to without a division, and the bill was passed.

The Senate bill No. 477, which was received by the House on the 6th of January, 1853, (House Journal, 110) was a different bill from the one just mentioned, as it was entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans." The House amended this last bill on the 17th of January, (House Journal, 136, 137,) and sent it back to the Senate. When this bill went back to the Senate, as amended by the House, it had but one section. Mr. Hamlin then moved to amend it by adding as a second section the same amendment that had been added as a fourth section to the bill "to revive a portion of the act for the relief of deceased soldiers." When Mr. Hamlin made his motion he said:

"It will be recollected by the Senate that a few days since a bill passed this body which includes precisely what the amendment of the House to this bill contains, but we also added to that bill a section in the same words as that I have now offered; and if we adopt it it will do precisely what I and I therefore hope that my amendment will be adopted." This was agreed to, and the amendment of the House to the original bill, as thus amended, was concurred in, and the bill sent back to the House. The House disagreed to this amendment of the Senate, which now constitutes the second section of the act of 1853, and the bill containing it did not become a law until after there had been a number of disagreeing votes on the part of the House, and the contest had given rise to two committees of conference. (House Journal, pages 164, 201.)

From this narrative, it is certain that when the section was first presented to the Senate as an amendment to the bill "to revive a portion of the act for the relief of widows of deceased soldiers," it was intended that all of the pensions to be granted should commence at the date of the act; and that there could have been no intention on the part of the House to extend the grant proposed to be made by the Senate, because the House was opposed to this particular grant altogether, and only consented to its being ingrafted on the original bill after a long contest. And as there is nothing in the act itself, or in the circumstances connected with its passage, to take the pensions created by it out of the rule which makes all legislative acts take effect from their date, when they contain no provision for their going into operation at another time, so neither is there anything to take it out of the rule, in the nature of the claim itself.

These pensions are not given in payment of debts. The beneficiaries under this, and all other acts of a similar character, had no legal or equitable claim on the Government. The pensions conferred on them are mere liberality bestowed by gratitude, and not rights yielded to justice; and under such circumstances there can be no reason for wresting the words of the act from their usual signification, or doing violence to the ordinary rules of interpretation, to enlarge its construction. If the Government has not already given enough to the objects of its bounty, embraced in the provisions of the act of 1853, it would be far better to make additional provision for them by direct legislation, than to accomplish that purpose by sanctioning a principle in the construction of statutes which will be brought into precedent and may hereafter be applied so as to be productive of great public mischief.

For these reasons your committee now report back the bill from the Court of Claims with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The following is the letter of the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, February 25, 1857.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, requesting me to report the "number of widows now drawing pensions, under the second section of the act approved February 3, 1853, and also what amount of money will be required to pay said pensions from the 4th of March, 1848, up to the time of the passage of said act of 1853," I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication and accompanying papers from the Commissioner of Pensions, by which it will appear that the number of widows now drawing pensions under the second section of the said act, is two thousand seven hundred and ten, and that the sum of $1,187,500 will be required to pay pensions of this class from the 4th of March, 1848, to February 3, 1853. It may be observed, however, that this sum does not reach the amount which will be necessary to give full effect to the decision of the Court of Claims, since it must necessarily be augmented in proportion to the number of pensioners which may be added to the rolls subsequent to the 30th of June, 1858; and this additional amount derives greater importance from the fact that the surviving children of those widows who shall have died subsequently to the passage of said act, without having been pensioned, would be, by the established practice of the Department, entitled to the arrears due from the 4th of March, 1848, to the date of their mothers' deaths, respectively.

In submitting these facts, I deem it not irrelevant to the object of the inquiries of the Senate to advert briefly to the grounds upon which the Department placed such a construction upon the second section of the act of February 3, 1853, as limited the commencement of the gratuity provided by it to the date of its passage.

1st. The allowance of large amounts of arrears of pension is at variance with the whole legislation of Congress upon the subject, as will be perceived by referring to the acts granting such gratuities. The act of March 18, 1818, and the supplementary acts of May 1, 1820, and March 1, 1823, make the gratuities granted commence from the date of the completion of the proof. Under the act of May 15, 1828, the allowance is made to commence from March 3, 1826; and the gratuity provided by the act of June 7, 1832, commences, by express provision, from March 4, 1831; so with the acts granting provisions to widows; for, although the act of July 4, 1836, allows the pension to run back to the 4th of March, 1831, it was clearly for the reason that the husband had already been allowed a pension under the act of 1832, commencing at that date; since by subsequent legislation the widow is prohibited from drawing a pension for the period during which her husband actually received one under the act of 1832. The gratuity granted by the act of July 7, 1838, is made to commence on the 4th of March, 1836; and that given by the act of July 29, 1848, is, in like manner, made to commence on the 4th of March of that year. It will be observed that the only distinction in these classes of female pensioners is the date of marriage; and that alone has been the guide for Congress in fixing the date at which the pensions should commence.

2d. That it was not, in fact, the intention of Congress, in enacting the second section of the act of 1853, (which was introduced as an amendment to a pending bill,) to give it a retrospective operation, is sufficiently manifest from the debate to which it gave rise when the law was under consideration in the Senate, (see Congressional Globe for Thirty-Second Congress, second session, page 201, et seq.) and from the further fact that laws have been passed granting arrears of pensions, the date of the commencement of the pension has been expressly stated in the act, so far as I am informed.

3d. That the words "in the same manner," as used in the second section of said act, even in their technical sense, do not necessarily include the time designated in any preceding act, as the date at which the pension should commence. Two cases are cited to sustain the contrary view; but the first, (in which the opinion of Judge Hitchcock is quoted,) would seem not to go beyond the practice of the Pension Office, as his language is: "When in one statute a reference is made to an existing law, in prescribing the rule or manner in which a particular thing shall be done, or for the purpose of ascertaining the powers with which persons named in the referring statute shall be clothed, the effect generally is not to revive or continue in force the statute referred to for the purposes for which it was originally enacted; but merely for the purpose of carrying into execution the statute in which the reference is made."

And the second, (the case in Congress,) if it can be regarded as having any bearing on the point in question, gives force to the decision of the bureau, since the House of Representatives, after careful consideration, concluded that the word "manner," in the Constitution, did not authorize Congress to prescribe to the States the single district system. Why should those words be held to have special relation to the act of 1848? The widows who were pensioned under the acts of 1836 and 1838, were married prior to the year 1800, as well as those who were pensioned under the act of 1848; and if the terms used, "in the same manner," can relate to the act of 1848, why may they not, for like reasons, be held to relate as well to the act of 1836, which made the pension commence from the 4th of March, 1831?

4th. By the act of June 7, 1832, pensions were provided for those officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war who had served at least six months therein. Soon after the passage of this law, it was held that the widows and children of such of those officers and soldiers as had died subsequently to the passage of the act, without claiming its benefits, were entitled to the amounts due as arrears, and that the children of widows who were entitled to pensions under any of the general pension laws, were likewise entitled to unclaimed amounts due their mothers. This practice has continued to the present time. The question as to its legality has been recently very fully considered; and, although held to have been at the first clearly without warrant of law, yet, in view of its long continuance, and the fact that Congress, by making successive appropriations (founded upon specific estimates) to pay such allowances, had given a legislative sanction to this interpretation of the executive department, it was not thought expedient to reverse the practice at this time. If this course has been proper, if the action of Congress has thus legitimized the practice as to arrears under the act of June 7, 1832, may it not now with equal force be held that the interpretation given to the act of February 3, 1853, has in like manner been sanctioned and approved by the subsequent appropriations made by Congress; especially as the small amount of $34,000, estimated as sufficient to carry the act into effect for a period of nearly eighteen months, (commencing at the date of the act,) was so wholly at variance with the idea of relating the period of the commencement of the pension back to the 4th of March, 1848?

While it is competent for Congress in its wisdom to direct that the class of pensioners shall be paid from the 4th of March, 1848, or even from an earlier period, up to the time at which they have been allowed to commence by the decision of this Department, it is equally clear that the claim, as a right, when presented to Congress, has no foundation. The pensions granted by the act of 1853, as before remarked, are mere gratuities, and seem to have been viewed as such in the discussion referred to, and as such, future payments may be wholly withheld, by the repeal of the law, should Congress at any time be so disposed, or the exigencies of the country should require such action; and this, without the violation of any legal or vested right.

It is deemed proper to add, that if there were a reasonable certainty that the amounts of money now sought to be drawn from the Treasury, in virtue of the legal construction placed upon the act of 1853, by the Court of Claims, would, in the event of the favorable action of Congress, reach the hands of the designated beneficiaries, without abatement, the proposed appropriation, large as it is, might be less objectionable; but the experience of the Department establishes the fact that intermediate parties are not only the agents in the origin and prosecution of such claims, but the largest sharers in the bounty their importunities extort from the Government.

I am respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. McCLELLAND, Secretary.

Hon. J. M. Mason, President of the Senate.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STANTON demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 143, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ahl, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Bennett, Bingham, Bishop, Bliss, Bowie, Bratton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Cace, Cavanaugh, Chadice, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clark B. Cochran, John Cochran, Colfax, Comus, Corning, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dimmick, Dodd, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garrett, Gillis, Gilman, Gilmer, Gouch, Goodwin, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Haskin, Haws, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Landy, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Nichols, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Russell, Sandberg, Savage, Scott, Seward, John Sherman, Shorter, Sickles, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, George Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Wood, Woodson, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—143.

NAYS—Messrs. Barstada, Bocock, Boyce, Burnett, Caskie, Clemens, Cobb, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Garnett, Harlan, Hopkins, Houston, George W. Jones, Keitt, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Leitcher, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Millson, Moore, John S. Phelps, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, and Valandigham—35.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. CLARK, of New York, stated, during the call of the roll, that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted "ay."

Mr. STANTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled a bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859; when the Speaker signed the same.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view to take up the loan bill, I ask that the miscellaneous appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate thereto—of which there are sixty-four—be taken up and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON THE LOAN BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but, before that motion is put, I move that all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the loan bill, be closed in two hours after the committee shall again resume the consideration of the same.

Mr. GROW. I rise to a question of order. That bill has not been considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it is not, therefore, in order to close debate on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. The bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It was taken up, and there was debate upon it.

Mr. GROW. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go into Committee of the Whole House takes precedence.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend by the adoption of the following resolution, which I send to the Speaker's chair:

Resolved, That the House go into a Committee of the Whole to-day, and take up the Private Calendar, and such bills as are not objected to, shall be laid aside to be reported to the House. In case objection is made to a bill, five minutes shall be allowed to state objections; and five minutes shall be allowed to reply to such objections, and a vote shall then be taken without further debate.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GROW. I insist on my motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is this objection day?

The SPEAKER. It is; and there are ten pages of private bills on the Calendar which have never been read in committee.

Mr. KELSEY. There are fourteen pages more of bills which have been on the Calendar the whole session, and have not been considered at all.

Mr. LETCHER. I think we can compromise this matter in some way. I propose that we go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar to-day, and that to-morrow we take up the loan bill.

Several MEMBERS. Agreed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to ask the Chair if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRIS] did not give notice that he would call up the Maryland contested-election case to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. He did.

Mr. GROW. We can postpone that case. I insist on my motion.

Mr. CLEMENS. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLEMENS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. SAVAGE. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules to make the old soldiers' bill a special order?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will take precedence.

Mr. SAVAGE. I think my motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. Upon what ground?

Mr. SAVAGE. Upon the ground that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is under a general rule allowing suspension. My motion is one to suspend the rules specially.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman.

The question was taken on the motion submitted by Mr. Grow; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 108, noes 32.

So the rules were suspended.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. READY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

This being objection day, the bills on the Calendar were called over, and those to which no objection was made were, without debate, laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass.

MENOMONEE INDIANS.

A bill (H. R. No. 329) to authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to adjudicate and settle certain claims against the Menomonee Indians. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

GEORGE CHORPENNING.

A bill (H. R. No. 330) for the relief of George Chorpenning and Elizabeth Woodward, deceased, and the children of said Elizabeth Woodward. [Objected to by Mr. KILGORE.]

DENT, VANTINE AND COMPANY.

A bill (H. R. No. 331) for the relief of Messrs. Dent, Vantine & Company, for provisions furnished to Indians in California during the years 1851 and 1852. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the committee rise, in order that the House may adopt some rule by which we can get on with the business of the Calendar.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What does the gentleman propose when we get into the House?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. To pass some resolution by which cases upon the Calendar, objected to, and which have not been attended to, may be heard.

Mr. KELSEY. I ask that my proposition may be read.

The Clerk again read Mr. KELSEY's resolution. Mr. KELSEY. That affords all parties a chance to be heard.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to withdraw my objection to the bill for the relief of George Chorpenning and Elizabeth Underwood.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. The proposition of the gentleman from New York suspends all the rules, and I hope that it will not be adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. The proposition only allows five minutes' debate, and there are upon this Calendar cases involving as well large sums of money as important principles. I hope that the time will be extended.

Mr. QUITMAN. Does the resolution propose that we shall commence with the Calendar, or begin where we left off on the last day?

Mr. KELSEY. When we get into the House I will modify my proposition so that I think it will meet the views of members.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I demand tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLEMENS and BUFFINGTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 73.

So the committee refused to rise.

HIRAM PAULDING.

A bill (H. R. No. 337) for the relief of Hiram Paulding. [Objected to by Mr. HALL, of Ohio.]

Mr. SEWARD moved that the committee rise. The committee refused to rise.

JOHN M. BROOKE.

A bill (H. R. No. 338) for the relief of John M. Brooke. [Objected to by Mr. LEITER.]

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the committee rise. I am sure that we are only wasting time now in the manner in which we are proceeding.

The committee refused to rise.

PETER VAN BUSKIRK.

A bill (H. R. No. 340) providing an increase of pension to Peter Van Buskirk, of Washington city, in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the committee rise. From conversations which I have had with some gentlemen, I believe that every bill upon the Calendar will be objected to. What is the use of our sitting here and listening to reports read, unless we accomplish something practical?

Mr. COLFAX. I wish to remind the gentleman from Iowa that last objection day he made the same statement, that we would accomplish nothing, and yet we went on, refusing to rise, and passed some eighty-two bills.

Mr. LEITER. I wish to call attention to the fact, that bills of as much merit as those laid aside have been permitted to remain upon the Calendar unheard. Now, some plan should be adopted by which all the cases should have an equal chance.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I raise the point of order that it is not in order for the gentleman to interrupt the reading of a bill on this, objection day, by making a motion that the committee rise. Let us go on and transact the business properly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEITER. Then I object to the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The committee refused to rise.

Mr. BOWIE. I want to make a point of order. Can a member object after a bill has been received and read? If there be objection, it must be made at the time it is called up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

JOHN HARRIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of John Harris, of Warren county, Kentucky.

The bill grants a pension, at the rate of ninety-six dollars per annum, to John Harris, of Warren county, Kentucky, commencing on the 1st of January, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

It appears from the evidence in the case, corroborated and confirmed by the records of the Pension bureau, that the petitioner, now nearly ninety years of age, enlisted in the year 1792, from the State of New York, as a common soldier in a company of light dragoons, first commanded by Captain Lee, and subsequently by Captain James Taylor, and joined the Army of the United States in what is called "Wayne's war;" that he served faithfully from the period of his enlistment to the close of this memorable war, when he was discharged in 1793; that in one of the hard-fought battles in which he was engaged he received a wound, yet visible upon his person; that the petitioner, formerly a man of competency and good estate, is now, by habitual kindness and generosity, reduced to great poverty and distress; that he has heretofore applied for a pension, but because his case was not embraced in any of the general pension laws, his application has been rejected. The committee, without recurring to many interesting considerations which commend this old man's case to the favorable consideration of Congress, report a bill for his relief.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. These cases that we are now calling over, have had a calling since the first part of the Calendar was called, and I now submit the motion that we go back and commence at the beginning of the Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There are a good many cases here that have not been called over.

Mr. PALMER. It is perfectly evident that we will waste time by continuing in committee, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] insists on it that he will object to every bill on the Calendar.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I did not object to that bill.

Mr. PALMER. There is no use in reading over these long reports. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say a word. I beg to address myself to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES], who objects to the bill. I am sure that if he was to consider for a moment the circumstances of that old man's case he would not object. I appeal to him to withdraw his objection, with the agreement that there shall be a vote upon it in the House by yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection, if that be the agreement.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will make the same agreement in regard to other similar cases. Let them all be put upon the same footing.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am willing to do so with every one of them. I wish to say here, to the gentleman from Kentucky, that I know two gentlemen who were soldiers in the same war of Wayne, who went from the State of Kentucky. One of them is a cripple, and has been confined to the house for years. If we pass laws for some of these men we ought to make a general law for them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend will allow me to say that I will go as far as the farthest for the purpose of putting these men on the pension list. The fact that other men who deserve pensions have not received them, ought not to prevent this man getting a pension.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. A general law would include the whole of this class of cases. I withdraw my objection, with the understanding that there shall be a vote upon it in the House by yeas and nays.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask to have the same rule applied to all other cases. Let us have the yeas and nays in the House on all cases that are objected to.

Mr. HUGHES. I inquire of the Chair if these agreements to take the yeas and nays do not require the unanimous consent of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the committee has no right to make such an order.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not wish to interfere with this or any other case, but I do object to having rules made which will require the taking of yeas and nays in the House, and consume the entire day.

Mr. PALMER. As I understand that these objections will not be persisted in, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think the most sensible and reasonable thing the committee can do, would be to go to the bills that have been last reported to the committee, and that have never been called over. There are a good many of those bills that have never been called over at all. All the others have been called; and I think the most just and reasonable course would be to go to the part of the Calendar that has never been called over.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a point of order. I wish to know if there is any question before the Chair which justifies debate?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I object to debate.

Mr. PALMER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

JOHN CAMPBELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of John Campbell.

The bill increases the pension of four dollars per month, given to John Campbell by special act of Congress, to eight dollars per month, the increase commencing on the 3d of December, 1855; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and required so to place the name of John Campbell upon the invalid pension roll.

The report shows that John Campbell enlisted on the 29th March, 1814, in the service of the United States, and was subsequently wounded in his right thigh and left arm by a musket ball. That for said wounds he was placed on the pension list, by special act of Congress, on the 8th of August, 1846, at the rate of four dollars per month; said pension to commence on the 1st January, 1846. Since that time additional evidence has been filed, showing that said Campbell is now wholly disabled by reason of the aforesaid wounds.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY BLATTENBERGER.

A bill (H. R. No. 343) granting a pension to Mary Blattenberger, widow of John Blattenberger. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

EDWIN M. CHAFFEE.

A bill (H. R. No. 348) for the relief of Edwin M. Chaffee. [Objected to by Mr. CURRY.]

R. L. B. CLARKE.

A bill (H. R. No. 351) for the relief of R. L. B. Clarke. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

ENOCH B. TALCOTT.

A bill (H. R. No. 352) for the payment of extra compensation to Enoch B. Talcott, for his services and expenses in recovering Government funds embezzled by Jacob Richardson. [Objected to by Mr. LEITER.]

Mr. DUFFEE. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his objections to the bill for the relief of Mr. Chaffee, and let a vote be taken on it in the House.

Objection was not withdrawn.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I think it is time for the committee to rise, as I see the sentinel [Mr. LEITER] rise at the outposts, and stand there with his objections. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

NAHUM WARD.

A bill (C. C. No. 27) for the relief of Nahum Ward.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that that bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I renew my motion that the committee rise. I think the committee is not disposed to do business properly.

The motion was not agreed to.

SAMUEL MILLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 354) for the relief of the heirs of Captain Samuel Miller. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

WILLIAM EDMONDSTON.

A bill (H. R. No. 355) for the relief of the heirs of William Edmondston. [Objected to by Mr. MILLSON.]

ABEL M. BUTLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 357) for the relief of Abel M. Butler.

Mr. COBB. I suggest that that bill be amended so as to restrict the right of entry to lands open for entry at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre.

Mr. FENTON. I accept that amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The report, as I understand, says that this claim was rejected at the Pension Office because there was no record evidence. I know that record evidence is not required; therefore, I must object.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I renew my motion that the committee do now rise. We make just as much progress in this way as in calling the Calendar.

The motion was not agreed to.

GEORGE P. MARSH.

An act (S. No. 1) for the relief of George P. Marsh. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will let this bill go to the House and have the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

HANNAH LITTEL.

A bill (H. R. No. 358) for the relief of Hannah Littell, and for other purposes. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

JOHN P. BROWN.

A bill (H. R. No. 360) for the relief of John P. Brown. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

WILLIAM RICH.

A bill (H. R. No. 361) for the relief of William Rich.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Rich, late United States secretary of legation in Mexico, $830, it being the difference between the compensation allowed to a secretary of legation and that to a chargé d'affaires, for the period during which he acted in the latter capacity.

It appears from the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the petitioner was secretary of legation under the Hon. Robert P. Leitch, United States Minister at Mexico; that Mr. Leitch left Mexico on the 2d of August, 1852, and his successor, the Hon. Mr. Conkling, presented his credentials on the 30th of November, ensuing; that, during this interval, a period of three months and thirty days, the petitioner acted as chargé d'affaires, and has only received for such service the compensation of a secretary of legation. He asks to be allowed, for the period above named, the difference between the compensation of a secretary of legation and that of a chargé d'affaires. Letters, one of May 30, 1854, from Secretary Marcy, and the other of March 6, 1853, from Secretary Cass, sustain the foregoing statement of facts. They further show that, during the interval named, there was no other accredited representative in Mexico from this Government, and that the services of Mr. Rich, while acting as chargé d'affaires, were faithful and important, and, in the opinion of the Department, fully entitle him to the compensation claimed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rising informally, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the following bills:

An act (S. No. 3-9) for the allotment of lands to certain New York Indians, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 398) for the relief of William Money;

An act (S. No. 403) for the relief of George Stealey;

An act (S. No. 400) to surrender the stock of the United States in the Dismal Swamp Canal Company upon certain conditions to said company;

An act (S. No. 407) for the relief of Miles Judson, surety on the official bond of the late Purser Andrew D. Crosby;

An act (S. No. 417) for the relief of Willis A. Gorman;

An act (S. No. 418) for the relief of Captain J. B. Montgomery;

An act (S. No. 411) for the relief of Ebenezer Ricker;

An act (S. No. 322) for the relief of the purchasers of public lands within the timber reserve opposite Fort Kearny, and for the settlers within the Winnebago agency reservation, and the Fort Atkinson reservation, all in the State of Iowa;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill;

An act (H. R. C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky;

An act (H. R. No. 203) for the relief of George W. Biscoe;

An act (H. R. No. 169) making appropriations for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon;

An act (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander;

An act (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simeon Stedman;

An act (H. R. No. 335) for the relief of Susanah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman;

An act (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of Captain Stanton Sholes;

An act (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Joseph Webb;

An act (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey;

An act (H. R. No. 456) granting an invalid pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, (with an amendment);

An act (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 455) for the relief of Micajah Brooks;

An act (H. R. No. 490) for the relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming;

An act (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 504) for the relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughrey, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield; and

An act (H. R. No. 572) for the relief of Lewis W. Broadwell.

The Committee of the Whole House resumed, and proceeded with the consideration of the Private Calendar.

MARY ANN HENRY.

A bill (H. R. No. 362) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Ann Henry.

The bill authorizes and requires the Commissioner of Pensions to inscribe the name of Mrs. Mary Ann Henry, of Pennsylvania, widow of the late Captain Henry Henry, of the United States Navy, on the naval pension roll, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, to commence from the 26th of July, 1857, the day of his death, and to continue during her life, unless she shall again marry, in which case the pension shall cease from the date of such marriage.

Mr. FLORENCE. I propose to amend that bill by striking out "fifty dollars" and inserting "thirty dollars" per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then objected to.

Mr. OWEN JONES. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

HENRY MILLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 363) granting an invalid pension to Henry Miller.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I can say that that is a very just claim, and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is a violation of the general law.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to the bill.

Mr. REILLY. It is no use trying to pass any bill here; I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I consider it an insult offered to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who have been engaged in investigating these cases, and have presented the bills in good faith, that these causeless objections should be made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have a substantial objection to this bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am willing that this bill shall go to the House, and a vote shall be taken upon it by yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will agree to that. Indeed, I am willing that you may go through the whole Calendar in the House, if you will take a vote upon each of the bills by yeas and nays; but this is no way to legislate, begging gentlemen to withdraw their objections, when they have substantial objections to bills.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to the bill.

MARY B. DUSENBERRY.

A bill (H. R. No. 364) for the relief of Mary B. Dusenberry.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would inquire if this case does not fall under the general law passed yesterday?

Mr. BOWIE. No, sir; this is an original application.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. No law has ever been passed providing for cases of this kind. The husband of this lady was educated at West Point, was in the quartermaster's department, a staff officer, and died of sickness in time of peace.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not object to the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to it.

JEREMIAH WRIGHT.

A bill (H. R. No. 365) granting a pension to Jeremiah Wright.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That bill was objected to the other day. It is upon the same principle as bill No. 363. If gentlemen will give us a vote upon it in the House by yeas and nays, I will not object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Well, let us lay bill No. 363 aside also, on the same condition.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I object to having the yeas and nays upon these bills in the House. We occupy enough time upon them here.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from New York, that Congress proposes to adjourn on Thursday next. The Government will pay him and every other member his salary from now until the first Monday in next December; and if these bills ought to be passed at all, you ought to take time to do it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Has bill No. 363, granting an invalid pension to Henry Miller, been laid aside also?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. It was objected to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.]

CREEK INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

A bill (H. R. No. 367) to provide for the examination and payment of certain claims of citizens of Georgia and Alabama, on account of losses sustained by depredations of the Creek Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. That bill is too important to be passed without discussion. I object to it.

Mr. SHORTER. If the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection, and let the bill go before the House, we will give him ample time for discussion.

Mr. MORGAN. I know how it will be, if the bill goes to the House. The previous question will be called, and there will be no chance for discussion.

Mr. SHORTER. The previous question shall not be called until there has been opportunity for ample discussion; but we have been here for ten years with this claim, and have never yet had a hearing.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will say to my colleague that this is a very worthy claim, and I hope he will let it go.

Mr. MORGAN. It may be a very worthy claim, but I must object to it.

Mr. EUSTIS. It seems to be very evident that it is impossible for us to proceed with business. I have several bills upon the Calendar, but I am sure they will be objected to; and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. COLFAX. That motion has been made and voted down a dozen times; and I think gentlemen ought to submit to the decision of the committee.

Mr. EUSTIS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I wish to say that, a few days since, I made objection to a joint resolution in which my friend from New York [Mr. KELLY] is interested; and I desire now to withdraw that objection.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I trust we shall go on with the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the friends of this bill are willing that, if it is brought into the House, it shall be put in such a position that it shall go over to the next session, when it can be discussed; and I have no objection to that.

Mr. STANTON. Let it be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be postponed until some day certain next session.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object to going back.

FERDINAND COXE.

A bill (C. C. No. 84) for the relief of Ferdinand Coxe.

Mr. LEITER. I object to that bill.

Mr. COLFAX. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection. This claim is recommended by the Secretary of State and by the Court of Claims.

Mr. LEITER. It is no better off than the rest of them. Cases which committees have unanimously recommended have been objected to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to say that when I made the objection to bill No. 367, I stated that I objected to going back. That was the objection I made. If the point before the Chair did not involve that question my objection did not apply.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a proposition to the committee to which I think they will agree. I propose that the committee shall rise in order that I may offer the following resolution in the House:

Resolved, That when the House shall again have resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, it shall be in order only to take up the Senate bills in their order, and those not objected to shall be reported to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass, and that upon all such as shall give rise to discussion, debate shall be allowed and limited to five minutes for and five minutes against each bill, when the vote shall be taken.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the pending bill?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to it, and I desire to make a proposition to the committee. I propose that all these bills, between this point and the end of the Calendar, be objected to in lump, and that we begin again at the top of the Calendar. I tell gentlemen that that will obviate a good deal of this difficulty.

Mr. GROW. The first part of the Calendar has been called over three times, and there are a large number of bills that have never been called at all.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to submit a proposition to the committee.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I object, and I will state the reason. I do so because the very next case is a case, which, at a former meeting of the committee, was objected to. It is a bill for the relief of Peter Parker, who was acting chargé in China, during the absence of the minister, and this money is due to him. It is recommended by the Court of Claims, recommended by the State Department, and recommended by the committee. When that bill is passed I shall be willing to do almost everything.

Mr. EUSTIS. It is perfectly evident that neither that bill, nor any other, will be passed today.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe the objection was withdrawn to bill No. 84.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I renewed it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Virginia, will allow it to go to the House and a vote to be taken upon it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir; I have made a suggestion that would save time and difficulty, but it is objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

PETER PARKER.

A bill (C. C. No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to that bill.

Mr. EUSTIS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHAFFEE and FLORENCE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 63, noes 53.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. READY) reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report sundry bills to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass, and one bill with the recommendation that it do not pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (No. 570) for the relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon;

An act (No. 571) for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased;

An act (No. 533) for the relief of Shove Chase, of New York; and

An act (No. 486) for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had postponed indefinitely a bill of the House (No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchenson.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the previous question upon all the bills.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want a separate vote upon two or three of these bills, and I understand that the yeas and nays are to be taken upon House bills Nos. 361 and 365.

Mr. BOWIE. I think the bill of the House (No. 364) for the relief of Mary B. Dusenbery was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think I objected to that bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to give the gentleman the benefit of my record. I have kept a record of the bills which have been laid aside; I marked this bill as objected to. The gentleman objecting then, I think, withdrew his objection; and I have marked the bill as being laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection to the bill being reported to the House if we can have the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. And I hope, at the same time, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] will withdraw his objection to bills (No. 84 and No. 85) for the relief of Ferdinand Cox, and for the relief of Peter Parker.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Very well. I will withdraw my objection, unconditionally, to the bills which have been named; but, at the same time, I hope House bill (No. 325) for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus Horner, deceased, will be, by unanimous consent, reported to the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that unanimous consent has been given to allow bills of the House Nos. 363, 84, and 85, to be reported to the House?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he had better take the report of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole as it comes to the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Very well. Let us dispose of the bills reported, and the others can come up afterwards.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill No. 363?

Mr. MORGAN. I want the business of the House to proceed regularly.

NAHUM WARD.

A bill (C. C. No. 27) for the relief of Nahum Ward.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House have reported that bill, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The report of the Committee of the Whole House was concurred in, and the bill was rejected.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN CAMPBELL, WILLIAM RICH.

A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of John Campbell.

A bill (H. R. No. 361) for the relief of William Rich.

The SPEAKER stated that the bills were reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that they do pass.

The bills were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLIOTT moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HARRIS.

A bill (No. 341) for the relief of John Harris, of Warren county, Kentucky.

The SPEAKER stated that the bill had been reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The only claim in this bill is that this gentleman was a soldier in the Indian war, under General Wayne, about 1793 or 1794. There is no general law providing for a service pension at that time. For that reason, I object to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there ever was a meritorious claim, it is this. This man was wounded in the service.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Was he permanently disabled?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He was wounded, I believe, in the head, and in actual battle. He is ninety years of age. From affluence, he has been reduced to want. His case has merit in it, and I hope that it will be passed.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 122, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bingham, Blair, Bowie, Brayton, Buffington, Burnett, Case, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cobb, Clark B. Cochran, John Cochran, Coffax, Comins, Corning, Cox, Craig, James Craig, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Elliott, Eastis, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Garrett, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Thomas L. Harris, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Jackson, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Kelsey, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Lamar, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Maynard, Miller, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Reilly, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Russell, Shorter, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, Talbot, George Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Trippe, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Woodson, Wortendyke, and Augustus R. Wright—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Clemens, Curry, George W. Jones, Quitman, Rufin, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, and William Smith—8.

So the bill was passed.

On motion, the reading of the list, after the call had been gone through, was dispensed with.

JEREMIAH WRIGHT.

A bill (H. R. No. 365) granting a pension to Jeremiah Wright.

Mr. KELSEY. The bill only proposes to pay this man a pension from 1824 to 1828. In 1824 his leg was amputated in consequence of the injury he received in the service in 1814. It was not until 1828, four years after his leg was amputated, that his name was placed upon the pension roll. The committee have reported that he shall receive these four years of pension, and I hope that it will pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The general law of the country, granting invalid pensions, provides for such pensions according to the degree of disability. The law provides a half-pay pension not to exceed the half pay of a lieutenant colonel, if the claimant proves that he is totally disabled from making a living by manual labor; and for any degree less than a total disability a pension as the degree of disability is to the full-pay pension. And the law is, that his pension, when he has established his right to it, shall commence from the time that he proved and established his disability, and that it is not to go back to the time that the disability is alleged to have occurred—that it shall commence at the time of its allowance, and continue for his life. This gentleman applied and established his disability, and consequently his right to a pension, in 1828, and he was then put upon the pension roll at a full disability pension. This bill proposes to go back and give him a full pension from 1824, the time it is alleged that the disability occurred, up to the time that he established his right to a pension and was placed upon the pension roll.

It is a strong case, I admit; and I would have no objection in the world to the law providing in all cases that, in all cases where the party had lost a limb it should be regarded as a full disability; but we cannot disguise from ourselves the fact that there are gentlemen throughout the country upon the pension roll who have sustained but little disability or injury from the wound for which they are pensioned. This is one of the strong cases which comes here as a pioneer case, and will hereafter be used as a precedent why we should take up these pension laws and go back and give every man, who has been placed upon the invalid pension roll in consequence of injuries received in the war of 1812, a pension from that war. The law was passed upon the principle that, whenever any person was injured, the pension should commence from the time that the disability was proved, and therefore I am not for opening all this class of cases, and hope this bill will be rejected.

Mr. FLORENCE. The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported this case upon the facts stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KELSEY.] They allow this man a full-pay pension from 1824 to 1828, to which he is undoubtedly entitled. If the committee had thought that it would be an unjust precedent, they would not have reported the bill; but there are precedents for the bill filed upon the statute-book. His case appealed to their sympathy and justice, and it was unanimously agreed to.

Further than that, I will take occasion to say that there is a difference of opinion as to the fact whether there is a law or not, whether the law of 1801 does not provide that pensions shall begin at the time of the disability, and not at the time the proof is perfected. I have submitted a bill appealing to the justice and fairness of members, and I hope that it will pass. It is a bill providing for the equalization of Army, Navy, and marine pensions. This old man deserves this four years' pension, and I hope that it will be given to him. I demand the previous question.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by JAMES B. HENRY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed a joint resolution, and bills of the following titles:

A joint resolution authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia;

An act for the relief of D. O. Dickinson;

An act declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases;

An act for the relief of S. W. & A. A. Turner; and

An act to continue the pension heretofore paid to Mary C. Hamilton, widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, late of the United States Army.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 203) for the relief of George W. Biscoe;

An act (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simon Stedman;

An act (H. R. No. 335) for the relief of Susanah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman;

An act (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of Captain Stanton Sholes;

An act (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Joseph Webb;

An act (H. R. No. 169) making appropriations for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon;

An act (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey;

An act (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander;

An act (H. R. No. 455) for the relief of Micajah Brooks;

An act (H. R. No. 490) for the relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming;

An act (H. R. No. 503) for the relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 504) for the relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughrey, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 547) for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield;

An act (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 572) for the relief of Lewis W. Broadwell;

An act (H. R. C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky; and

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill;

When the Speaker signed the same.

The question occurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. EUSTIS. The gentleman from Tennessee having had an opportunity by unanimous consent to express his views in regard to this bill, I hope he will now withdraw his call for the yeas and nays. He has placed himself on the record, and there is an evident disposition to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Billinghurst, Bingham, Blair, Bowie, Brayton, Buflinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clark, B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Colfax, Conins, Cragin, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Elliott, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Horion, Howard, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Reilly, Roberts, Royce, Russell, Sandidge, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Singleton, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, William Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Edwin B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Wilson, Woodson, and Wortendyke—99.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Barksdale, Branch, Burnett, Caske, Cox, Davis of Mississippi, Dowdell, Faulkner, Garrett, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Jackson, George W. Jones, Letcher, Samuel S. Marshall, Pendleton, John S. Phelps, Powell, Quitman, Rufin, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Stallworth, Trippe, Vallandigham, and John V. Wright—27.

So the bill was passed.

Pending the vote,

Mr. WRIGHT, of Tennessee, said: Before I vote I would ask the gentleman from New York whether this man has not been drawing a pension since 1828?

Mr. KELSEY. He has been. This bill merely gives him a pension from 1824, when his limb was taken off, till 1828.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Tennessee. I vote "no."

Mr. GARTRELL said: As this gentleman is already drawing a pension, I vote "no."

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of bills Nos. 84 and 85.

Mr. QUITMAN. I thought I had the floor, to ask permission to report a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, because there seemed to be an understanding in the House that, when the report of the Committee of the Whole House should be disposed of, these cases would be acted upon.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would state to the House that these bills (C. C. Nos. 84 and 85) are bills which have passed the Court of Claims, and been recommended by the Department of State and by the Committee of Claims. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from their further consideration.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I hope the gentleman will also include House bill No. 363.

Mr. BOWIE. Also House bill No. 364.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I shall object, unless we have the yeas and nays upon them.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. If the gentlemen objects, I will move that the rules be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that would be hardly just to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I did not know that I had the floor by the sufferance of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, supposing that the general consent of the House would be given to discharge the committee, without a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Unless the vote be taken by yeas and nays on the bills.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Certainly. I have no objection. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

HARRIET O. READ.

Mr. QUITMAN. I appeal to the House to permit me to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 226) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet O. Read, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army.

It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, in the House as well as in the Senate. It is a bill in which the party interested is a lady who has been, for the last two months, almost constantly in the gallery; and I have no doubt the members have all become familiar with her modest face. It is a bill for the relief of the executrix of Brevet Colonel Fanning, who was an officer of artillery, and employed on the ordnance service. In 1827-28 he was ordered to the arsenal, in Augusta, Georgia, while it was being constructed, and against his remonstrance, he was put on the duty of disbursing superintendent, and disbursed $50,000, for which he accounted to the last dollar. The committee report that it is usual, in many cases, where extraordinary duties are placed on an officer, especially where he protests against them, to allow him a commission on the funds disbursed by him. His heirs now ask $1,250 for commission on this troublesome disbursement of $50,000, in a duty which did not belong to him, and which he remonstrated against. I therefore ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Harriet O. Read, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army, the sum of $1,250, being the amount claimed to be due the estate of Brevet Colonel Fanning, as commissions of two and a half per cent. upon the sum of $50,000 disbursed by him in 1827 and 1828, at the United States arsenal, in Augusta, Georgia.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. ENGLISH. It occurs to me that, at last Congress, an act was passed for the relief of this same party. I should like to be informed whether that is so or not?

Mr. QUITMAN. I have been informed that, at some former session of Congress, there was such a bill passed. The same gentleman was appointed by the Government a commissioner to superintend the cession of Florida from the Spanish Government to the American Government, and a bill was passed giving him the same compensation as the other commissioners.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUITMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FERDINAND COXE AND PETER PARKER.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of bill (C. C. No. 84) for the relief of Ferdinand Cox, and bill (C. C. No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bills.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, demanded the previous question on the bills.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

The bills were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bills were passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTION.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 571) for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 570) for the relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon;

An act (H. R. No. 533) for the relief of Shove Chase, of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 492) for the relief of John Dearnit;

An act (H. R. No. 356) for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased;

An act (H. R. No. 543) for the relief of the legal representatives of John McDonough, late of Louisiana;

An act (H. R. No. 486) for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby;

An act (H. R. No. 451) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Devidrine;

An act (H. R. No. 476) for the relief of James Rumph;

An act (H. R. No. 493) for the relief of Stuckey & Rogers;

An act (H. R. C. C. No. 81) for the relief of the heirs of William Turvin, deceased; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) for the relief of Henry Orndorf.

BREVET MAJOR JOHN JONES.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up House bill (No. 456) granting an invalid pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment reducing the amount about one hundred and twenty dollars. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in, as follows:

Strike out the words, "from the 1st day of September, A. D. 1853, and to continue during his natural life," and insert in lieu thereof: "from and after the date of his application, and to continue during his natural life."

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KEEP, BARD AND CO., AND OTHERS.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if there is not a rule which requires members to rise from their seats to address the Chair? If there is, I should be glad to have it enforced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to correct the practice of members crowding near the Speaker's desk by recognizing those who are furthest from the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 318) for the relief of Keep, Bard & Co., J. Caulfield, and Joseph Landis & Co.

I will state, in order to save time, that the bill proposes merely to relieve the parties from a judgment rendered against them on a penal bond given to secure the payment of duties withdrawn from a port of entry to be taken to a port of delivery. The judgment was entered by confession; the parties paid the duties and the costs of the suit; and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that the relief be granted.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHRISTIAN INDIANS.

Mr. LEITER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that Senate bill (No. 323) to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians, be taken from the Speaker's table, and put upon its passage. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, and has the unanimous approval of the committee of this House.

Mr. GROW. The gentleman has been objecting to-day to meritorious cases; but as it is not my habit to object to bills without good and sufficient reason, I will not object to this one.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. LEITER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF GUSTAVUS B. HORNER.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill (No. 325) for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased.

Mr. GROW. The gentleman from Virginia has been objecting all day to bills in committee. I believe his troubles all originated from his objecting to a bill for the relief of an old soldier, one hundred and three years old. I have no objection to this bill; but, at the same time, I hope we shall do justice in the other case, and discharge the committee from the case which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] wished to have passed for the benefit of the old soldier.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no objection, if the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objections to all the meritorious claims which he has objected to in committee to-day.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 35.

So the rules were suspended, (two thirds having voted therefor.)

The bill and report were read. The bill provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be required to settle the account of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased, as a surgeon's mate of the general hospital of the Army of the United States during the revolutionary war, and to allow his legal representatives compensation equal to half pay for life of a captain of infantry in the service of the United States on continental establishment, from the close of the war to the time of the death of said Gustavus B. Horner, without interest; to be paid to the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner.

The report states that the petitioners are the legal representatives of Dr. Gustavus B. Horner, and they claim commutation of five years' full pay, or half pay for life, as justly due to them for his services as surgeon's mate; and they rest their claim on the promise made by Congress on the 21st of October, 1780, the 17th of January, 1781, and by the act of March, 1783. It is clearly proved that Dr. Horner was a surgeon's mate of the general hospital of the middle district, by commission from the Continental Congress, dated in 1778; that he was in actual service for about four years, and until the autumn of 1782, and after the French forces had returned to the North from the surrender of the enemy at York, in Virginia. It is probable that he was not again engaged in active service during the few remaining months of the war which elapsed after that period; but it appears, from the evidence filed with the petition, that he did not, after the aforementioned actual service, resign his commission, but only retired as a supernumerary, ready for service whenever he should be required; for, in addition to the other parol evidence, it appears that he held his commission till the end of the war; and the commission itself, left by him among his papers, is now produced by the petitioners. And as evidence of the view in which the Legislature of Maryland, of which State he was a citizen, and in whose line he served, regarded his services, they also file a copy of a resolution of the General Assembly of that State, allowing to his widow a pension for her life equal to the half pay of a surgeon's mate, in consideration of the revolutionary services of her husband in the line of that State. The only question which has arisen to obstruct this claim is, that in the resolution of Congress, in 1781, providing for the medical and hospital department, surgeons' mates, eo nomine, are omitted, while physicians, surgeons, apothecaries, purveyors, and other inferior and subordinate classes, all belonging to the hospital department, are mentioned and provided for. The committee believe that the omission of surgeons' mates, a class commissioned by Congress as useful and indispensable to the service, was either accidental, (a casus omissus), or was intended and regarded as embraced in the generic term, surgeons, before mentioned, by the resolution of Congress, in the list of officers of the hospital. In either of these constructions, surgeons' mates may be considered as within the law; but if not embraced in the law, they certainly are within the equity of the provision intended by the Congress of the Confederation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I merely wish to make a single remark why I object to this bill. In the first place, surgeons' mates were not entitled to half pay; and in the next place, if he is to come under the resolutions of 1781, 1782, and 1783, he did not serve in the manner required by those resolutions.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to state, in a single word, why I shall vote against this bill. The gentleman from Virginia has voted here to-day to slaughter twenty-five good and honest claims, and I will not vote to pass his.

Mr. COLFAX. I hope we shall pass this bill, and then go back into committee, and we may be able to transact some business.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope we shall defeat this bill, and then go back into committee.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not know whether I understand this bill or not. Is it merely to give half pay? It seems to me there is a proposition to settle something.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is merely to settle what is due the claimant under the resolution of 1780.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. At what time did Dr. Horner die?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not know. Gentlemen are mistaken in supposing that this is a large claim. It is not a large claim.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BUFFINTON and PEXTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 50.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Branch, Bratton, Burlingame, Claflie, Clemens, Cobb, Cockrell, Colfax, Collins, James Craig, Curry, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Goodwin, Grow, Hill, Horton, Houston, Howard, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Millson, Morgan, Morrill, Murray, Palmer, Phillips, Potter, Purviance, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Shorter, Stallworth, William Stewart, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Elishu B. Washburne, and Wilson—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Bowie, Boyce, Buffinton, Burnett, Caskey, Cavanaugh, John B. Clark, Clawson, John Cochrane, Cragin, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dawes, Dowdell, Elliott, Florence, Gartrell, Gooch, Grainger, Gregg, Hopkins, Huyler, Jackson, J. Glancy Jones, Kellogg, Leiter, Leitcher, Lovejoy, Matteson, Niblack, Nichols, Parker, William W. Phelps, Quinman, Reilly, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Judson W. Sherman, Singleton, William Smith, Spinner, James A.

Stewart, George Taylor, Walton, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Woodson, and Wortendyke—54.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 54) to revive and extend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Stephen Heard, and others," approved May 24, 1845, and the several acts extending, continuing, and reviving the same;

An act (No. 327) to affirm certain entries of land in the State of Louisiana;

An act (No. 414) to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a sum of money advanced towards the construction of the Little Falls bridge;

An act (No. 421) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Benjamin Ward;

An act (No. 426) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Russell Fitch, of Ohio;

An act (No. 427) for the relief of Thomas W. Ward, late United States consul at Panama;

An act (No. 428) for the relief of James Myer; and

An act (No. 429) for the relief of James T. V. Thompson.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of this House of the following titles:

An act (No. 238) for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin;

An act (No. 267) for the relief of Timothy O'Keefe;

An act (No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce;

An act (No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper;

An act (No. 452) for the relief of Dr. Thomas Anis ell;

An act (No. 466) for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;

An act (No. 480) for the relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller;

An act (No. 528) for the relief of Judith Nott;

An act (No. 569) for the relief of Gardner & Vincent, and others; and

An act (No. 573) for the relief of Thomas Hassam and B. S. Brewster.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill of this House (No. 366) for the relief of John Duncan, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had indefinitely postponed bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (No. 586) for the relief of the administrator of Horatio Boulbee, deceased;

An act (No. 511) for the relief of Nehemiah S. Draper and William Holden, heirs-at-law of Mary Draper, deceased; and

An act (No. 232) for the relief of Ebenezer Hitchcock.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined, and found truly enrolled, bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition; and

An act (H. R. No. 436) granting an invalid pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee.

JOHN SAWYER.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 319, for the relief of John Sawyer.

There being no objection, the committee was discharged, and the bill taken up for consideration.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. PARKER. The report is at the printer's. I will state the points of the case, if gentlemen desire it. This bill is for an old soldier. He is one hundred and three years of age, and poor. Under the general law, his term of service will not entitle him to a pension; but under all the circumstances of the case, the committee believe that he deserves a pension from his country. He was at the taking of Burgoyne. I hope that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to enter the name of John Sawyer, of Garland, Penobscot county, Maine, on the roll of revolutionary pensioners, and pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-four dollars a year, during his natural life, commencing on the 4th of March, 1831.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, demanded the previous question.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that no one will object to granting a pension to a soldier who, at the age of a hundred, "still lives," and who assisted in the capture of Burgoyne.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE AT VINCENNES.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report, from the Committee on Public Lands, House bill (No. 302) to continue the office of register of the land office at Vincennes, Indiana.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That office has been continued several times already, and I object.

Mr. COBB. I think that there ought not to have been any objection to the gentleman's proposition. It is the first thing he has asked this session. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose he has indicated.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. NIBLACK then reported the bill back from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KILGORE. Have not the books and papers of that office been transferred to Indianapolis?

Mr. NIBLACK. They were some years ago, and then brought back.

Mr. KILGORE. I am not properly advised in regard to this matter. I know that a number of land offices in Indiana have been ordered to be closed.

Mr. NIBLACK. They were closed, but reopened by special act. This bill is desired in reference to the settlement of old donation claims.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that the papers of the office have been transferred to the seat of government, and facilities for getting there are very great in that State. I will do as much as any gentleman to accommodate my colleague; but I hope that he will excuse me in objecting to the propriety of reopening the land office at Vincennes. There were land offices in the northern part of the State more remote than this, and there is no application for reopening them.

Mr. COBB. I referred the question to the Secretary of the Interior, and he wrote a letter here recommending the passage of this bill. The gentleman from Indiana withdrew the letter and took it to the Senate, or I would ask to have it read. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. How much land is there for sale at that place?

Mr. NIBLACK. Two thousand acres. It is, however, desired more for the settlement of old donation claims.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill is important to adjust and settle old claims. There is but $500 of expense, and it seems to me that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. LETCHER. I think it would be better to give up the two thousand acres rather than reopen the land office there.

Mr. HOUSTON. The disposal of the two thousand acres is only a small part of the necessity for this bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COBB demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and, under the operation thereof, the bill was passed.

Mr. NIBLACK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY MILLER.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 363) granting an invalid pension to Henry Miller.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the yeas and nays are taken on its passage, I have no objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to such an arrangement.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move to suspend the rules. Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask whether this bill grants a pension from 1817 up to this time?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No, sir. It gives a pension from 1817, the time this man's limb was amputated, up to 1850, when he was placed on the invalid pension list.

Mr. CLEMENS called for tellers on the suspension of the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLEMENS and WALDRON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 31.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

The committee was then discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to inscribe the name of Henry Miller, of Kentucky, on the invalid pension roll of the State, and pay him at the rate of eight dollars per month from the 28th of August, 1817, the pension to continue during his natural life; whatever amount of money he may have received under the general pension law to be deducted from the amount to which he will be entitled by this bill.

It appears from the report that said Henry Miller enlisted as a private soldier in the company of Captain Anderson, in the regiment commanded by Colonel Gaines, Tennessee militia, in the month of December, 1812; that he continued in service until the month of February, 1814, when he got his foot and ankle badly mashed whilst he was building a breastwork; that, subsequently, in the month of August, 1817, his leg was amputated. He has been allowed a pension by the Secretary of the Interior, said pension to commence in the year 1850. The committee are of the opinion that the pension allowed should have commenced at the time of the amputation of his leg, in August, 1817.

Mr. ELLIOTT moved the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELLIOTT moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ahl, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bowie, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, John B. Clark, Clawson, John Cochran, Cockrell, Colfax, Comins, Corning, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Duriee, Edie, Edmundson, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Gilmer, Granger, Gregg, Grow, Harch, Hawkins, Horton, Howard, Kelly, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Matteson, Maynard, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Peyton, Potter, Purviance, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Scott, Judson W. Sherman, Spigner, Talbot, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Wallbridge, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Wilson, Woodson, and Wortendyke—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Boyce, Burnett, Clemens, Cobb, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Dodd, English, Faulkner, Foley, Gartrell, Hopkins, Houston, Jackson, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Leitcher, Samuel S. Marshall, Morgan, Niblack, Phillips, Sherman, Rutlin, Russell, Scales, Henry M. Shaw, John Shuman, Robert Smith, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, Waldron, Winslow, and Zollcoffer—35.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ELLIOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY B. DUSENBERRY.

Mr. BOWIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 364) for the relief of Mary B. Dusenberry.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill directs the name of Mary B. Dusenberry to be placed on the pension roll at the sum of thirty dollars per month, to commence on the 3d day of December, 1855, and continue for the term of five years.

Mr. BOWIE moved the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOWIE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI TWO PER CENT. LAND FUND.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the House bill (No. 303) giving the assent of Congress to a law of the Missouri Legislature for the application of the reserved two per cent. land fund of said State.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays, and for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 37, noes 88.

The bill was read. It gives the assent of Congress to the act of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, entitled "An act supplemental to an act to amend 'An act to secure the completion of certain railroads in this State, and for other purposes,'" approved November 19, 1857, appropriating the two per centum of the net proceeds of sales of public lands in that State, reserved by existing laws to be expended under the direction of Congress, but hereby relinquished to that State; and authorizes and requires the proper accounting officers of the Government to audit and pay the accounts for the same, as in the case of the three per centum land fund of said State.

The report states that the claim presented by the State of Missouri is founded on the third article of the compact between the United States and the State, contained in the fifth section of the act of 6th March, 1820, (3 Stat., page 547), entitled "An act to authorize the people of Missouri Territory to form a State government," &c., which is in these words: "That five per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands lying within said Territory or State, and which shall be sold by Congress from and after the 1st day of January next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads and canals; of which three fifths shall be applied to those objects within the State under the direction of the Legislature thereof, and the other two fifths in defraying, under the direction of Congress, the expenses to be incurred in the making of a road or roads, canal or canals, leading to the said State." That portion of the fund which it is contemplated by this article shall be applied by the State to improving its internal communications, has been duly paid over by the Government of the United States. But the two per cent. received by the United States in trust, to be applied to communications leading to the State, have not been so applied; the trust has not, therefore, been duly discharged, and the money which the article recognizes as the property of the State, and to be applied for its benefit, should be accounted for to the State by the Government of the United States. The two per cent. fund in question belonged to the State, and the interest of the Federal Government was but that of a trustee; and the sole reason for the arrangement was, that as the Government of the United States had authority outside of the limits of the State which the State did not possess, it could apply that portion of the fund intended to facilitate communication to and from the State, and promote its external commerce better than the State itself could do. If the terms of the article itself admitted of any question that this was the nature of the interest of the State in this fund, the original of this provision, which is found in the corresponding article of the seventh section of the act of 30th April, 1802, (2 Stat., page 175,) entitled "An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio to form a constitution and State government," &c., in which it is expressly admitted that the five per cent. was given to the State as a consideration for the exemption of the lands of the United States within its limits from taxation, would be conclusive on the point. This was certainly a small consideration for the release by the State of a right to tax the forty million acres of Government lands within its limits, and there is, therefore, the more reason why it should be certainly and fully paid according to the agreement between the parties, or accounted for to the State, if the purpose to which it was to be devoted under the agreement between the parties has been abandoned. That purpose was the construction of a road (the Cumberland road was intended) to the boundary of Missouri, a purpose which has long since been abandoned, and the Government should, therefore, deal with Missouri as it has dealt with Mississippi and Alabama under similar circumstances—direct the two per cent. fund, which was reserved for the purpose thus abandoned, to be paid to the State. (See sections 16 and 17, act 4th September, 1841, 5 Stat., page 457.)

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I should like to have the report to which that refers read.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the Chair whether, if the House adjourn now, this bill will not come up as the first business in the morning?

Mr. GROW. The Maryland contested-election case is set down for to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. COLFAX. I ask whether the House has not agreed to adjourn on Thursday next, on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] himself? He ought to be willing to stop here till twelve o'clock to-night, and attend to private business.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Let us go to the business on the Speaker's table, and we may—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will not the gentleman's motion to suspend the rules be the first thing in the morning?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have examined the bill which the gentleman from Missouri proposes to bring up, and I am satisfied that it is right, and ought to pass; but I think the House ought to adjourn now.

Mr. BURNETT. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAIR's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLAIR demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under the operation thereof, the bill was passed.

Mr. BLAIR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWIN M. CHAFFEE.

Mr. EDIE. I move a suspension of the rules, and that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 349) for the relief of Edwin M. Chaffee, with a view of putting it upon its passage.

Mr. BURNETT, (at twenty-three minutes after six o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 36, nays 95; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bishop, Burnett, Caskie, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Corning, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Faulkner, Garnett, Gregg, Hatch, Hopkins, Houston, Jackson, George J. Jones, Leitch, Mason, Peyton, Purviance, Quitman, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Searing, Henry M. Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, and Talbot—36.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abbott, Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bowie, Boyce, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Conins, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Durfee, Edie, Elliott, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Hawkins, Hill, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Kelly, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Macley, Samuel S. Marshall, Matson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, John S. Phelps, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Reilly, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Scott, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Waldron, Walton, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Wilson, and Winslow—95.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon Mr. EDIE's motion to suspend the rules.

The bill, and the report accompanying it, were read.

The bill provides that there be granted to Edwin M. Chaffee, of the city and county of Providence, Rhode Island, for his sole and exclusive benefit, and for the benefit of his heirs, administrators, and to those to whom he may hereafter assign the same, for the term of seven years from the passage of this act, the full and exclusive right and liberty of making, constructing, using, and vending to others to be used, his improvement in the application of undissolved caoutchouc to cloth, leather, and other articles, in coloring the same without the aid of a solvent, and in the machinery used in the process, for which letters patent were granted to said Chaffee on the 31st of August, 1836, and which is described in the schedule annexed to the letters patent granted as aforesaid; and the Commissioner of Patents is directed to make a certificate of such grant in the name of Edwin M. Chaffee, and to append an authenticated copy thereof to a duly certified copy of said letters patent, and to deliver the same to Edwin M. Chaffee, his administrator or assigns, whenever the same shall be requested by him or them.

The Committee on Patents reported that Edwin M. Chaffee, prior to the 31st day of August, 1836, applied for, and on that day obtained from the Government of the United States, letters patent for "an improvement in the application of undissolved caoutchouc to cloth, leather, and other articles, in coloring the same without the aid of a solvent, and in the machinery used in the process." The patent expired in 1850, and was renewed by the Commissioner of Patents, under existing laws, for the term of seven years, which term expired during the year 1857. Application is now made to Congress for an extension, by legislative enactment, for a further term of seven years. The committee is satisfied that the improvement made and claimed by the memorialist is an original invention, and that he is the inventor. They are also fully satisfied that the invention is one of great public utility. By the introduction into general use of the improvement of the memorialist, the manufacturers of India-rubber goods are enabled to dispense with the use of a solvent, an article altogether indispensable until the improvement of the memorialist was made, and thus save some fifty cents on every pound of crude caoutchouc worked up into manufactured articles. When the vast number of pounds of the raw material used in the fabrication of India-rubber goods is considered, it must be apparent that the invention of the memorialist enables the manufacturer to produce his goods at a vastly reduced price to the consumer, and thus both the producer and the purchaser are generally benefited on account of the genius and skill employed by the memorialist in the perfection of his improvement.

The profits which have accrued to the memorialist have not, in the opinion of the committee, been at all commensurate with the benefit he has conferred upon the public by his invention. The memorialist exhibits an account of all his receipts for or on account of his improvement, which account amounts in gross to the sum of $22,500, and the same account exhibits disbursements, compensation claimed for time expended, and losses sustained, amounting to the sum of $19,500; leaving to the memorialist the small pittance of $3,000 as his whole remuneration for years of toil spent in the perfection of an invention which has enabled the manufacturer of India-rubber goods to save thousands in the cost of producing his goods, and the public, who buy the goods, to save tens of thousands, on account of the reduction of price brought about by dispensing with the use of all solvents in the manufacture of the fabrics. In the opinion of the committee, no blame should attach to the memorialist because he has failed, up to this time, to realize a sufficient reward for his invention. He was a poor man, surrounded with difficulties, and unable, from his poverty, to take those energetic measures necessary to secure to himself great pecuniary benefits from his newly-invented process of grinding, instead of dissolving, the raw material used in the manufacture of India-rubber goods. He did all that his limited means permitted, and the result was an insufficient remuneration.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make but one remark. This gentleman got a patent for fourteen years; he then got an extension of that patent for seven years longer; that extension expired in 1857, and, by the laws of the country, this invention then became the public property, and you have no more right now to reinvest him with the sole and exclusive use of it, than you have to take up anything else, and give an individual an exclusive right to it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that this patent has been in litigation for the last seven years, and that hence the patentee has not been able to realize anything by it. I am against the extension of patents as a general rule; but I rather think there is something in this case which would justify it.

Mr. EDIE. I will state, in addition to the facts stated in the report, that an India-rubber manufacturing company made an agreement with the inventor by which they obtained the patent, and part of the consideration was, that they were to employ him at a regular yearly salary. A very short time thereafter that company failed, and its effects were sold under the hammer.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is debate in order at this stage?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I object to it. The gentleman will have an opportunity to be heard after the rules are suspended.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and there were—ayes 64, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded tellers.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 70, noes 58. And thereupon (at ten minutes to seven o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 5, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. A. G. CAROTHERS.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 302) to continue the office of register of the land office at Vincennes, Indiana;

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. BIGLER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the resolution directing the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Thursday the 10th of June, at twelve o'clock, m., be and the same is hereby rescinded; and that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Monday the 21st of June, at twelve o'clock, m.

DEATH OF MR. HENDERSON.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, a few short months ago it was my painful and melancholy duty to announce the decease of my late lamented colleague, General Rusk. That announcement had been postponed in consequence of the absence of his successor, who I desired should be present on the occasion; but he was not present. The duty again recurs, melancholy truly in its character, to announce the decease of my more recent colleague, General J. PINCKNEY HENDERSON, the successor of General Rusk. These events are very well calculated to impress the mind with the instability of all human affairs, and to admonish us that "in the midst of life we are in death." The proud hopes and anticipations of both have been cut down, and I am left the solitary representative of my State in this body. A recurrence to the scenes which have passed in relation to both these gentlemen awakens emotions difficult to repress, and inexpressible in their character.

General HENDERSON was born in Lincoln county, North Carolina, in 1808, on the 31st of March. He received a liberal education, and chose the profession of the law as a pursuit, in which he soon acquired a prominent position. His health becoming impaired, he was induced to make a visit to the Island of Cuba, where it was partially repaired. Returning, he selected a location in the State of Mississippi, and resumed the profession of the law. In the awakening scenes of the South consequent on the invasion of Texas by the Mexicans, he was aroused from his professional pursuits, and induced to busy himself much in rousing the chivalry of the South to repair to the rescue of that devoted country. On his arrival there, in association with companions, he was selected by the Government ad interim, and received the appointment of brigadier general in the army. The army soon after being disbanded, he stepped into the walks of private life, but was soon called by the Executive of the constitutional Government, then inaugurated, to the office of Attorney General of the Republic. He continued in it for some months, when the decease of General Austin, the distinguished father of Texas, an illustrious citizen, created a vacancy in the State Department, and General HENDERSON, after General Rusk had declined the position owing to his professional engagements and private business at home, was selected. He held that Department until the latter part of 1837, when he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to England and to France, to negotiate for the recognition of Texan independence. He continued in that position, employed busily for the attainment of the objects which had been assigned to him, until 1840, when he returned to Texas, and again resumed the practice of the law. He located himself in San Augustine, and was associated in practice with General Rusk. He continued there until 1843, declining, in the mean time, a situation in the new cabinet that was formed in December, 1841, preferring to pursue his profession.

In 1843 he was appointed, by the Executive, an adjunct to Mr. Van Zandt, the resident minister here at Washington, for the purpose of negotiating a treaty for annexation. The treaty was negotiated, but the Senate of the United States failed to ratify it. He again returned to Texas and resumed his legal practice, and so continued until the annexation of Texas was consummated and a convention was called to frame a State government. He was elected a member of the convention from the county of San Augustine, and acted a conspicuous part in that body in forming the constitution of the new State. He was subsequently elected the first Governor of the State of Texas. After remaining some time in the discharge of the duties of that office, a requisition was made upon Texas in consequence of the Mexican war, for troops to aid General Taylor. The troops of Texas were called out, and, by a resolution of the Legislature, Governor HENDERSON was authorized to assume the command, which he did, and he acted a conspicuous part in the battle of Monterey. He was one of the commissioners, on the part of the American forces, to negotiate the articles of capitulation of the garison of Monterey. On his return from the war he resumed the duties of Governor, and continued to execute them during the term for which he was elected, declining a reelection. Since that time, he has assiduously pursued the practice of the law, distinguished in his profession, and eminently successful in the practice, until the meeting of the last Legislature, when he was elected unanimously, I believe, to fill the place in this body vacated by the lamented event of General Rusk's death.

Thus, gentlemen, you will perceive that he was no ordinary man. He made his mark upon the history of Texas; and the nation is not unacquainted with his reputation. He will be long remembered. He was a bold, enterprising spirit; a man of indomitable will, of daring enterprise, and firm of purpose. His intellect was of a high order, and cultivated to the extent that opportunities of professional engagements would permit. This is the colleague whose loss I have to deplore. I regret his death. To me, individually, it is but little; the bereavement falls not upon me as it will upon others. His friends had confidence in, and were ardently attached to him; they were deeply devoted to him; and the chord that is broken will be one of thrilling sensibility. When we contemplate the ties which bind man to man, we know that the course of events causes their separation: but, sir, when we contemplate the deep agony of an affectionate wife that is now the bereaved widow, and the prattling children that are orphans in the world, here is a scene that closes the picture of true distress, and tells us that "The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect to the memory of the Hon. J. PINCKNEY HENDERSON, deceased, a Senator from the State of Texas, will go into mourning for the residue of the present session by the usual mode of wearing crape on the left arm.

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the Senate will attend the funeral of the deceased from the Senate Chamber, at three o'clock, p. m., to-morrow; and that the committee of arrangements, consisting of Messrs. BAYARD, CAMERON, CLAY, WADE, HAMMOND, and SEWARD, superintend the same.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in rising to second the resolutions, my long acquaintance with, and warm attachment to, the deceased, impel me, however feebly, to pay some tribute to his character. It is not at a time when the heart is agitated by sudden and poignant grief, and sympathetically responds to the wail of the widow and the orphan, that we can hope to do justice to the public and private character of one whom we have lost. In both relations it has been my fortune to know the deceased intimately and long. Together with him I have shared toil and danger; and the association taught me to esteem him more and more with every succeeding trial. Associated with him in the attack on Monterey, his command and my own closed the active operations of that eventful siege. On the third and last day of the attack, when night was closing around us, and we were near to the main plaza, we learned that we were isolated; that orders had been sent to us to retire; that the supports had been withdrawn; and that we were surrounded by a large number of the enemy. A heart less resolved, a mind less self-reliant, than HENDERSON's, might have doubted, wavered, and been lost. The alternative was presented to him of maintaining a post which he was confident we could hold, or of retiring, when it was doubtful whether we could cut our way through the enemy: he asked no other question than, "Are we ordered to retire?" On learning that such was the fact, he decided, at whatever hazard, to obey; and narrowly, on that occasion, he escaped with his life. The sense of duty rose with him superior to all other considerations; and he obeyed an order which he might have been justified in disobeying, because of the dangers to which it would subject him. It was the same trait in his character which hastened him on when coming to take his seat in the Senate. He had paused at the Island of Cuba, in a condition to warn him not to meet this rigorous and changing climate; but the news reached him that Texas required his vote in this Chamber; and it was enough. Duty pointed the path, and he hesitated not to tread it. He came; and the sacrifice of his life was the result.

Connected with the early history of Texas, and known to the whole of its population, their appreciation of him has been shown in constantly renewed offers of positions of trust and responsibility. The manner in which he discharged his duty requires no other testimony. The last office he filled was among us. Had he remained here longer, he would have been better known; and I might have been spared even the poor effort which I now make to pay some tribute to his memory. He was gentle and just; quick, but too generous to bear malice against any man. Superior to personal fear, he was incapable of personal hate. He was lofty and dignified in all his relations, gentle as the lamb in the hour of peace, and in the midst of his friends; but bold as the lion in the face of danger, and when confronted by an enemy. Such is a rude sketch of the beautiful elements which constituted his character. The people by whom he had been so often, and so highly honored, claimed his first allegiance, and had his last love. He died as he had lived, anxious to fulfill his obligations to his fellow men, resolved to discharge the duty of his station, and left behind him that good name without which "glory's but a tavern song." I will not invade the sanctity of domestic grief, to speak of those who are most bereaved by his death. The State he represented must long regret him, and feel his loss. But it is a loss to the whole country; for, emphatically, in our country, because of the nature of its Government, its safety and its wealth are the intelligence, the integrity, and the patriotism of its citizens; each owes to all his best exertions for the common good, and it peculiarly belongs to the public servant to meet whatever hazards may lie in the path of his duty. At a solemn moment like this, we are warned how vain and transitory are the objects of our pursuit. The eternal surge of time and tide rolls on, and the next wave engulfs alike our labors and our existence. Yet it is well that we do not rise to that dignity of philosophy which would measure things by their true value. It is well that we exaggerate the importance of the little things which occupy us; for it is this exaggeration which gives the necessary stimulus to prompt the public man to sacrifice his ease and private interest to the discharge of his public duty. Shall we not then, even in the midst of this solemn warning, mingle with the reflections which it creates, the tribute of our admiration for the patriotic devotion which forgetful of self, sacrificed the individual to the public interest, and gave substance to the objects which, as we stand by the side of the mournful bier, pass before us, and vanish like fleeting shadows.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. President, I have but a very few remarks to address to the Senate on this melancholy occasion. General HENDERSON has been long known to me, though I have not ever enjoyed the pleasure of much personal intercourse or acquaintance with him; but from sources of public and private information, and especially from the more animated testimony given by all those who formed the circle of his friends, I have known him well. A concurrent testimony from all these sources has established his character as one of the most estimable of men, amiable, brave, and magnanimous. He was too frank for any concealment, too disinterested and too brave to dissemble. It was not difficult to know such a man. There was no disguise about him. His thoughts were not more free than was the expression of them. He seemed to have no other object in his public life than his country's interest, and the cause of truth. There was not a feeling or a purpose in his heart that he might not have frankly and bravely avowed in the face of the whole world. This is the character of the man; as I have learned it from my own brief and limited intercourse with him, as well as from all the sources of information to which I have had access.

As honorable Senators who have spoken on this occasion have well remarked: in peace, in the bosom of society he was altogether gentle; in war, he was as daring and as forward as the foremost. Soon after the battle of San Jacinto, in 1836, led by his daring and enterprising spirit, he went to Texas to share in her fortunes and participate in her hardships. He took a distinguished part in all the difficulties of rearing up out of the wreck of her revolution an organized and constitutional community. His personal qualities attracted to him public attention. There was a manifest integrity about him, a courage that none could doubt; a frankness that enabled everybody about him, and all the Commonwealth of Texas, to understand and know him. By this standard they estimated him. He shared in all the honors which they could confer. As we have learned from the illustrious Senator who headed that great revolution in Texas, he was Secretary of State for the infant Commonwealth; he was their ambassador to the great courts of London and of Paris; immediately after annexation, he was made the first Chief Magistrate of the State of Texas; and lately, as I understand, unsought for by him, he was made, by the unanimous vote of the Legislature of Texas, a member of this honorable body.

This is his public career. He may have had his indiscretions, as who of us has not, but they were swallowed up in his many and amiable virtues. After a very brief service here, too short to afford this honorable body the opportunity of judging of him for themselves, he is taken from us. Sir, the grave may confine his body within its narrow limits, but his name will be buried in the hearts of his countrymen, and more especially in the heart of Texas.

From the time when, attracted by her glorious struggle for liberty, he arrived in Texas, he became a chief actor in all the troubled and perilous scenes through which she had to pass; and in those severe and stern trials, which strip from men all disguises, he won for himself the affection and the admiration of the true and brave, the patriotic people of Texas. There, in that glorious little community, the eye-witness of his life and conduct, he was known and judged, and the high trusts and honors which have been awarded to him are honorable testimonials to all the world of the estimation in which he was held.

I repeat, sir, that though the grave may have his body, his name will live and be cherished in the hearts of his many friends, and especially in the grateful, noble heart of the country that he helped to redeem and to save. Texas, with softened heart, will shed tears for his death—warm tears, more precious and honorable to his memory than all the cold marble that could be heaped upon his grave.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the event which causes the Senate to mourn will cast a gloom over the native, as well as the adopted State of the deceased.

General HENDERSON was a native of Lincoln county, North Carolina, and descended from an ancient and honored family. He chose the legal profession, in which he was eminently successful, till, inspired by a laudable ambition, he left the State to unite his destiny with Texas in her gallant struggle for independence. The part he performed in that contest forms a conspicuous place in the eventful history of that State.

After Texas achieved her independence he was honored, at different periods, with the appointment of Attorney General, Secretary of State, and Minister to France. These positions he filled with fidelity and marked ability. He was one of the commissioners appointed by Texas to negotiate with this Government in relation to the annexation of that Republic to the United States. The active and efficient part he took in the consummation of this great measure is fresh in the recollection of his countrymen.

He was a member of the Texas convention, and subsequently Governor of the State. Then resuming his profession, in which he ranked among the first lawyers of his State, he pursued its practice till called, by the unanimous vote of the Legislature, to fill the seat in this body, made vacant by the death of his lamented predecessor, who, I believe, was his law partner.

During the short period he was permitted to occupy a place in the Senate, though oppressed by a fatal disease, he won the friendship of all, and evinced to the last that patriotic devotion to his country which had characterized his whole life.

His career has been distinguished and useful, without a spot or blemish to dim its luster. The Senate and country will long cherish his memory, and his friends may point to his eventful history with pride and pleasure; but, to the wife of his bosom, and the children of his affection, the loss is irreparable, and brings with it an anguish that no tongue can describe. I hope they may find consolation in their sad affliction, for "virtue, though planted in earth's ungenial clime, will bloom and ripen in heaven!"

Mr. HAYNE. I would add, sir, only a single word. It was my happiness to become acquainted with that distinguished Senator, now no more. On his way to England and France he visited Charleston; and there I first met with him at the table of my lamented brother. He tarried with us some three weeks; and he won the esteem of every one of us, for not only his gallant bearing, but that noble simplicity of character and truthfulness which marked his whole life. As a statesman, he ranked high. He passed over the water abroad; and there he consummated the object which he went to secure—the recognition of the independence of his State. Sir, he was a bright example to all of us. He had an eye alone to the public good, and the glory of his great country.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, having not long ago taken a part in the tribute rendered by the Senate to a late eminent Senator of Texas, I should have deemed it indelicate to offer my sympathies on this occasion if it had not been intimated to me by the surviving Senator of that State that it would not be unacceptable if I would express the feelings, should I be able to do so, which are entertained by the Senators from that part of the country with which I am more immediately connected. I could not refuse such a request from such a source.

It seemed to me to be one of those marked incidents which occur to us in our lives when the hero of San Jacinto, the founder of Texas, with tears streaming from his eyes, announced to me, a representative from a far distant portion of the Republic, that it would not be unwelcome to Texas if I should bear a part in the funeral honors paid to a late distinguished companion of his in arms and in council. I hope those who do sometimes, as most of us on some occasions do, entertain fears of the centrifugal tendencies in our political system, will take notice of this fact, and of the sincere commingling of sympathy over this bier, and learn that there is a centripetal power in the Senate of the United States and in the Congress of the United States which is able to surmount all the agencies that tend towards a dissolution of this American Union.

Mr. President, it is less than seventy days ago since the honorable Senator, whose loss we deplore, met me, and an acquaintance, gratifying and honorable to myself, was formed, on the basis of his appreciation of the friendship which had existed between his predecessor, the lamented General Rusk, and myself. During that short period that he remained with us I saw every confirmation, in his public course and in his private life, of the virtues and intelligence which are awarded to him by those who belong to the region which he represented.

If anything on this occasion has seemed to me more worthy of remark than another, it is, that although Senator HENDERSON was yet a young man, he had been a most successful and fortunate man, and, at the same time, a type of the public man of America. In listening to the eulogiums which have been pronounced upon him, I have been surprised as they have followed him from the bar to the head of a brigade, from the head of a brigade into the cabinet of his State, from the cabinet into a foreign mission, from a foreign mission back to the bar, from the bar, flushed with success, transferred again to the diplomatic corps—the ambassador of his State to foreign lands, the ambassador of his State to form a union with the United States—thence back again to the bar, then a member of the constitutional convention to frame the organic law for his State, then the Governor of that yet new but already great State, then a major general in the Federal service, and, finally, a Senator in the Congress of the United States. It is a singular and a successful career for a revolutionary man, a man who has spent his whole life in revolutionary times. It was his felicity, one which rarely happens to revolutionary men, that he did not survive either the fortune of his State or its favor.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

On the motion of Mr. CLAY, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 5, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by the Rev. Mr. KERSHAW.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

- An act for the relief of Judith Nott;
- An act for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster;
- An act for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin;
- An act for the relief of John B. Roper;
- An act for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe;
- An act for the relief of David Bruce;
- An act for the relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller;
- An act for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell;
- An act for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham; and
- An act for the relief of Gardner & Vincent and others.

CASE OF JUDGE WATROUS.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe the matter in relation to the conduct of Judge Watrous was postponed until this morning, and I suppose it will come up first in order.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDIE] to suspend the rules is the first business in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill for the relief of Theresa Dardenue, widow of Abraham Dardenue, deceased, and their children, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ADMISSION OF OREGON.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 239) for the admission of Oregon into the Union, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. EDIE. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. COLFAX. I trust the request of the gentleman from Georgia will be acquiesced in.

Mr. EDIE. Well, I have no objection.

The bill, no objection being made, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have an amendment for that bill in the nature of a substitute, which I desire to offer when the bill comes up for action. I ask that it may be referred with the bill, to the Committee on Territories, and printed.

It was so ordered.

EDWIN M. CHAFFEE.

The SPEAKER stated that the business first in order was the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDIE] to suspend the rules to enable him to move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 348) for the relief of Edwin M. Chaffee; upon which tellers had been demanded.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DEAN and HAWKINS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 89, noes 44.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Bowie, Brayton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Corning, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Massachusetts, Dean, Dewart, Dunick, Durfee, Edie, Elliott, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Grainger, Gregg, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Hatch, Hopkins, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Maclay, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mort, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Reilly, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Savage, Scott, Searing, Aaron Shaw, Robert Smith, William Smith, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, White, Wilson, Wood, Wortendyke, and Augustus R. Wright—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bonham, Branch, Buffinton, Caskie, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Comins, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Dawes, Dodd, Dowdell, Edmundson, Eustis, Faulkner, Garnett, Gartrell, Gooch, Goode, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Houston, Hughes, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kelly, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Miles, Miller, Morgan, Murray, Pender-n, John S. Phelps, Pottle, Quitman, Ricard, Ritchie, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Shorter, Sickles, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, Miles Taylor, Thompson, Underwood, Wade, Ellihu B. Washburne, and Winslow—70.

So the two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended. During the call of the roll, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. LETCHER. I was not within the bar when my name was called. I was detained in the Ways and Means Committee room.

The SPEAKER. On business of the House?

Mr. LETCHER. In the discharge of my duties as a member of the committee. Does the Chair think I have a right to vote under these circumstances? Because it may happen that I shall be engaged there during a great part of the remainder of the session, and I do not want to lose my right to vote here.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman would ask leave of the House for his committee to sit during the sessions of the House, he would then have the right to vote when absent on the business of the committee.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. To settle this matter at once, I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of Ways and Means have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. It is absolutely necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object.

Mr. TALBOT. I was not within the bar when my name was called, or I should have voted "no."

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I now renew the request which I made just now—that the Committee of Ways and Means have leave hereafter to sit during the sessions of the House. I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi withdraws his objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I objected because I do not believe that distinctions should be made between committees of the House. But, as it is near the close of the session, and as the Committee of Ways and Means has very important duties to discharge, I am willing, under the circumstances, to withdraw the objection.

No further objection being made, leave was granted to the Committee of Ways and Means to sit during the sessions of the House.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. MORGAN moved to reconsider the vote; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion to reconsider, inasmuch as the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania can be repeated ad infinitum.

CASE OF JUDGE WATROUS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now propose to call up the report of the Judiciary Committee on the subject of the impeachment of Judge Watrous. The House will remember that, a few days since, when a report was made by myself, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the matter was postponed until this morning, and leave was given to the three branches of the committee that they should be allowed until this morning to present their reports to the House. It is important that the reports should be presented this morning. The branch of the committee with which I act is ready to report; and I desire now, if the other branches of the committee are ready, to present our report to the House.

Mr. READY. In behalf of one branch of the committee with whom I act, I must say to the House that we are not ready at present to make a report. We have a report in course of preparation; we have been doing all we could to complete it, and shall be ready, certainly, by Monday next to present it. It has been utterly impossible to prepare it up to this time; and we must therefore throw ourselves upon the indulgence of the House until Monday morning. It is a subject of great importance. There is an immense mass of testimony, oral and written, which must necessarily be gone over, to some extent, in order to be able to present the prominent points.

There are a good many questions which may probably come up in the course of the investigation of the subject, and as that portion of the committee with which I act differ in the degree of guilt to be ascribed to Judge Watrous by another portion of the committee, inasmuch as we hold the negative, it is a matter of more labor perhaps to prepare a report, than it is to prepare a report on the affirmative side of the question. We have, to some extent, at least, to go upon the suppositions as to the points which will be presented by the affirmative report. Of course we are anxious to meet all the points which may arise in the case, and it may turn out that we will spend a good deal of time and labor upon points which will not be presented. But we are not certain of that. We have not had perhaps as full information upon the points on which that portion of the committee who hold the affirmative will rely in their report, as we should have desired. We have not, of course, seen their report. Their points were not stated in committee; and, though I am bound in justice to some of the gentlemen to say that, in conversation with them since, they have manifested a disposition, in response to my inquiries, to give me information as to the points upon which they will rely, the negative have, perhaps, to use a common expression, "the laboring oar in their hands."

Mr. WINSLOW. I desire to ask if there is any report of the majority in this case at all? Have they recommended any action to the House?

The SPEAKER. There was a report presented the other day by the majority of the committee.

Mr. READY. A simple resolution, stating that they had been unable to agree.

Mr. WINSLOW. So I understood—that four of the committee were in favor of impeachment and four against it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, that a few days ago a report was presented from the committee—a unanimous report, as the Chair understood—setting forth the fact, that in committee, four of the members were in favor of articles of impeachment, and four against it. The report further craved permission of the House that each branch of the committee should be permitted to present their views to the House to-day. The gentleman from Alabama, as the Chair understands, as the representative of one branch of the committee, proposes now to submit his report. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. READY,] representing the other branch, states that he is not ready to submit his report.

Mr. WINSLOW. So I understand it. But does the Chair hold that either of these can be received as reports of committees? I understand that in Parliament a committee must report, or ask to be discharged. If a subject is referred to a committee, as this subject has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, they must report what action the House, in their judgment, shall take. But in this case, instead of executing the order of the House, they come back and tell us they cannot make up their minds what the House ought to do.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will explain. The Committee on the Judiciary, under the previous orders of the House, procured a large mass of testimony. When that testimony was closed, upon the voting of the committee, the vote was, of course, taken upon a resolution to impeach, and then upon a resolution setting forth the converse of the proposition. The committee were equally divided, four and four, one member of the committee not having acted with the committee in this investigation. Both resolutions necessarily failed; and then the committee unanimously instructed me to report to the House that fact, together with the two resolutions, and also with the request that the House would allow the various branches of the committee to present their views to-day; for although it is true they were divided four to four upon the resolutions, yet they were divided, four, three, and one upon their reports, one gentleman not being willing to concur in the reasoning of the other three with whom he voted. The House granted the permission which was asked, and now it is the right of the committee to present their views; and though it may not be formal, yet a report was formally presented by me as the organ of the committee; it was received by the House as such, and the permission for the minorities of the committee to present their views granted.

Mr. GROW. I presume it is hardly the intention of the gentleman from Alabama to have the resolutions presented in this case acted upon during the present session. If it would meet the gentleman's approbation, I propose that the several branches of the committee have leave to present their views at any time during the session; that they shall be printed, and the subject postponed until the third Monday in December. The testimony, I understand, is very voluminous, and the House could hardly be expected to act upon it before that time.

Mr. HOUSTON. So far as I am concerned, I should have no objection to that course. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. READY] to say that he is not ready to present his report, and desires time until Monday. I, of course, can present no objection to that proposition, though I think it is very desirable that the reports should be presented this morning. I am aware of the great labor which the gentleman must necessarily incur in preparing that report. I can very readily conceive how the gentleman should be justified in the use of the expression that he had the "laboring oar" in his hands. I am willing to concede that, with the evidence before us, it is an easier matter for the affirmative to make out their case, and I presume the House will concede the fact when they come to examine the evidence. But, sir, unless the gentleman is prepared to make his report at this time, I am not willing to present the views of that portion of the committee which I represent at this time, and I therefore move to postpone the matter until Monday, and that the various branches of the committee have leave to report at that time.

I was going to say this in reply to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has propounded: that it is important that the House should act upon the matter on Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday next, and either adopt a resolution of impeachment or defeat it, especially if the determination of the House shall be to adopt it.

Mr. GROW. How voluminous is this testimony?

Mr. HOUSTON. The testimony which was not in the case at the last session of Congress consists of about four hundred pages.

Mr. GROW. And with that of last Congress, how much?

Mr. HOUSTON. With that of last Congress, it is presumed the gentleman from Pennsylvania is familiar.

Mr. GROW. I know it is very long, but I have not read it through.

Mr. HOUSTON. With that testimony, there will be probably six or seven hundred pages. I answer at a mere guess.

Mr. READY. Over a thousand pages, I should think.

Mr. HOUSTON. Admitted. But I was going to make this reply: when the two reports, or the three reports, come in, as they will come in on Monday morning, if it be postponed to that time, then the members of the House will be able, from an examination of the reports, to come to a conclusion, and vote either for or against the resolution of impeachment. The resolution, as my friend from Pennsylvania very well knows, is simply that a trial shall be had. It does not conclude the rights of Judge Watrous, or of anybody. It simply proposes that the case shall be sent to the Senate for trial.

Mr. GROW. My only object in making the proposition was to facilitate business. I did not propose to interfere with the recommendation of the gentleman. I am satisfied with his explanation.

Mr. HOUSTON. My purpose is, not to put the case out of the control of the House at this time, so that if the House shall determine to pass the resolution, it will have the power to do so. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. READY] proposes to ask till Monday next to make his report, I move that leave be granted, and that the case be postponed till that day.

Mr. READY. One word further. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Alabama for the motion which he has made. I think that is the fair and liberal course, and I am only sorry he did not adopt it a little sooner and save the time of the House consumed in this discussion. But I want to say one word in reply to a little fling which the gentleman has made at the portion of the committee with which I act. He says we have the laboring oar, and that he is not at all surprised we would find it difficult to make our report. I join issue with my friend from Alabama. I deny that we have the laboring oar, while I admit that it is a matter of considerable difficulty and time to prepare a proper report. But that is because the grounds on which we suppose the gentlemen with whom my friend from Alabama acts are so intangible and imperceptible that it would require a microscopic vision to perceive anything in them on which to base a report. But still, small and minute as the points may be, we think it is but respectful to the gentlemen with whom we are associated, and also to the House, to meet the points which they may think proper to present. Therefore it is that our report requires so much labor. It is suggested to me to call the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will do that myself. I regret very much that my friend from Tennessee seems to take it in such high dudgeon that I agree with him—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion to further postpone the further consideration.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not going to make a speech. I just wish to say to my friend from Tennessee, that he argued to show that he had the laboring oar, and had a hard case to make out. I agreed with him; and he now complains of me for doing so. I hardly know what to do to satisfy him.

The motion to postpone till Monday next was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to postpone was agreed to, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to report back, from the Joint Committee on the Library, the bill (H. R. No. 583) providing for keeping and distributing all public documents. I desire to put it upon its passage. I think there will be very little objection to the bill.

The bill was read. The first section charges the Secretary of the Interior with receiving, arranging, safe-keeping, and distribution of all printed Journals of the two Houses of Congress, and all other books and documents, of every nature whatever, already or hereafter directed by law to be printed or purchased for the use of the Government, except of such as are directed to be printed or purchased for the particular use of Congress, or of either House thereof, or for the particular use of the Executive or of any of the Departments; and for this purpose the Secretary of the Interior is directed to set apart a proper room or rooms in the Patent Office building to be used for this and no other purpose; and the Superintendent of Public Printing, public printer, binder, or contractor, or any other person whose duty it shall be by law to deliver any of the same, shall deliver the same to him there.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to obtain and remove from the other Departments and offices, and from the Congressional Library, and other places where the same are now kept, all such Journals, books, and other documents now on hand and described in the foregoing section; and for this purpose, so much as is necessary of the appropriation made in the following clause of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858," approved March 3, 1857, to wit: "For expenses of packing and distributing congressional Journals and documents, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the joint resolution of Congress, approved 28th of January, 1857, $22,000," as remains unexpended, is appropriated.

Section three provides that a register of such Journals, books, and other documents shall be kept under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, showing the quantity and kind of each at any time received by him in pursuance of this act; and it shall be his duty to cause to be entered in such register, at the proper time, when, where, and to whom the same, or any part of them, have been distributed and delivered, and to report the same to Congress at the first session of each Congress.

Section four provides that the same shall be delivered out by the Secretary of the Interior only on the written requisition of the heads of the Departments, Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House of Representatives, Librarian of Congress, and other officers and persons, private and corporate, who are by law authorized to receive the same, except where by law the Secretary of the Interior is required, without such requisition, to cause the same to be sent and delivered; and that in either of such cases it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause the same to be sent and delivered, the expenses thereof, except when otherwise directed, to be charged on the contingent fund of the Department.

Section five provides that all such Journals, books, and other documents, shall hereafter be distributed according to and for the purposes now prescribed by law, except that the distribution of the same to the Governors of the States and Territories, and to the judges of the courts of the United States, and other officers and public bodies within the States or Territories shall be wholly under the control of the Secretary of the Interior; and the joint resolution approved March 20, 1858, supplementary to the joint resolution of January 28, 1857, respecting the distribution of certain documents, is hereby repealed, except so much of it as strikes out the words "by him" at the end of the third section of said joint resolution, and substitutes in place thereof the words "to him by the Representative in Congress from each congressional district, and by the Delegate from each Territory in the United States;" provided, that such distribution shall first be made at the instance of the Representatives in Congress from districts in which said public documents have not already been distributed, so that the quantity distributed to each congressional district and Territory shall be equal.

Section six repeals the tenth section of an act entitled "An act to establish the 'Smithsonian Institution' for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men," approved August 10, 1846.

Section seven declares, that by this act the distribution of all the works mentioned in the first section as public documents is intended and directed to be made, except the "Exploring Expedition" conducted by Commander Wilkes.

Section eight provides, that all books, maps, charts, and other publications of every nature whatever, heretofore deposited in the Department of State according to the laws regulating copyrights, together with all the records of the Department of State in regard to the same, shall be removed to, and be under the control of, the Department of the Interior, which is charged with all the duties connected with the same, and with all matters pertaining to copyright, in the same manner and to the same extent that the Department of State is now charged with the same; and that hereafter all such publications, of every nature whatever, shall, under present laws and regulations, be left with and kept by him.

Section nine provides, that the Joint Committee on the Library may, at any time, dispose of duplicate, injured, or wasted books of the library, or any other matter in the library not deemed proper to it, in such manner as such committee may deem best.

Section ten provides, that all such books and documents, when received at the proper office, libraries, &c., as provided by law, shall be kept there and not removed from such places.

DEATH OF SENATOR HENDERSON.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, its Secretary, communicating to the House the fact that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

June 5, 1858.

Resolved, unanimously. That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect to

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 171.

the memory of Hon. J. PRICKNEY HENDERSON, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Texas, will go into mourning, for the residue of the present session, by the usual mode of wearing crape on the left arm.

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the Senate will attend the funeral of the deceased, from the Senate Chamber, at three o'clock to-morrow; and that the committee of arrangements, consisting of Messrs. BAYARD, CAMERON, CLAY, WADE, HAMMOND, and SEWARD, superintend the same.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives.

Attest: ASBURY DICKINS, Secretary.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the announcement just made from the Senate reminds us that another has been stricken from the roll of great men.

Texas again sorrows. She has lost her Rusk and her HENDERSON!

She comes among you, Representatives of the States united, a stricken State. Her mighty men have fallen. She weeps for the loss of the gifted and the able, the eloquent and the chivalrous. HENDERSON was a soldier by nature, a statesman by experience, knowledge, and wisdom; a good man from heart and reason.

He stood in the front rank of southern patriots and Texan heroes. True to his friends, false to no man or cause, he was elevated to the seat that death has just vacated, by the unanimous voice of the Representatives of his State—a place once filled by a Rusk; and which, had health and life been accorded to him, would have been honored by a HENDERSON.

You cannot know him as we in Texas knew him. Had he been spared to us in his usefulness and vigor of health and mind, you would have admired, esteemed, and loved him. His character was frank and liberal, of indomitable will and purity of purpose, with great originality of thought and action. He scorned everything like trick or artifice; with a free spirit and an untrammelled mind, he would have been the Rusk and the Clay of the Senate. This may strike some as language too strong. It is what I mean, and, because believing it to be true, I speak it. Engaged by his bed-side in his last moments, and since in his behalf, I have had no time to prepare such remarks as are appropriate to the occasion. Consequently, I can give but little information as to his early life. Born in Lincoln county, North Carolina, on the 31st of March, 1808, he grew up in that State, in body and in mind, as straight as the pines of the old North State. He fitted himself for the law, and was practicing with success his profession when the wail of Goliad and the stern cry of the Alamo reached his ears.

His noble soul was moved to decisive action. He left the scenes and friends of his childhood for the rough life of a Texan soldier. He came to Texas as a volunteer in 1836, and entered the army as a brigadier-general. When the army was disbanded, he was appointed Attorney General in the cabinet of the President of Texas. He was afterwards appointed Secretary of State. In 1838 he was sent as minister to France, where he remained three years. He here met with his wife, Miss Cox, of Philadelphia. On his return to Texas he was offered a situation in the cabinet, which he declined.

He commenced the practice of the law, with General Rusk as partner, in Eastern Texas. In 1843 he was associated with the resident minister at Washington, Mr. Van Zandt, to negotiate a treaty of annexation with the United States Government. He was a member of the convention that framed the State constitution of Texas, and was inaugurated the first Governor of the State after annexation.

In the war with Mexico, as major general, he commanded the Texan troops called into the service of the States. His gallantry at Monterey placed upon his brow the laurel of the soldier, while his ability as a statesman had previously obtained for him the civic wreath.

Upon the expiration of his gubernatorial term he returned to his home at San Augustine, and resumed the practice of his profession, with eminent success, until he was called by the voice of his State to fill the place of the illustrious Rusk. This position he did not seek; it was thrust upon him. Would that he had never accepted it; for, had he not, he would now be within the influence of the balmy clime of Cuba. He was in Havana when the political strife upon the Kansas question within these Halls was at its height. Believing that his duty to the South and country required his presence here, he came; he came to fall a martyr to his fidelity to the State of his love and the institutions of his section.

Although for a long time he refused to accept office, yet, in retirement, he never forgot the duties of the citizen. He was an active State-rights Democrat, of the Calhoun school; and, as such, contributed as much as, if not more than, any other man in his State, to bringing Texas to the present high position she now occupies among her sisters of the South.

He regarded the continued agitation of the slavery question as full of peril to the Union, and as humiliating to the sovereign States of the South, and destructive of their rights in the Union. He regarded the opposition to slavery as having entered into the head and heart of the great masses of the people at the North, and that they were honest in entertaining this opposition. He believed that nothing could save the South in the Union but union and decisive action on the part of the South. For he thought, until the South convinced the North that they were united in wisdom, feeling, and action, upon that great question, which rises superior to every other, so long would they of the North regard the protests of the South as idle tales made for political effect only. Hence he was opposed to any concession in the late contest upon the Kansas question. We cordially conferred and acted together up to the vote upon the conference bill.

A short time before the vote was taken in the House, he sent for me to come to him in the Senate Chamber. We then finally determined our course. We were both opposed to the measure. He said that he could not vote for it; but, rising superior to and far beyond the feelings of the politician, looking at the future with the forecast of a statesman, he said, "I cannot vote for the bill, but I cannot be instrumental in dividing the South: I would rather know that I am right than aid error for the sake of appearing right; consequently, I will not vote at all." These statements I make as an act of justice to the lamented Senator, so that it may go back to his people that he was ever mindful of the interests and honor of Texas. He died yesterday of disease of the lungs, at half past five, p. m., with his accomplished and bereaved wife, his physician, my colleague, and myself, at his bedside.

He retained his consciousness to the last moment. His last intelligible words were, "It is my last prayer." He has too soon followed (to join) his friend and partner, the noble Rusk. Texas mourns the loss of her noble sons. A great people weep over their hier.

"There is a tear for all who die,
A mourner o'er the humblest grave;
But nations swell the funeral cry,
And triumph weeps above the brave."

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States has received with the deepest sensibility intelligence of the death of J. P. HENDERSON, a Senator from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That the officers and members of the House of Representatives will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, as a testimony of the respect this House entertains for the memory of the deceased.

Resolved, That the officers and members of the House of Representatives, in a body, will attend the funeral of J. P. HENDERSON on to-morrow at three o'clock, p. m., in the Chamber of the Senate.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this House, in relation to the death of J. P. HENDERSON, be communicated to the family of the deceased by the Clerk.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. QUITMAN. It was but an hour before the meeting of the House that I received a notication that the members from Texas desired that I should take part in adding a tribute to the memory of their deceased Senator. Without any preparation, therefore, I come before the House to give my full approval to all that has been so eloquently said by my friend from Texas [Mr. BRYAN] in regard to the talents, character, and virtues of the lamented Senator from Texas. It is, sir, but a few months since I was called upon similarly in this House to make some remarks upon the melancholy announcement of the death of the late Thomas J. Rusk, Senator from Texas. Since that time our sister State, yet grieving for the loss of her distinguished and deceased Senator, proceeded to select, from among her most patriotic and well-tried men, a representative of her sovereignty, to fill the place vacated by the death of the lamented Rusk. Following the direction of general public sentiment, the Legislature unanimously selected for this prominent and responsible station J. PRICKNEY HENDERSON, whose lamented death has just been so eloquently announced by the member from Texas, [Mr. BRYAN.]

The garlands cast upon the tomb of the late illustrious Rusk are scarcely withered ere we are again called upon to sympathize with our sister State in the loss of an equally worthy and distinguished successor, who had scarcely taken his seat before he was summoned to another and better world.

Thus, in the short space of a few months, we have twice been called upon to mourn with Texas in her irreparable bereavements. There is, Mr. Speaker, a remarkable parallel between the history and character of these two men, who have succeeded one another so rapidly in the Senate. They were friends, and at one time partners in the practice of their profession. Both, for similar reasons, emigrated to Texas in 1836; both took prominent part in the war of their independence, and in the construction and afterwards the administration of the government which was founded upon the success of that war. Both were ardent friends of annexation; and, at last, both were appointed representatives of their State in the Senate of the United States, and died in the performance of their duties. Both enjoyed the entire confidence of the people of their State, and both departed to their long homes without a stain or imputation upon their private character.

General Rusk had, from his long services in the Federal councils, acquired more reputation beyond the limits of Texas; but it is believed by all who knew General HENDERSON that, had he been favored with an opportunity of displaying his talents and statesmanship, the high traits of character which he possessed, he would soon have been placed amongst the first statesmen of the country.

I knew him personally well, both as a soldier and statesman. We were associated in the attack upon Monterey, in the war with Mexico. We assimilated in political creeds, and after the Mexican war we frequently corresponded upon political subjects. General HENDERSON's public and private character was unblemished and without a stain, and he had traits of character which at once attracted the attention of all who had the good fortune to form his acquaintance. He was frank, high-toned, and honorable, without guile or dissimulation. Abhorring deception in political matters, as well as in private transactions, he gave his opinions on all subjects with candor and truth, never practicing or countenancing dissimulation on any subject. It was these bold and prominent traits that acquired for him in his own State that high reputation and confidence which few ever acquire among their fellow men. It was these noble qualities that drew forth my admiration and respect. I rose, however, Mr. Speaker, merely to add a few words to what has been said by my friend from Texas, and to second the resolutions which have been presented by him.

The resolutions were then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at two o'clock, p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 7, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. J. MORSELL.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. DAVIS presented the credentials of the Hon. ALBERT GALLATIN BROWN, elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, for the term of six years, beginning the 4th of March, 1859; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of citizens of Muskingum county, Ohio, praying the enactment of a general bankrupt law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the affidavit of John W. Blake, relative to the election of the Hon. JESSE D. BRIGHT and the Hon. GRAHAM N. FITCH, as Senators of the State of Indiana in the Congress of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BIGLER presented a petition of citizens of Bourbon county, Kansas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Kansas City to Fort Scott; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. KENNEDY presented resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland relative to the construction of a new canal around the falls of the Ohio river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill, (C. C. No. 84,) received from the House of Representatives on Saturday last, for the relief of Ferdinand Coxe, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETER PARKER.

The bill (H. R. C. C. No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker, was read twice by its title.

Mr. IVERSON. I wish to make a motion in relation to that bill. The Committee on Claims of the Senate, to which it would be referred, have already considered the question, having had a similar bill before them; and I therefore ask the Senate to act upon it now, without referring it to the committee. The Senate, at the last session, passed precisely the same bill. It simply allows him the difference between his pay as chargé d'affaires and commissioner to China for the time he acted in that capacity. It is, I believe, in accordance with a well-settled principle.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A mistake has occurred in reporting to the House of Representatives the action of the Senate upon House bill No. 356. It was reported to the House by the Secretary of the Senate, as having passed this body without amendment, when, in fact, it passed the Senate with an amendment. I ask leave to move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the engrossed bill, in order that the report from the Senate to the House may be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senate that this was a House private bill. It passed the Senate with an amendment striking out the second section. By some mistake in the office that amendment was not noticed, and the bill was sent back to the House of Representatives as having passed the Senate without amendment. It has been enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses, and it will be for the Senate to say what is the best disposition to make of the subject. No doubt the President, on a suggestion, would veto the bill on that ground; but it may be within the power of Congress to arrest it.

Mr. STUART. I should like to know when the bill was passed.

Mr. FOOT. I think it was on Friday.

Mr. STUART. If it was passed last Friday, it can be reconsidered; the time allowed for reconsideration has not expired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senate passed the bill on Friday last.

Mr. PUGH. I think it is better to send to the House of Representatives for the bill, and then we can act upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion that the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I delivered that bill to the President, this morning, and you cannot get it back now without a foot race.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senate that he had a conference with the Speaker of the House of Representatives this morning in regard to the bill, and deeming it probable that the bill had gone to the President, it was suggested between them that the suggestion might be made to him.

Mr. JONES. I took it to the President this morning.

Mr. PUGH. If the bill is here, we had better return it to the House of Representatives; that is the shortest way.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A bill for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased.

Mr. JONES. That is not the bill I alluded to. That has not yet been taken to the President.

Mr. PUGH. Then I move that the Secretary return the bill to the House of Representatives.

Mr. STUART. That cannot be done. The only way to reach it is to go on with a motion to reconsider, and then we can take such action as is necessary. We cannot return a bill to the House unless they request it.

Mr. PUGH. Then I will make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It strikes me that the point of mistake in regard to this bill was, in making the report from the Senate to the House of Representatives, that the bill had passed the Senate without amendment, when, in fact, it had passed with an amendment. There is the origin of the mistake, and there is the point at which we should begin. The truth is, this bill has now passed both Houses, but there has been a mistake in reporting the action of the Senate to the House of Representatives, and I think the true course for us to take is to request the House of Representatives to return the engrossed bill to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion has been agreed to.

Mr. STUART. Then, sir, if that be the state of the case, the Senate may correct its message to the House.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And then the House can concur in our amendment or otherwise.

MISSOURI TWO PER CENT.

Mr. PUGH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 303) giving the assent of Congress to a law of the Legislature of Missouri, for the application of the reserved two per cent. fund of the said State was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. A similar bill has already been favorably reported upon by that committee, and I think this House bill had better be put on its passage, or placed on the Calendar now.

Mr. HUNTER. It would be better to move to discharge the committee from its consideration.

Mr. PUGH. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. I now ask that the bill to be put upon its passage. It relates to the two per cent. reserved from several States for the purpose of completing the national road. The Government never completed the road west of Springfield, Illinois.

Mr. COLLAMER. I object to the passage of that bill.

Mr. PUGH. It is a fund that belongs to the State.

Mr. COLLAMER. I say it does not belong to the State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill cannot now be considered; but must take its place upon the Calendar.

ANNUAL EXPENDITURE.

Mr. HUNTER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause the heads of the Executive Departments to submit estimates, at the next session of Congress, upon the basis of an expenditure not exceeding sixty million dollars, exclusive of the payment of the public debt for the fiscal year commencing the 1st of July, 1859.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STUART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 440) for the relief of James Tilton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 392) to continue the office of register of the land office at Vincennes, Indiana, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 489) for the relief of congressional township number twenty-seven north, of range number six east, in Wabash county, in the State of Indiana; and

A bill (H. R. No. 358) for the relief of settlers on certain lands in the State of Illinois.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 365) authorizing the judges of the late Territory of Minnesota to discharge certain trusts, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 34) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi and other States," approved the 3d of March, 1857, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed. The bill was ordered to lie on the table, no action on the subject being deemed necessary.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 433) to run, mark, and survey the western boundary of the State of Minnesota, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, reported a bill (S. No. 441) relinquishing the interest of the United States in certain land to the city of St. Paul, Minnesota; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 432) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1856," reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills and resolution, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 105) to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 246) to provide for the geological and mineralogical survey of the Territory of New Mexico;

A joint resolution (S. No. 27) authorizing the suspension of sales of public lands in the Territory of Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 24) to secure to actual settlers the alternate sections of the public lands reserved in the grants to the States for railroads;

A bill (S. No. 415) to extend the principles of the preemption act to certain lands herein mentioned, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 378) to enable Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, to found and establish a professorship of agriculture and mechanical science, and to complete her endowment fund, and for the benefit of the public schools of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. No. 379) to enable the Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, to found and establish a professorship of agriculture and mechanical science, and complete her endowment fund, and for the benefit of the public schools of Washington, District of Columbia.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred two petitions of citizens of Washington, praying a donation of land or an appropriation of money for the permanent endowment of the Columbian College in the District of Columbia; a memorial of the trustees of Columbian College, at the city of Washington, praying a grant of land for the endowment of said college; a memorial of the Minnesota Legislature, praying relief to those settlers whose preëmption claims have been lost by the grant of lands to Minnesota for railroad purposes; a petition of R. T. Walton and other heirs-at-law of Jehu Walton; a memorial of the Minnesota Legislature for an amendment to the second section of an act granting land to Minnesota for railroad purposes; a petition of commissioned officers of the rifle company of the fourteenth regiment of the fourth division of Michigan militia; a resolution by Mr. JONES instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of establishing two new land offices in Nebraska Territory; a petition of citizens of the town of Fort Scott, Kansas; a petition of citizens of Bourbon county, Kansas, settlers on lands known as the New York Indian lands; a petition of S. Gilbert and others, praying that a grant of land may be made to aid in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; a petition of Noah Gammon; a memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, praying that the unsurveyed swamp lands may be patented to that State without being surveyed; resolutions of the Legislature of California in favor of the enactment of a law granting to that State five per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands in California for school purposes; resolutions of the Legislature of Wisconsin in favor of a donation of land to aid in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; a resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of the enactment of a law granting land to actual settlers in that State; a petition of E. G. Spaulding and others, that the public lands be not granted to corporations; resolutions of the Legislature of California in relation to school lands in that State; a communication from A. J. Moulder, superintendent of public instruction of California; a memorial of the Legislature of Nebraska in relation to the establishment of a new surveying district and the office of surveyor general for that Territory; a petition of citizens of Buffalo, New York, against the granting of the public lands to corporations, and that they be retained for actual settlers only; asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Detroit, Michigan; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Huntsville, Alabama; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Helena, Arkansas; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Fort Des Moines, Iowa; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Jackson, Mississippi; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Indianapolis, Indiana; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Fort Dodge, Iowa; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Montgomery, Alabama; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Huntsville, Alabama; a memorial of the register and receiver at the land office at Fayette, Missouri; a memorial of the register and receiver at the land office at New Orleans, Louisiana; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at St. Stephens, Alabama; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Superior, Wisconsin; a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Washington, Mississippi; and a memorial of the register and receiver of the land office at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, severally praying an increase of compensation, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of John Campbell; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) giving construction to the second section of the act of February 3, 1853, "to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans."

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Augustus J. Kuhn, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Barnstable, Massachusetts, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 264) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, New York, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 558) making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1859, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petition of William R. Whiting; resolutions of the Legislature of New York, relative to pensions to soldiers of the Indian wars of 1791 and 1795; the petition of Margaret McGuire; and the memorial of Elizabeth Spear, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the papers relating to the claim of Louis Roberts; the papers in relation to the claim of Alexander Wood, administrator of the estate of William Wood and George M. Wood; the papers relating to the claim of Adam P. Shegley; the papers in relation to the claim of John N. Dodgson; the papers in relation to the claim of Alexander Wood, administrator of the estate of Josiah W. Stewart; the memorial of George T. Durham; and the petition of Samuel J. Hensley; asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred two memorials of citizens of New York and Brooklyn, praying the adoption of measures to ascertain the correctness of certain alleged discoveries of guano in Jarvis and Bakers' Island, in the Pacific ocean, the quality of guano, and its accessibility to merchant vessels, submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 647) to change the time of holding the spring term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Texas; and

A bill (No. 648) for the relief of Gottlieb Scherer.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 198) for the relief of Joseph Hardy and Alton Long; and

A bill (No. 230) for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased.

MARY A. M. JONES.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. On Friday last, the bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Mary A. M. Jones, was passed; but afterwards, a motion was made to reconsider, and that motion was taken up and agreed to. I ask that the bill may now be taken up and put upon its final passage. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill; the question being on its passage.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask the Senator from New Jersey upon what principle this bill is founded; what are the grounds on which this pension is excepted from the general law of the land, which does not allow it? and then, if he thinks proper to answer the question, I have some observations to make.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made in the House of Representatives by Mr. FLORENCE, on the 12th of March last.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Mary A. M. Jones, widow of the late Brevet Major General Roger Jones, report:

That they have carefully examined the claim, and fully concur in the report made to the House by the Committee on Invalid Pensions at the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress. That report is herewith annexed and made part of this.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 13, 1854.

Mr. DEUT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Mary A. M. Jones, widow of the late Brevet Major General Roger Jones, report:

That the petitioner is the widow of the late Brevet Major General Roger Jones, who entered the military service of his country in 1809, and so continued to the day of his death, July 15, 1832; that he served throughout the war of 1812, and was distinguished in almost every action fought on the Canada frontier; was wounded with a bayonet in one, and was twice brevetted for gallantry on the field of battle; that he filled the important post of Adjutant General from 1825 to the day of his death—in the language of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, "bringing to the discharge of his highly difficult and responsible duties an intelligence, honesty of purpose, and untiring devotion, which carried him through every emergency with credit to himself and advantage to the public service." That his distinguished and valuable services during the Mexican war won for him the brevet of major general, it being the fifth brevet won by him for gallant and meritorious services. It is clearly proved by his attending physician and other testimony, that the close and continued confinement, occasioned by the accumulation of business in the Adjutant General's office during the Mexican war, impaired his health, undermined his constitution, and abridged his life; in fact, that the unintermitting and arduous labors called for by the exigencies of the public service—labors which he perseveringly and often painfully discharged at times when his enfeebled health demanded a relaxation of his official duties—were eventually the cause of his death.

The petitioner was left, by the untimely death of her husband, with a family of eleven children, eight of whom are infants and daughters, without adequate means for their education and support, which has compelled her to appeal to the equity and justice of Congress for relief by way of pension, according to the usage in such cases, furnishing numerous precedents of the last and present Congress in cases analogous to hers. The committee, in view of the facts, the long and distinguished services of General Jones, and the impoverished condition of the widow and children, report a bill.

Since the date of that report your committee have received the following letter from Major General Winfield Scott on the subject:

February 9, 1858.

I beg to say to the Hon. Mr. Jewett, and the House Committee on Pensions, that I was intimately acquainted, throughout his long services, with the late Major General Jones, having often seen him in battle, and almost daily, for a great many years, in his capacity of Adjutant General. I am, therefore, enabled to say, from personal knowledge, that nearly all the facts set forth in the within memorial I know to be perfectly true, and those not witnessed by me I fully believe to be true. So much merit, continued in various ways for so many years, it would be difficult to exaggerate, as it would be the merits of the family seeking relief at the hands of a great and liberal country.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Your committee report a bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. I moved the reconsideration of this bill because it was establishing a precedent as to pensions to which I am opposed. The officer to whose widow it is sought by this bill to give a pension was a gentleman of character, and did his duty—a brave and courageous man; but for the last thirty years of his life he was in this city as Adjutant General of the Army of the United States. This is not one of the cases in which the law of the country, and I think the policy of the country, have entitled the family to a pension. He died after a residence of more than thirty years in this city, in the bosom of his family, with a compensation the greatest allowed in any Army in the world. There are no special reasons of any sort connected with this case. During the Revolution no man's widow was pensioned unless he died in action. For fifty years afterwards no man's widow was pensioned. It was in 1832 that the first pension to widows was granted, on the ground that they had shared with the soldiers in the toils and privations of the revolutionary struggle. Subsequently it was carried to those who were married before 1794, and then to 1800; and within the last four years you have given pensions to those who were widows of revolutionary soldiers, no matter when they were married. It was the general relaxation of principle under the tendency of the country, day by day increasing, of squandering the public money upon any object whatever.

Now, sir, this bill establishes a principle which, if it be a sound one, ought to be universal, and ought to be extended to the case of every man who has done his duty, as long as he lived. As to so much of the report as states that the life of General Jones was abridged by attending to his duties, it is discreditable to the committee of the other branch to report it. It is not a reason. He attended to civil duties five or six hours of the day, and he lived to a ripe old age. I believe he passed the ordinary period of life which the good book prescribes. I think he went beyond his three-score years and ten. He lived to a green old age, and died in his bed, after spending the last thirty or forty years of his life in this city as Adjutant General of the Army of the United States, with high emoluments, and had not even seen the face of an enemy from his early youth.

If this bill be passed, you ought to give a pension to the widow of every officer who dies in his bed. The whole policy is wrong. If you are going to grant pensions on exceptional grounds, the exception ought to be for some great and eminent service. If you take anybody out of the rule, you ought to do it for exceptions plain, apparent, and very carefully done. This very committee, I think, has refused to grant a pension to the widow of another officer of merit and distinction, Colonel Turnbull. I do not know that that was well refused; I only say this is ill granted, and on insufficient reasons. It will not do to speak of the toils of office. Probably there is not a gentleman in this body who could not make as good a case. I have heard complaint that our sittings here and long service impair the health of some gentlemen, and many have lost their lives while in the Senate. Why not give pensions to their widows? Sir, this is made a pretense; it is not a reason for pensions. It is against the well-settled policy of the Government, established from the foundation of the Republic. This is a system of favoritism that ought not to be allowed. To record my protest against the case, and against the policy, I shall call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. The honorable Senator from Georgia objects to the passage of this bill on the ground that it establishes a new precedent. Now, sir, nothing in the world can be a greater mistake than that. Congress has been in the habit of legislating in this way, granting pensions to widows in a great many cases; and, with the permission of the Senate, I will state a few. Mrs. Margaret L. Worth, widow of the late Brevet Brigadier General Worth, received a pension of fifty dollars a month, by the act of January 7, 1853; Mrs. Elizabeth Armisted, widow of Colonel Armisted, of the third artillery, received a pension by the act of January 20, 1853; Mrs. Elizabeth McNeil, widow of the late Brigadier General McNeil, who was not in the Army at the time of his death, or for many years previous, received a pension by the act of February 11, 1853; Mrs. Mary V. Lomax, Mrs. Frances E. Baden, Mrs. Elizabeth Monroe, Mrs. Mary E. Winship, and many others, have received pensions on the same principle. All those acts have been passed by Congress, granting pensions to widows of meritorious officers who had died, not from wounds received or disabilities incurred in the service of the United States. The case is a highly meritorious one, and I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. HAYNE. I rise to say a single word. I can tell my distinguished friend from Georgia that the cases of Colonel Turnbull and General Jones, between which he has drawn a parallel, are exceedingly different. He understands as well as any individual, the difference between a veteran soldier from A to Z, and a young man of high talent, character, and respectability, as Colonel Turnbull was. I cannot, on this occasion, avoid saying a word in behalf of an old comrade who, from the moment he joined the service, performed the most arduous duties, distinguished himself in every engagement; a man of liberal feelings, honest, praiseworthy in every respect; who left behind him a large family in poverty. After the cases stated by my honorable friend from New Jersey, I do not see why this is not the strongest case of the whole. General Jones was wounded in action. At Chippewa, at Bridgewater, on every occasion that added honor to the glory and fame of the country, Jones was always at his post, imitating the Father of his Country, being a native of the same State.

Mr. SLIDELL. I should like to be informed what will be the pension granted under this bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to put the name of Mrs. Jones on the roll of pensions, and pay her a pension at the rate of one half the monthly pay to which her husband was entitled at the time of his death. I always prefer, when voting for a bill of this sort, to know exactly what I am voting for; and if the Senator who reported the bill will inform me what one half the monthly pay of her late husband was, I shall be glad to know.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I think about fifty dollars a month; not exceeding that.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I should prefer to say in this bill "not exceeding fifty dollars a month." I would vote for the bill in that form. I move that amendment.

Mr. IVERSON. I suggest that the best course would be to insert the word "proper" after the word "pay."

Mr. SLIDELL. Say not exceeding fifty dollars a month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment can only be received by unanimous consent at this stage. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the language of the bill is that adopted by the usage of legislation and understood by the Department. One half the pay per month is the ordinary pension given. That is considered to mean one half the pay proper. The bill comes from the House of Representatives; the application has been before Congress for several years; and I should be very much indisposed now to agree to any amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. I had occasion to look at this subject lately, as I introduced a bill the other day for the relief of the widow of General Smith, and I prepared that bill in conformity to past usage. I really do not know what the half pay of a major general is. I very much prefer to call things by their right names. Though I am not inclined to support these bills generally, I am not at all opposed to an allowance of fifty dollars a month to Mrs. Jones; and I really can see no sort of objection to putting into the bill an amendment that it shall not exceed fifty dollars a month. The idea thrown out that to amend the bill will cause difficulty in the House of Representatives, is a mere bugbear. There is no difficulty at all. If the bill be sent back to the House of Representatives with such an amendment, the House will concur in the amendment, and the bill will be finally passed before the adjournment of Congress, without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. JONES. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, will not be agreed to. These pensions are gratuities granted by the Government of the United States to the families of the brave men who have served their country. There is no exact rule by which to judge of the amount that shall be paid to them, and I insist upon it, that if paid at all, they ought to be paid liberally. It has been the uniform practice in both Houses of Congress to report a bill granting half the pay to which the officer was entitled at the time of his death according to his rank, and I hope that will be given in this case, whether it amounts to fifty dollars a month or seventy-five dollars a month. I hope, that as gallant a man as General Jones was, may be honored after his death by a pension to his widow and children of half the amount of his monthly pay, whether it be seventy-five or one hundred dollars. In fact, however, it is not more than forty-five or fifty dollars. The Senator from Louisiana wishes to fix it at fifty dollars. That will cause the bill to go back to the House. There is no rule by which to judge of the matter. It is altogether a matter of gratuity on the part of the Government, and if we propose to be liberal, I want to be really so. I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am very much astonished at the indifference, I will not use another term, of the statements made by gentlemen as to the rule. If this man had died, sword in hand, storming the city of Mexico, his widow would have got the half pay of a lieutenant colonel in the Army, and no more.

Mr. JONES. Under the general law.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator said there was no rule. Here is a rule. Will Congress make an exception when a man dies in his bed after forty years' residence in this capital? Will it give greater pay to his widow than to the widow of a man who dies storming the batteries of the enemies of the country? Take all the men who shed their blood on the Canada frontier, at New Orleans, in Mexico, and not one of their widows gets more than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel. That is the law of the land. You may make an exception of course; you may give any favorite the pay of a lieutenant general; but if General Scott fell to-morrow in defense of the flag of his country, his widow could only get half the pay proper of a lieutenant colonel in the Army of the United States by law.

But the honorable Senator from New Jersey tells me of instances. What are his instances? He is mistaken as to my ground. I said it was against principle and against ancient practice; and every case he read was in 1853, or since that time. His precedents were set when we were departing from principle, when we were breaking up the very moorings of the Republic, when we have carried the Government from $30,000,000 to $80,000,000 a year, and there is no arresting the sluice—it is then that these extraordinary precedents come in. You did not apply any such principle to the men of the Revolution. My honorable friend from South Carolina talks of the gallantry of General Jones in two or three actions of the last war with England. Sir, there were brave men before Agamemnon. The men who shed their blood on the fields of the Revolution never got this bounty. The men who shed their blood in defense of your flag in the war of 1812 never got it. Why, then, shall the family of this man get it? Is it a question of patriotism? No, it is one of favoritism. There are thousands of cases where men have died sword in hand, and you have given their families what the country has judged a fair compensation; and more than that, it was part of the contract of their blood. You gave it to them when they entered the Army. They did not get a gratuity—which ought not to be given to anybody. Every case which has been presented or can be presented by the Senator from New Jersey, on behalf of the Committee on Pensions, is since 1853. Then, for seventy years of the Republic, there is not a case to be found by the committee; none for the Revolution; none for the war of 1812; none for your Indian wars. But for a few years past, when Congress has become profligate; when favoritism, not principle, rules their action; such provisions have been made. Some of the cases which he cited, however, were really within the equity of the general law, and then they ought to be exceptions. I recollect one case that met me here, where an officer was killed in the discharge of his duties. It was not in war, but he was engaged in arresting some deserters, and was killed while performing that duty. That was one of the cases. The case of McNeil was a flagrant violation of all principle. It passed here, as many other cases pass the Senate and House of Representatives, sub silentio, when principle is departed from. For the first forty years of the Government, if you look over the different reports of the Committees on Pensions, as I did when I served on that committee, you will find that they put them down on hard principles, and stood to them. Favoritism did not then control. It is only within the last four or five years that this profligacy has led to the violation of principles established since the foundation of the Government, bestowing gratuities and bounties on whoever would ask for them.

I know, sir, that it is a disagreeable task to oppose such bills. I know it brings nothing probably but denunciation. I know it is painful. I knew this man well. I had a high estimate of him as a gentleman who did his duty, and did it faithfully; but he was well rewarded for it. He reached the highest honors of his profession. At one time, I know, because we supposed he did not get his office of Adjutant General quite as soon as he ought to have got it, because Mr. Monroe did not act as we thought he ought to do, he came to Congress, and a special act was passed giving him $5,000 for an office he never held. Now, when he dies; after the Mexican war; after he has lived beyond the appointed age of mankind; we are told that his widow shall have half the pay of a major general in the United States Army. This cannot be a stronger case than that of many who have shed their blood in defense of the country. The bill ought to be amended, at least, to bring it down to half the pay of a lieutenant colonel in the Army; and I move that amendment; but I suppose the Senate will pass this, or any other bill, for a pension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present amendment is that offered by the Senator from Louisiana, which came in by unanimous consent.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will accept my amendment, as the general rule of pensions is not to allow more than half the pay of a lieutenant colonel, in any case.

Mr. SLIDELL. I prefer not. I shall make no opposition to the passage of a bill for the relief of Mrs. Jones to the extent I suggested. It is the same rate allowed to the widow of Major General Worth, and other officers of similar grade. I should rather present the amendment in the form I offered it.

Mr. PUGH. It seems to me that my friend from Georgia is mistaken in the point on which he presses his amendment. It is undoubtedly true that General Jones, at the time of his death, was a brevet major general; but he never, as far as I learn, was assigned to his brevet rank. He was simply assigned to discharge the duties of Adjutant General, his ordinary rank being that of a colonel; and we all know that brevet rank confers no extra pay unless the officer is assigned to his brevet rank. He was brevetted as brigadier general, and afterwards, for services during the Mexican war, as major general; but I am not aware of any order of the Department assigning him to his brevet rank. He was simply serving as a colonel on the staff, for the rank of Adjutant General is a colonel; and, if that be so, this bill, as it now stands, will only give his widow half the pay of a colonel.

Mr. SLIDELL. How much is that?

Mr. PUGH. I am not able to state exactly. It was increased last year; but I think it cannot be more than fifty dollars a month. That increase was made since the death of General Jones. My recollection is, that this bill is in the language of the bill for the relief of Mrs. General Worth.

Mr. SLIDELL. It is not. I examined that bill the other day. That bill expressly puts Mrs. Worth on the pension roll at the rate of fifty dollars a month; and I want to assimilate this bill to that.

Mr. PUGH. I have sent to the clerk of the Military Committee to ascertain the exact amount this bill will allow. My impression is, that it will not go over fifty dollars a month.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then there can be no objection to fixing that sum.

Mr. PUGH. This bill will only allow half the pay of a colonel at the time of General Jones's death, before the increased rates of compensation now allowed to the Army. It is not the half pay of a major general or a brigadier general. That is not in any sense pay proper. As to what my friend from Georgia said in other respects, undoubtedly we have a general law, by which a pension equivalent to half pay of a lieutenant colonel may be granted for five years, and renewed for five years more, and, under a law passed at this session, may be extended for life; but the very object of these private bills is, that the Senate and the House of Representatives may carry out the equity of the general statutes. If Mrs. Jones were entitled to a pension under the general law, she would not come here at all. It is because her case, on the statement of General Scott, and the statement of the physician, which I had occasion to examine at the last Congress, satisfied me that she was entitled, under the equity of the general law, to a pension, that I brought in the bill at that time, referred it to the Committee on Pensions, and it passed the Senate unanimously, in almost the very words of this bill. My impression at that time was, that she would have half the pay of a colonel, and I suppose that will be the construction of the bill now.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I wish to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Georgia to an act that was passed on the 15th of January, 1798, to show that this system of pensions is not so modern as I understood him to intimate.

Mr. TOOMBS. Allow me to say that I took the Senator's cases, and I was perfectly accurate in stating that he gave none before 1853. If he brings more, I shall, if necessary, reply to them.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. The act of 1798, to which I have alluded, was in these words:

"An act authorizing the payment of certain sums of money to the daughters of the late Count De Grasse, approved January 15, 1798.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in consideration of the important services rendered to the United States by the late Count De Grasse, there be paid, annually, in quarter payments, during five years, from the time of passing this act, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400 to each of the four daughters of Count De Grasse, namely, Amelia De Grasse, Adelaide De Grasse, Melanie de Grasse, and Silvie de Grasse, if they shall, respectively, so long live."

Mr. TOOMBS. That is not a violation of the principle. I let that speak for itself—the case of the Count De Grasse.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, after the word "death," to insert "not exceeding fifty dollars per month."

Mr. PUGH. According to the Blue Book the pay proper of the Adjutant General is $110 a month under the increase made at the last Congress, so that the half pay of a colonel, at the time of General Jones's death, would not amount to fifty dollars a month.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is the Senator from Ohio opposed to fifty dollars a month?

Mr. PUGH. No; I am simply satisfied that, as the Senator from New Jersey has said, if we amend the bill at this day, it amounts to a defeat, for it can hardly be reached in the House in the few days left.

Mr. TOOMBS. As it is a gratuity, I suppose it can stand over until the next session of Congress. Why are you bound to pass it now? Why is it that a gratuity shall be pressed through, without allowing the Senate to express their fair judgment on it? Does it make much difference whether the pension shall begin now or six months hence?

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 21, noes 12.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move to strike out the provision in regard to half pay, so as to provide that the pension shall be not exceeding fifty dollars a month. The bill now contains the two provisions, and they are inconsistent with each other. I propose to make it consistent; and say fifty dollars a month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment can only be received by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I object to it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I see no reason for having two rates in the same bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order at that stage, except it be received by unanimous consent, as the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana was. If the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading be reconsidered, the amendment will be in order.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objection being withdrawn, the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be received. It is to strike out the words "one half the pay monthly to which her late husband was entitled at the time of his death, not exceeding fifty dollars per month," and insert, "at the rate of fifty dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill as amended.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. How does it read now?

The Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Mary A. M. Jones, widow of Brevet Major General Roger Jones, deceased, late Adjutant General of the Army, upon the roll of pensioners, and pay her a pension at the rate of fifty dollars a month; such pension to commence on the 15th day of July, in the year 1852, and continue during her natural life or widowhood.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is it too late to strike out the provision carrying the pension back to 1852?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment may be received by the consent of the Senate; but otherwise it is not in order, unless the vote, ordering the bill to a third reading, be reconsidered.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move, then, to reconsider it, with a view of striking out "1852," and inserting "1857." I see no reason why a pension of this kind, a mere gratuity, should go back. I know there are cases of back pay, but I know no reason for back pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment may be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I object to receiving the amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CLINGMAN. This bill has been once reconsidered, and is it in order to make a second motion to reconsider?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote passing the bill has been reconsidered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Now, is it in order to reconsider anything else connected with it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order to reconsider the preceding votes.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, "Shall the amendments which have been made be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time?" It is still open to amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move to strike out the provision in the bill as to the time at which the pension shall commence, and insert "the 1st of July, 1857."

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would inquire why 1857 is put in rather than any other year?

Mr. TOOMBS. I want the pension to commence with the present fiscal year—not before. I am willing to take 1858 or 1868, if the Senator prefers it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thought that perhaps there was some reason for fixing that particular time. Eighteen hundred and fifty-two, the time fixed in the original bill, was the date of General Jones's death.

Mr. CLAY. The reason, if it be a reason, is, in the general run of these cases, to date the pension from the time the application is made; and I suppose the petition was before that date.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Cameron, Chandler, Clay, Fessenden, Fitch, Foster, Green, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wright, and Yates—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Brown, Clark, Clingman, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the name of Myra Clark Gaines, widow of Major General Edmund P. Gaines, be placed on the pension roll; and that she be paid at the rate of half the pay proper per month to which the said Gaines was entitled at his death, to commence from the 6th day of June, 1849, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. SEWARD. Certainly; and it is very proper, too, I think.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I can object to it, I presume.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not perceive that the Senator can object. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes thirty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. HALE called for the reading of the bill as amended; and it was read.

Mr. HALE. I ask if these two widows are put on an equality by this bill. I am told that they are; but it does not strike me so from the reading of the bill. I understand that General Jones was a major general by brevet, and I believe General Gaines was nothing more; and yet different sums are proposed to be paid.

Mr. HUNTER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that we take a vote on this question, and get at the appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. I only want these two widows made equal; that is all.

Mr. SLIDELL. I presume it is by inadvertence on the part of the Senator from New York that his amendment does not conform to the bill for the relief of Mrs. Jones in another respect. Mrs. Jones's bill is, "during her natural life or widowhood." This does not contain that restriction, and I hope the Senator from New York will accept an amendment, inserting the words "or widowhood."

Mr. SEWARD. I have no objection to extending the provision in favor of Mrs. Jones during her natural life, and I would cheerfully vote for such a proposition; but I should not like to cut off, on this occasion, Mrs. Gaines from the benefit of this measure in order to make the bill conform to a less reasonable standard.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what is the amount of pension the amendment will give?

Mr. SEWARD. Fifty dollars a month, I understand.

Mr. BROWN. It is half the pay proper of a major general.

Mr. POLK. Fix it at fifty dollars a month.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to amend the section which has been inserted on the motion of the Senator from New York, by inserting the words, "or widowhood." I understand there is no law on the statute-book which does not confine these pensions to widowhood. This is a solitary exception to the system of pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN and others. The amendment of the Senator from New York cannot now be amended.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My colleague can reach his object by offering an additional section.

Mr. SLIDELL. It can be accomplished by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. IVERSON. I voted in the majority on the amendment of the Senator from New York, and, in order to allow the Senator from Louisiana to offer his amendment, I move to reconsider the vote agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I now move to amend the amendment of the Senator from New York, by adding the words, "or widowhood."

Mr. DAVIS. This is a movement that seems rather to reflect upon the gallantry of the Senate. It is to be an objection entertained to be a beautiful, still rather young widow ever getting married again. But if this makes the difference between pension and no pension, I am sure the pious reverence and affection she feels for her deceased husband, who, from youth to age adorned his country's service, an ensign under Jefferson, and, to the very close of his life, still busy with great matters for the defense of that country to which he had devoted his whole existence, will induce her to conform to your wishes. If the Senate desire merely to put a little restraint, which morally will have no effect, for a contingency which I am sure can never arise, I shall not object; and I am certain, if the lady could speak, she would not.

Mr. SLIDELL. This amendment was intended to conform to the bill just passed for the relief of the widow of General Jones. I have proposed an amendment to make it conform to that bill. I presume it is scarcely necessary for me to disclaim any personal feeling in this matter; but here is an innovation upon the whole framework, the whole system, of our pension laws—the solitary exception, as I am well informed, that is to be found of a pension being given to the widow of any officer except during the period she remained unmarried. As to the remark of the Senator from Mississippi, I will state that I do not think we are to be governed by what are called the feelings of gallantry in the performance of our legislative duties here.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no.

Mr. HIOUSTON. It seems to me that it would have better conformed to the characteristic gallantry and liberality of the Senator from Louisiana, if he had moved to take the restriction from Mrs. Jones instead of proposing to place it on Mrs. Gaines. That would have been more conformable to my notions of liberality and gallantry, and I desire to move that amendment when I have an opportunity. I have felt, sir, that I had no right to participate in any debate of this kind. I have thought that gentlemen more competent than myself would regulate these matters; but the recollections of olden times come upon me when a proposition is made in regard to a man who, forty years ago, shed so much luster and honor upon the arms of his country as General Gaines did in the defense of his country. Whenever I see the hem of his garment touched, or aught associated with his gallant achievements, referred to, I cannot but feel that the country owes him a debt of gratitude which money can never liquidate; and I shall cheerfully go for whatever conduces to the national acknowledgment of our obligations to him for his gallant conduct in defense of his country and the commemoration of his perfect and spotless life, his chivalry, and his honor. Sir, he was the Bayard of the American Army. No man was so spotless and so gallant as Gaines on the occasion to which I have alluded. When I think of this, it wounds me to the heart to see an effort to restrict the privileges accorded to his widow. I trust the Senate, on this occasion, will accord to the relict of General Gaines what he could command if he were living. Sir, we have thrown bounties into the lap of others, as much as fifteen thousand dollars per annum to a single officer. Here the widow of Gaines is needy at your door. We are to refuse this pittance, or to grant it with such limitations and restrictions as to incumber it. I feel ashamed for the Senate, and I feel humiliated in the presence of this august body as one of its representatives, that I should see such selfish restrictions imposed. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it was not selfish in him, but certainly it will, in its character, so present itself to her. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I should vote for one of these bills, and against the other, if they were separate. United, I must vote against them both; I vote, however, as I think I ought, upon the separate amendments. I desire to correct an error into which the Senator from Louisiana has fallen. He said just now that the history of legislation had all been one way, and that was to limit all the pensions to widowhood. The Senator has forgotten that the Committee on Pensions, during this session, reported a bill extending for life the pensions of all the widows who had received a five years' pension, and striking off that limitation, and a direct proposition was made in the Senate to attach it, and it failed by a very large vote. That bill has passed the House, and has now become a law. The latest precedents, therefore, are against this restriction. I think the restriction is wrong, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. IVERSON. I am against this bill, upon principle, and in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, upon principle; but it is proper that the other side should have the benefit of any precedent in relation to this amendment, and I will, therefore, read the act for the relief of Mrs. Worth, to show that the Senator from Louisiana is, to some extent, mistaken as to the limitations heretofore imposed. The act for the relief of Mrs. Worth reads:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Margaret L. Worth, &c., on the pension roll, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, from the 12th day of May, 1849, for and during her natural life."

Mr. FOSTER. A question was asked in regard to the amount of pay that will inure to Mrs. Gaines under this section, if it be added to the bill and the bill passed; and the reply was, fifty dollars per month. I think that is a mistake. The pay of a major general of the Army, which General Gaines was, and had been for several years—

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken. He ought to have had the rank of major general; but he was only a brigadier general, and a major general by brevet.

Mr. FOSTER. I am mistaken, then. It was stated that he was a major general; but the Senator from Mississippi is undoubtedly correct. I was only going to say that the full monthly pay of a major general is $469; and the pay proper, which is the amount recognized by our pension laws, is $220. It is stated, however, that General Gaines was not a major general; and, of course, that pay would not be his.

Mr. WILSON. Is it in order now to move to strike off the restriction on Mrs. Jones?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment. That will be in order after the pending amendment shall have been disposed of. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, to amend the amendment of the Senator from New York, by adding the words, "or during widowhood."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to strike out the words "or widowhood," in the first section of the bill, as applying to Mrs. Jones.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOOMBS. I now move to amend the amendment of the Senator from New York, so as to provide that the pension to Mrs. Gaines shall not exceed fifty dollars a month, and shall not commence before the 1st of July, 1857. I do that because, according to the law of the United States, when officers have fallen in battle, the pensions to their widows are not entitled to exceed half the pay of a lieutenant colonel; and if General Gaines had fallen in battle, his widow would only have been entitled to half the pay proper of a lieutenant colonel in the Army, and that, too, from the time the proof was made. Why should you make this exception and bring into the pension law persons not entitled to come within it? Why throw the door open for officers who are already a privileged class in this country; who are paid a greater amount for their services than any other people in the service of the United States, civil or military; whose children are educated at the public expense; for, by law, ten of your cadets at West Point are their children, exclusively confined to them. I say you pay them enormous compensation; you educate their children; if they fall in battle you pension them. If they die in their beds, having squandered the magnificent dowry of the public, you pension their widows and children. But let him be a soldier—let him belong to the mass of the people—and there is none so poor to give him a grave.

Mr. BIGLER. I hope the Senator from Georgia will divide his proposition. The limitation as to amount and the limitation as to time are two distinct propositions. I am disposed to vote with him on one and against him on the other.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then I move the first amendment, to provide that the pension shall not exceed fifty dollars per month. To do this, it will be necessary to strike out the words "half the pay proper to which the said Gaines was entitled at his death," and insert "at a rate not exceeding fifty dollars per month."

Mr. DAVIS. The argument of the Senator from Georgia rests on assumptions which I do not believe to be facts. The first is, that officers of the Army are better paid than any other officers of the Government. I think the reverse is true; they are generally worse paid—worse paid, for instance, than a Senator who goes to the place he chooses to attend and remains a part of the year, whereas the Army officer goes to the last place he desires to go; goes at the will of the Government; is moved before he desires to be removed; sacrifices his furniture every time he is moved; changing his post from time to time, as the service may require, and not to suit his own convenience or his wishes; and his whole compensation added together is a smaller sum, until he has attained very high rank, than is received by the officers of the Government generally. During that period of his life when he is most effective and performs the most service, his pay is less than you give to one of your first-class clerks. As to their children being educated, so far from that assertion being sustained by the fact, they are the very ones usually who encounter the greatest difficulty in getting appointed to the Military Academy. But for the provision that gave the President the power to appoint ten cadets without reference to their residence, the son of an officer of the Army would be excluded entirely from an opportunity to enter the service in the warrant grade. The law requires that the cadet shall be actually a resident of the district from which he is appointed, at the time of his appointment. His father is serving here, there, and elsewhere; he may be a citizen of Georgia serving in Minnesota; the residence of the child will be claimed to be where the father is; he is not allowed constructively to reside in the place of which his father is a citizen; and thus they were excluded until the law kindly interposed and gave the President power to appoint ten cadets without reference to their residence. Of these ten, a part is ordinarily given to the Army, a part to the Navy, and some one or two usually to civil life; but, sometimes, I am sorry to say, a great many more.

What is this rich "dowry" that they squander? Their engagement is to serve their country. They receive a bare pittance for their services. Some officers of high grade, stationed at agreeable places, receive a compensation which is equal to that of any portion of the civil service; but in the great mass of the Army the pay is quite inadequate to support them, and you were compelled to raise the monthly pay twenty dollars a month, in order to give them a decent support. It re-remained stationary, while the compensation of every other class of officers had advanced. I think the allowance of half pay, taking it one case with another, as a general rule, would be a much better rule than any fixed sum. A man in our service, where promotion is by seniority, will never attain high rank until he has attained great age. It is therefore to be expected that he will leave behind him a family requiring a larger monthly sum for their support than one who has died in his youth. I know the provision of law to which the Senator refers does limit it to half the pay of lieutenant colonel as the pension to be received where the officer is killed in battle. The question I raise is, whether that be just or not; whether a man who has given fifty years of his life to the service of his country, and attained a higher rank than that of lieutenant colonel, will not usually leave behind him a family requiring more pay than that which he had when he held the grade of lieutenant colonel; and whether, if we give a pension at all, the proper rule is not to give the half pay of the grade the officer holds at the time of his death?

Then, again, I hold the pension system to officers of the military service to be proper, eminently proper. It enables you to keep down the pay of the officer during his life. Otherwise you drive him to the alternative of leaving the service if you will not give him a compensation which will enable him to leave a support for his family. If you give to every officer a compensation sufficient to enable him to make adequate provision for his family in the event of his death, your expenditures would greatly exceed those which would be entailed by giving to the family of every officer who dies in the service a pension equal to one half his pay at the time of his death. I believe it to be a just provision; just in its operation upon individuals, and just in its public policy; and I would prefer to extend the pension laws so as to give half pay pensions to the family of every officer who dies in the line of his duty, and in that way you are able to keep down the pay during life.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am not at all surprised at the difference between the honorable Senator from Mississippi and myself on all questions of expenditure. We look at them in a very different light. I am against all military pensions; he is in favor of them. Therefore we start from opposite positions; but I am accurate in all the facts of the statement I made. Take the average pay of the officers of the Army, and I say it is greater than the pay of any other department of this Government. Of course I must take into consideration the different grades and different qualifications. A lieutenant in the Army gets from one thousand six hundred to two thousand dollars a year, according to your Blue Book that I have now before me. What are the qualifications required? That he shall be about twenty years of age; that he shall be a man of ordinary respectable character, and no attainments at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Where does the gentleman find that standard?

Mr. TOOMBS. In the daily appointments that are made here—a great many of them I know.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sorry, then, that you confirmed them.

Mr. TOOMBS. Some of them I have resisted here. We have had persons who showed their want of attainments by not even being able to get through West Point one year. They had not capacity or moral character to get along for six months; but they were good enough for a commission in the Army. I have had an opportunity of testing that matter at this session; and I believe those appointments were confirmed almost unanimously. That is one of the evidences of qualification. That is the judgment of the Senate of the United States. They put that test. A colonel in the United States Army gets more than a Senator; and I take it it requires rather higher qualifications to discharge the duties of a Senator than those of a colonel in the Army of the United States; and besides that, it is a provision for life, which makes a very great difference in salary. As to the education, I am more than right. The ten appointments to the Military Academy are given to the Army and Navy, almost as a universal rule. I believe the last appointments were all from persons in the service; at least seven out of the ten usually are. There may have been exceptional cases. I alluded to that law when I said you educated their children. You give them the highest compensation of any service that I know of, from the day they enter it until they get through the ranks. All grades, lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel, so far as my observation extends, certainly all below colonel, receive a much greater compensation than England, France, Austria, and Prussia give. I had occasion to refer to tables showing that.

As to the amount of capacity and acquirements to discharge the duties, I say there is no branch of the service requiring anything extraordinary. I have no doubt the experience of the honorable gentleman, when he was at the head of the War Office, was that he was beset with constant applications for commissions. I know that one of his predecessors in the War Department said, that if a lieutenant in our Army was sold at the rate that commissions brought at the Horse Guards in England, it would sell for $50,000 in market overt. Put it on the basis of the regulations and practices in England, and a commission of lieutenant in the Army of the United States would be worth $50,000. Nobody pretends that they require better qualifications than an ordinary young man with academic education, sound health, and good character, such as would be fit for any other business in the country. That is all the qualification, even putting it on the highest scale—that he shall be physically able to do the duties of a lieutenant in the Army, and shall have an ordinary academic education; and even these attainments are often passed over. The rush for places in the Army is universal, because it is the best provision any man can make for his children in the United States. It gives him a life support; it gives him a compensation which, with half the prudence that is used by the great body of our people, would secure him independence for life, if he lives to be fifty years of age, and then if he dies in the service of his country in battle, his family is pensioned; and if he does not come under that provision, if he is an officer who has lived for forty years, especially about Washington, and never heard the fire of a gun except in peace for forty years, and has acquaintances here about the Capitol, his widow can get fifty dollars a month, or such sum as what is called the liberality of the Senate may choose to give.

Take gentlemen of good character and collegiate education in any State of the Union, and what do they get? Look through New England; look through the South; come to my own State. Such a man will go to the profession of the law; he will study diligently, laboriously; become a useful man in society; and he does well if he gets an income of $1,500 in ten years. He does well if, at the end of thirty years, he gets on the bench of his State at $2,000. Many of the respectable common lawyers of this country, when they have devoted their whole lives to the pursuit of knowledge, and the practice of virtue, according to the standard of mankind, with occasional service in the field whenever their country demands it—for after all it is the citizen soldiers who have fought its battles, from the Revolution down, and always will—do not get as much as a captain in your Army. In Mexico you had but eight thousand in your whole Army when the war commenced. Of the fifty thousand that went there, the regular Army did not furnish eight thousand. Of the thousands whose bones are bleaching on that foreign soil, the most of them are the citizen soldiers, taken from the workshops, the plow handles, the professional offices of the United States. Nobody ever thinks of giving them anything that is not nominated in the bond, within the contract, when they entered into service. As to gratuities to them afterwards, I have no doubt such a proposition would be laughed out of the Senate. But in the regular service there are influences that bring an esprit du corps to bear. Oftentimes they have associations with gentlemen here, with those who make the laws in Washington, and others, and if they can get their brothers in arms, from the major general down, to certify to them, as in one of these cases, there is scarcely any limit to the benefits they may receive from the country except what they have the face to ask.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I shall briefly reply to some of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia; and in the first place, as to the citizen soldiery. Pray, sir, has it come to this, that a man who bears his country's commission, or a man who enlists in his country's service without a commission, has ceased to be a citizen? Why this distinction of "citizen soldiery"? Are they not all citizens? I hope the day will never come when our flag will be entrusted to the keeping of others than citizens of the United States; and that the day is still more distant, if there be a time more distant than eternity, when it shall be held in a republican government that to serve his country for life, or a term of years, is a loss of the name of citizen.

Then as to the matter of compensation. It is the volunteers who have friends in this House, and in the other. It is they who have gone out of service, that have representatives in this Chamber and in the other House, and being represented and having the power to vote, they seldom require defense from any one; they are less often the subject of attack; but is it true that they do not get any more pension than is nominated in the bond? or otherwise, is it not true that you grant extraordinary pensions, up to twenty or thirty dollars a month, for a man who has lost an arm in the volunteer service, and that to the soldier regularly mustered in, you give but half his monthly pay, six, or eight, or ten dollars, according to the period of his service?

Then is it not true that you have granted extraordinary pensions, extraordinary in their character as well as amount, to the commissioned officers of the volunteer army?—not that they are less meritorious. They have made patriotic sacrifices, or have entered the military service from that sort of enthusiasm which is characteristic of our people. I give them all due credit for it; but I say the practice is otherwise than the Senator states it. The difficulty is to find anybody that will advocate the case of a man who, separated from civil life, having no power to control elections, must come here and stand on the simple merits of the case he presents.

Then, sir, the Senator falls into the very common error of taking all the allowances of an officer commuted, and calling this his pay; he compares it with salaries in civil life, where a man lives at home, and engages in other pursuits in addition to the office which gives him a salary. For instance: in the very table on which I know his eye was resting, he takes up the amount the officer has received for mileage, and has added that into his annual salary; he takes the amount of forage for his horse, and has added that into his annual salary. Now, sir, his mileage is for actual travel, not for travel like a Senator's, over the usual route, but travel over the shortest mail route; and he is not allowed, like a Senator, forty cents a mile for travel, but ten cents. In a case which I had occasion once to examine, where an officer of the Army and a Senator traveled together over the same route, from one point to another, the Senator's mileage was exactly double that of the officer. It was from Detroit to New York. It was four times the amount of money per mile, and double the number of miles. Your rule is to pay by the usually traveled route; the officer is paid by the shortest mail route, whether he has traveled it or not.

Then the Senator goes across the water; he brings up the armies of Europe to answer the comparison on which I originally met him—the pay of the officers of the Army and the pay of citizen employees of this Government. Now, if he will take the pay of a captain, he will find it lower than that of the lowest clerk employed about the Capitol, and he will find that nearly all the allowances which he commutes to make up the annual salary on which he rests his statement are allowances which, when commuted, are to the officer a positive loss. I referred to forage; let us take it. If the officer kept his horse in this city, he would pay from eighteen to twenty dollars a month for keeping him, in addition to the risk and the interest on the purchase money. The Government would give him just eight dollars a month in commutation of his forage, so that he loses from ten to twelve dollars a month, without counting in the risk of the loss of the horse and the interest on his value. They ought never to have been added and presented here to deceive members of Congress, under the supposition that they are salary. They are allowances given only when they keep the thing. In this case, the officer must actually keep the horse to draw the forage; and the Quartermaster General, who has especial charge of that matter, you will find, in different years and months, allows different amounts. The reason is, that an officer never charges forage for a horse unless he has a horse in service enlisted. If a horse dies, he instantly drops him from the forage account.

But the Senator says that the standard of qualification for an officer of the Army is, that he shall have a good character, and that there is no inquiry at all about his capacity. He went on to state how he established that standard, and he alluded to some nominations on which the Senate acted this session. I was not present, and I am glad to know, from his remarks, that he was opposed to those nominations. It was an outrage upon the rights of the graduating class; it was an outrage on the law of the land; it was an outrage on every principle of justice; and I regretted very much that I was not here at the time to say so in executive session. I am glad to know that there is one point, at least, if we must differ on pensions, where, on military questions, the Senator from Georgia and myself concur. But he says the qualifications are nothing except good character. Well, sir, what are the qualifications for a seat in the Senate? I suppose he would say a Senator should not be of infamous character; but we have no standard of education, no standard of attainment. We leave that to the State which sends a Senator here. If the War Department does not examine the persons whom it chooses to appoint into the Army, the rule has been very recently changed; but these are the exceptional cases. Take them to be all the Senator assumes, they are still the exceptional cases. The great body of the officers annually are appointed in the warrant grade; they are compelled to go through that warrant grade of cadet, and to pass their regular examinations up to the last at West Point, which, except two of the schools of France, I believe, is the best military school in the world—affording the most thorough military education. Having passed that examination, they enter the service with that amount of qualification. If you look abroad over the United States for the last thirty years, I ask the Senator to lay his hand upon one great work of internal improvement which has been devised and executed without the aid of some graduate of that same Military Academy which he so undervalues? I know of none which has not, either in the original conception or in the final execution, had to call in exactly that aid, and none with which they are not intimately associated. I know of no one great railroad on this continent that has not had, at last, to rely on that species of aid, and well I know that, even in the construction of turn-pike roads, the great Cumberland road lingered along as the subject of annual fraud, until General Jackson, with that wisdom which he showed on all executive occasions, put it in the hands of officers of the Army, and it went on without any further allegation of fraud. Such is the general rule, and such is the general evidence of the qualifications of the great body of the officers of the Army who have entered the service for the last thirty years. The exceptional case of young men appointed from civil life, merely proves what standard you would have if you had no such thorough training in the warrant grade as is required by the existing regulations.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will not be agreed to. As a general thing there may be an objection to pensions; but this is an extraordinary case. General Gaines was one of the most gallant, one of the most able, one of the most patriotic, one of the most beloved officers of the whole American Army. Almost everybody in the country believed he was a major general when he died. He ought to have been a major general long ago. By some fault, not his own, by some act of the Government, or of those more managing, he was prevented from getting that grade to which his services entitled him. He lived to be a very old man; he was constantly in service; one of the most efficient and bravest men who served during the last war with Great Britain, and who was, after that, constantly upon the confines of the country engaged in its service. He died a poor man, without leaving any property at all. His wife comes here without any means of support, and asks the pension which has ordinarily been given to the widows of officers and soldiers of the Army. It is now proposed to cut her down to less than one half the lowest pay given to the servants of your House. I do not look on her case at all like Mrs. Jones's. General Jones was here, at the seat of Government, for forty years, living all the time with his family. General Gaines was away in places where he was compelled to expend large sums of money, constantly in danger of disease. He was a brigadier general. General Jones was, I believe, but a colonel in the line of the Army. Now, the Senator from Georgia proposes to cut down General Gaines's widow to half the pay of a lieutenant colonel in the Army. Her husband was a brigadier general when he died. Why not give her half the pay of a major general, to which rank that old man was entitled?

We hear a great deal of talk about wasting money on soldiers of the Army. That is but talk. There is, to be sure, a great anxiety to get commissions in the Army, but that arises from the public spirit, the patriotism, and the love of military life, which our whole people have. They enter the military service, and the result is that they die poor old men. I remember a man coming here, and receiving an appointment in the Army when I first came to the city of Washington. I found him here twenty-five years after that a gray-headed old man, who would leave his children penniless. You generally find in the Army men of fifty and fifty-five years of age without a cent, whereas the greater portion of those in the Army enjoying the situations which gentlemen seem to envy so much, would have made themselves comfortable if they had devoted themselves with half their knowledge, and half their talents to any other profession in life. Why, sir, a journeyman shoemaker, if he sticks to his last, can make more money and leave more to his family, than a captain in the Army can. I hope there will be no change in the bill for Mrs. Gaines, but that this lady will have the full amount which it will give to her in its present shape.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment, to see whether we are to violate the general rule in this case.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I can assure the honorable Senator from Georgia that this is not an exceptional case in my support of this pension. In the first place, I think it is just and right; and, apart from all personal considerations, I believe it to be due to the family of Major General Gaines. For that reason I have supported it. I have voted for every pension of every disabled soldier, or every soldier's widow or orphan heirs who have come forward asking for a pension where he has died in the service. I have voted for granting pensions to volunteers who died in Mexico. Sometimes I have voted for them as high as twenty dollars a month; when, according to the general law, the parties would only strictly have been entitled to four dollars a month, knowing that that was insufficient to support the individual, and to pay the incidental expenses arising from the attention of doctors, and the treatment of wounds yet unhealed. But to show that this is not an extraordinary case, and that it is on the very lowest footing, comparing all the circumstances together, I will state that a pension was granted at the last session of Congress to an individual who could only have claimed four dollars a month according to the general law. If Senators will look at the bill for the relief of John Mitchell, of the District of Columbia, passed at the last Congress, they will find that he was placed on the pension roll at the rate of thirty dollars per month. If the honorable Senator from Georgia alludes to individuals in humble circumstances, who are neglected, and their voice not heard here, I have to say to him that I have always voted for the highest rate of pension where there was merit in the case. In the present instance, I regard the half pay of the deceased as but a pittance, compared with the services rendered, and the glory he shed upon his country's arms. I am prepared to vote against this amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. TOOMBS to limit the pension to fifty dollars a month, resulted—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Clay, Clingman, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Brown, Cameron, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Douglas, Foot, Green, Hayne, Houston, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Reid, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—24.

The VICE PRESIDENT voted in the affirmative, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to offer an amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the name of Jane Turnbull, widow of the late Lieutenant Colonel William Turnbull, be placed on the pension roll as a pensioner for life, at the rate of fifty dollars per month.

Mr. HUNTER. Has not the time come for the special order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour for the consideration of the special order has arrived.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Navy appropriation bill. I understand that the Paulding medal resolution is the first special order, and I move to postpone that and all other prior orders for the purpose of taking up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BIGLER. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he waive his motion for the purpose of allowing us to consider the resolution to extend the session.

Mr. HUNTER. That can be taken up to-morrow. I cannot waive my motion for anything. I think we owe it to the House of Representatives to take up the appropriation bills.

Mr. MASON. I wish to inquire whether the special order made for Saturday last, to consider on that day the resolutions reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with reference to the aggressions on the commerce of the country in the Gulf of Mexico, is not, by the rules of the Senate, transferred to to-day, or whether it is to be passed over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The recollection of the Chair is, that those resolutions were made the special order for Saturday to the exclusion of all other business; but the Chair does not think they come up to-day to the exclusion of other business.

Mr. MASON. I wish to give notice that I shall to-morrow, if I can get the floor, ask the Senate to take up for consideration the bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations to give additional powers to the President in our intercourse with the Central American States. I deem it my duty to submit the question to a vote of the Senate. It is certainly proper that we should pass the appropriation bills before we adjourn; but, in my opinion, it is equally proper that we should dispose of the public business before we adjourn; and therefore I shall ask the Senate to take up that bill to-morrow.

Mr. GWIN. Was not the bill to which the Senator from Virginia refers made the special order for twelve o'clock on Saturday; and does it not stand upon the record as the special order for twelve o'clock on each day until disposed of? ["No!" "No!"] This is the first time I ever heard of a special order expiring, if on any account it should not be taken up on the day fixed.

Mr. BIGLER. I desire a little information on a question with regard to the rules. The Senator from Virginia has moved to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the Navy appropriation bill. Suppose that proposition be decided in the affirmative: will it be in order to move to postpone the special order to take up the resolution for the extension of the session?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks so.

The motion of Mr. HUNTER was agreed to.

FLORIDA CLAIMS.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask permission of my friend from Virginia to notify gentlemen that on Wednesday I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider for final action the bill (S. No. 373) declaratory of the acts for carrying into effect the ninth article of the treaty of 1819 between the United States and Spain; and I invite the attention of Senators to the report in the case, made by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK.] It is a bill to redeem the plighted faith of the country in our treaty with Spain in relation to the Floridas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

An act for the relief of John B. Roper;
 An act for the relief of Timothy O'Keefe;
 An act for the relief of David Bruce;
 An act for the relief of Ferdinand O. Miller;
 An act for the relief of Judith Nott;
 An act for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster;
 An act for the relief of the heirs of William Tarvin, deceased;
 An act for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;
 An act for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisek;
 An act for the relief of Gardner Vincent and others;
 An act for the relief of Keep, Bard & Co., J. Caulfield, and Joseph Landis & Co.;
 An act for the relief of Mrs. Harriett O. Read, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army;
 An act to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians; and
 An act for the relief of Peter Parker.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 5th instant, an act for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (No. 647) to change the time of holding the spring term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Texas; and

A bill (No. 648) for the relief of Gottlieb Schreiner.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. BIGLER. I move that the special orders be postponed for the purpose of taking up the joint resolution to extend the session of Congress.

Mr. HUNTER. I will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that to-morrow, in the morning hour, we can dispose of that. If he should succeed in getting it up now, the whole effect would be to have a debate on it, and postpone action on the appropriation bills. We had better go on with them, at least, after the morning hours. The motion was not agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 199) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1859, which had been reported by the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to insert after line two hundred and twenty-three:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy, $2,000, the payment to be made in the same manner and under the like control as former appropriations for meteorological observations: Provided, That the employment of a meteorologist, under the contract of the Secretary of the Navy, shall cease on and after the 30th of June, 1859.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if there was not some action of that committee on this subject? It strikes me there was.

Mr. MALLORY. None.

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment is one in which I feel no interest. I do not see in his seat the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] who does feel an interest in the matter. I understand it is to allow Mr. Espy to hold his salary for one year, and no more.

Mr. TOOMBS. The amendment is a very meritorious one, and I hope it will prevail. It will close the whole work. The Senator from Maryland, on the Finance Committee, has attended to the matter, and understands it. I have looked into it for some years past, and I understand that, with this appropriation, he will be able to continue his observations, and close them within the year. It is only for a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have some amendments to offer from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The first is, on page 1, after line six, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause a stone dry-dock for the naval service to be constructed upon the most approved plan at the navy-yard at Pensacola, Florida; and that, towards defraying the expense thereof, the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will not agree to commence such a work at this time, and on this bill. I do not know that it is recommended by any Department; I do not know that we have any estimate of its cost; I do not know that we have laid before us any statement of the depth of water on the bar, to know whether we could get a ship of the line over, if we had the stone dock. It seems to me that this is a most unpropitious time to commence the work, and I hope the Senate will not agree to do it. We are making large appropriations if we go to the amount that is estimated for; but if we exceed that amount and add as now proposed by undertaking these costly works, it will be impossible to bring the expenditures of the Government within the means which are provided for the next fiscal year; and this is a matter of so much importance that I hope the Senate will consider it well before they add any such expenditure. It is to be commenced with an appropriation of $100,000; but will ten times $100,000 finish it? Is this a time for it, when we have no estimate, and when we have no proof of the capacity of this harbor for ships of the line, even if we were to build the dock? I hope it will be postponed.

Mr. MALLORY. I am sorry to see my friend from Virginia so much in error on this occasion, for he is usually very accurate. He says we have no estimate. Sir, the estimate has been before us two years. A detailed report has been before us two years. It has been twice recommended to this body; and the Senator from Virginia himself, two years ago, advocated this very measure, and voted for it. I anticipated his opposition now, and looked at what he said two years ago; and here is his language: "I believe we are acting wrongly in this matter in opposing this amendment. The wooden dock at Pensacola, it is said, is worn out." The report then had come in, of a board of three engineers, announcing that the dock would last five years from that time, and no longer, unless it were reconstructed; "and, if so, they are entitled to a new one. I must vote with the Senator from Florida upon this question." Now the Senator from Virginia turns round, upon this occasion, and votes against it on the ground that there is no estimate. Why, sir, the estimate is here, printed in due form. That disposes of that ground. The depth of water on the bar of Pensacola has been before us for four years—twenty-four feet—and the dock will admit such vessels as will pass over the bar. There is now no means of repairing either a national or a merchant vessel south of Virginia. We have no docks there. What is the use of having a navy at all in the Gulf of Mexico, if we are obliged to take one of the ships from there and send her North for repairs? You constructed a wooden dock at Pensacola, and you ordered a board of engineers, consisting of a naval, a civil, and a military engineer, to examine it. They have reported that in that climate the wooden dock is inapplicable, that it would be useless in five years from the time they made their report; and you are expending large sums of money every year to keep a useless dock in repair, and in three years it will be worth nothing without reconstruction. The construction of a dock is a work of long time. You cannot, in a moment of necessity, construct a stone dry-dock. If we had a naval difficulty to-morrow, where is the fleet in the Gulf of Mexico to go for repairs? For a repair which would be done in two days with a stone dock, you have to withdraw her from the station, and send her North, or not do it at all. If we are to maintain a navy in those seas, we must have a dry-dock; and to have it, you must commence it by degrees. It is a work of time; years will be required to accomplish it. Here is a paltry sum of $100,000 for a great national work. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator has found a vote of mine at a time when there was an overflowing Treasury. Now, sir, in regard to that I have this to say: that when the Treasury is full, if he will choose a more auspicious time, and can show me that there is water enough on the bar to make a stone dock useful for ships of the line, I shall not then object to it, because I think Pensacola would be a very good place for a naval station or a navy-yard in the Gulf of Mexico, but I am utterly opposed at this time to commencing any of these expensive structures, and especially without an estimate. The Senator says it was recommended two years ago. I spoke of the estimates of the present year. I see none from the present Secretary of the Treasury, and I believe, in regard to this matter, we might wait, and if the Senator will show that it is a proper place, that there is water enough on the bar to enable ships to get over it in order to get into the stone dock, without being floated as they now are into the wooden dock, as I said before, when the Treasury is in a better condition, I shall be willing to vote for something of the sort; but I am not willing to vote for it at this time, and especially when they have the balance dock, or wooden dock, which has cost us so much money. I understand the officers to report that such a structure is perishable in the waters at Pensacola, but I do not understand them to say that it is not very useful at this time. It has not yet rotted; this dock, as I understand, can still be used. What is the report in regard to it? The bureau of yards and docks, in their annual report, say:

"The balance floating dock, basin, and railway at Pensacola have been carefully attended to, and are in good condition, but the effect of the climate at this place is such as to produce rapid decay, and consequently frequent repairs will be required upon these works."

I understand at present the dock is in very good condition. Why not wait? There will be time enough to substitute something else hereafter, when we shall be in a better condition to meet such expenditures; but for the present this dock seems to be doing very well, and I am not sure, if it should turn out that there is not water enough on the bar, but that it may be the best sort of dock for ports that are situated as this is said to be. At any rate, this is not the time to commence these expenditures.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Virginia will find that I did not come here half prepared, as he has, on this subject. He says if he is informed that there is water enough, he will do so and so. If he will look at the public documents given to him years ago, he will find the draught of water stated in the coast survey report. There are twenty-four feet of water on the bar at high tide. We do not ask for a dock for a ship of the line; we ask for a dock commensurate for the depth of water on the bar.

Mr. HUNTER. How much is it at low tide?

Mr. MALLORY. Twenty-one feet. Here is the official document showing it. Now, as to the present condition of the wooden dock, they have never docked but one small sloop-of-war in it, because they are afraid to use it. That is its present efficiency. The estimate was made in March by the bureau of yards and docks, the very bureau from whose report the Senator reads. Their estimate is published in the document which I hold in my hand, in these words:

"The board of engineers who examined the dock report, under date of 8th December, 1853"— that is the report to which I alluded——"that, after the lapse of five years [from that date] it will be hazardous to dock a ship unless the sides of the dock and its gates shall have first been reconstructed."

As to the cost of building a new dock, they estimate it at $1,524,980 for the largest stone dock they can construct there. We ask $100,000 to commence. I say there has never been but one ship put into the present dock, because it is hazardous to dock a ship there. The commander of that ship himself told me he regarded the vessel as in very great danger, and he never felt so happy as when the ship came out of the dock. It is an immense structure, a scow of not the slightest use. You have an estimate this year for repairing it, when this report tells you that in five years from 1856 it will be worthless without reconstruction.

Mr. CLINGMAN. What is the cost of repairs?

Mr. MALLORY. I think the average is about fourteen thousand dollars a year.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the Senator from Florida if he has any estimate from the present Secretary of the Navy or from the head of the bureau of yards and docks?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; I am reading from his report, made in March last. He says:

"The cost of repairs, including the expenses of mooring the dock, from the 1st of July, 1853, to the 31st of December, 1857, (four years and a half) is $68,908 42, making an average annual expenditure of $15,312 98."

I ask the Senator from Virginia, if, with the lights I give him, having a dock so perfectly useless, in which we are afraid to place a ship, he is willing to expend $15,000 a year to keep it in repair, when in three years it will be worthless, instead of commencing at once a structure which the interests of the country require and which will only take $100,000 now?

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the Senator from Florida if he can show me any estimate from the Department for this stone dry-dock recommending it or stating what it will cost. He refers me to a document, which document is a report of a board made in 1856, saying that the wooden dock would be worthless in five years. I show you a report from the bureau of yards and docks two years afterwards, in which they say it is in good order.

Mr. MALLORY. This report is made in March, 1858. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The report is dated March 25, 1858, in which the bureau refers to the report of the engineers made in December 1856. Here is the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, dated April 1, 1858.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us hear the letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MALLORY. Here it is:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 1, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d ultimo, desiring certain information in relation to the floating dock at the Pensacola navy-yard, and asking the opinion of the Department as to the expediency of constructing a stone dock at that yard.

Having referred your letter to the chief of the bureau of yards and docks, I inclose, herewith, a copy of his reply, dated the 25th ultimo, which affords all the information desired, except the opinion of the Department, as to the expediency of constructing a stone dock at the Pensacola yard.

Mr. HUNTER. "Except the opinion of the Department as to the expediency" of the work.

Mr. MALLORY. That the bureau was not called on to give; but the head of the Department proceeds to give his opinion:

I am clearly of opinion that a floating dock is but a temporary expedient; and that, in view of its perishable nature, for a series of years a stone dock would be the most economical.

As the board of engineers who examined the floating dock at Pensacola, in 1856, state that it would be hazardous to dock a ship in it, after a lapse of five years, without a reconstruction of very material parts, the advantage of a stone dock is very apparent.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISAAC TOUCEY.

Hon. S. R. MALLORY, Chairman Committee Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

The estimate was transmitted by the Secretary at that time.

Mr. HUNTER. That is as near to nothing as anything I have ever heard read. The Secretary makes no recommendation, but merely gives an abstract opinion as to the superiority of a stone dock over a wooden dock. We knew that before; that, I believe, is a universal opinion; but he does not state what it is to cost us, nor does he say that the present dock is not in good order. On the contrary, the chief of the bureau of docks and yards has told us that so far from this being out of order it is in very good order, and why not continue to use it until we have more time and more money to replace it by some other kind of dock, if that yard be fit for a stone dock? I do not know how that will turn out to be. If it be, and there were plenty of money in the Treasury, I would vote for a stone dock there, because I think the location is an excellent one for a navy-yard; but in the present condition of the Treasury I would not vote for it, even if the Senator were armed with an estimate, which he is not; he cannot show us what it is to cost, or whether the head of the Department is of opinion that this stone dock ought to be made. In regard to these wooden docks, and this hearsay statement of the officer, I have to put the experience of California of a similar dock, which, I am told by the Senator from California, works admirably. He says they have docked the largest steamships upon it, and it works admirably. If it works in California, I do not see why it cannot be made to work in Pensacola, at least until we can get time and money to replace it with something better.

Mr. MALLORY. In reply to the question of the Senator from Virginia, why, if it works in California it should not work in Pensacola, let me tell him that the difference in climate constitutes the difference between using the wooden dock in Pensacola and in California. You have to get a dock copped. That lasts five years; and then it has to be recopped. The sea-worm at Pensacola eats six inches of wood through in twelve months. It does not do so in San Francisco. The dry-rot in Pensacola will destroy this work twenty times sooner than in San Francisco. The difference in climate constitutes the difficulty. The wooden dock never should have been placed at Pensacola; it was a blunder. Now, the Senator says we have no estimate. He is entirely mistaken. I have given him the estimate sent here with the letter which I have read. That estimate was sent in under the Secretary's own hand; and he says that according to the estimate made by the engineers appointed by himself, the cost will be $1,524,980. The Senator voted for this measure before, and he now gives as a reason for opposing it, only that we have not the money in the Treasury. If he could vote for it in 1856, the reasons for his voting for it now are greater, because the dock is in a worse condition now than it was then. He speaks of its good condition now. If he will look at the estimates he will find that $15,000 are asked to repair the dock and put it in condition. It has never had but one small sloop-of-war in it. If he could vote for it before, I say he has greater reason for voting for it now; and his sole objection is that the money is not in the Treasury. If the dock were useless to-morrow, and it were found necessary, to repair our fleet, to have a dock there, we could not construct one. It is a work of years. The excavation and the caisson works would require six or seven, or eight or nine years; and I propose merely to appropriate dribblets of money to keep the work going.

Mr. TOOMBS. I shall oppose this amendment, with my friend from Virginia, and I will very briefly state the reasons on which I shall do so; and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of our past legislation on this subject. I want some real responsibility; I want some officer of the Government, some of those distinguished engineers whose eulogies we heard this morning, or somebody else responsible, and I will tell you why. About seven years ago, two sets of rogues came to Congress; one of them had a floating dock, and the other a sectional dock. They bored along in the other House and this House for one session, and neither could succeed because the other was in the way. They then united their interests, and in order to make it national, which is the ordinary excuse for robbing the public Treasury, they said, we will build a floating dock at Kittery, in Maine, one at Philadelphia, and one at Pensacola; and that they could do it for $300,000. They urged their contract through Congress, and they so urged us that they got about a million apiece for these three docks. I resisted them all the time in the House and in the Senate. I pointed out that there was no responsibility attached to it, that it was a legislative contract, a job. Finally, before they were paid, they were, by the contract, actually to dock a vessel of war with a full armament; and the Navy Department sent down Commodore Tattnall, Colonel Chase, and some other distinguished officers to Pensacola, and they reported that these people had not complied with their contract; they could not get a ship in their dock, nor on the railway, nor in the basin—for they had a dock, railway, and basin, all combined in this patent. I stated at the time that no Government in the world had ever built one of them but us, and nobody would ever do it, except as a congressional job. It turns out that the dock at Kittery is a failure, so I am informed, and next session they will be here for a stone one. That at Philadelphia is a failure. The honorable Senator from Florida, who was then, I believe, as now, at the head of the Naval Committee, says the dock at Pensacola is a failure.

Mr. MALLORY. I was not here then.

Mr. TOOMBS. Two years ago, when it came to the final payment, I resisted it. We had the report of an official board that they could not dock a ship. Finding those officers honest and immovable, they were sent away to sea, and then a merchant vessel was sent down there, and I believe they got her on the dock, or at least they brought the evidence of it here so as to get $120,000—the balance of the money; and I am not certain whether that was not more than three years ago.

Mr. MALLORY. About that time.

Mr. TOOMBS. Two years ago the Senator says these estimates were made—a year after the work was finished. Having succeeded in getting the money by all this robbery, they now want a stone dock. While this was pending, and when it was known they had failed, they came here and wanted one for San Francisco—a sectional dock, basin, and railway. Congress passed that law, in which they said they might make it at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. There we have spent, I think, the last time I looked at the account, over a million and a half of dollars; and I do not know but that it will go to three millions. Instead of building ships, instead of appropriating money to the increase of the Navy, to mounting an additional number of guns, to giving efficiency to the service, we have spent in this single job, which I know of, and which I resisted here for seven years, between three and a half and five millions of money. When you commence another dry-dock, I want some responsibility for it; I want a report from somebody that I can hold responsible. I find that nobody is responsible for this. The Navy Department says Congress did it. Go to Congress, and some of them will say the Navy Department ought not to have paid the money, because it was a failure. It is now found that the worms in Florida will eat six inches of plank in a year. We knew what the worms would do before we put the plank there as well as now. The Senator says it is a failure. That, I presume, is the case. If it had been a matter concerning ourselves, we should have acted prudently before we squandered $5,000,000 in worthless docks. We should have required them, I think, to dock a ship, at least, and to lift it on the railway and place it in the basin. They gave us marvelous accounts of their dock, basin, and railway. One would suppose that they could stow away a whole fleet in the basin. I think it will be a great thing until all the money is paid; and the moment the money is paid, it will be found that it will not do.

Mr. MALLORY. If I had been in Congress at the time the appropriations for these wooden docks were made, I should have opposed them. I have always been opposed to them. I knew, of course, they would be a failure. The reasons the Senator has given against wooden docks do not apply to this case. They are nothing against a stone dock, but on the contrary fortify the proposition for a stone dock.

Mr. HUNTER. I find that the paper from which the Senator from Florida read, sustains what I have said. The estimate is not from the present Secretary of the Navy with a recommendation. He transmits the old estimate made in 1856. Here is the answer of Commodore Smith to certain queries propounded by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, dated March 25, 1858:

"1. As to the present condition of the dock.

"Answer. The dock is believed to be in serviceable condition, although signs of decay have manifested themselves in the framing of the side walls and upright timbers of the gates."

Again:

"6. The length and capacity of the dock.

"Answer. The length of the dock is three hundred and fifty feet, and it is capable of docking United States war steamers of the largest class."

"7. As to its capability of docking the new steam frigates."

"Answer. It is of capacity sufficient to dock the new steam frigates."

Mr. HAYNE. I consider the perfect and complete protection of the harbor of Pensacola as a desideratum that should not be overlooked. The mighty West is as much concerned in that work as any portion of the Union. It is the only harbor between the Chesapeake and the Rio Grande that can be made useful to protect the great wealth of the West. Why, sir, in time of war with England, Pensacola is the only point in the Gulf where your ships, whether men-of-war or merchant vessels, can run in and be in safety. This work ought to have been commenced the very moment Florida became ours; it should have been done years ago. I have seen the dry-dock, and I know that no wooden work can answer in that water. The worms are injurious to an extent which the people of California and my New England friends cannot imagine. Nothing will stand that climate but stone. The forts that were erected at the mouth of the harbor of Pensacola have already been suffered to go to ruin for the want of an appropriation; but if kept up, they would give an ample protection to that harbor, and this is a point that we should not overlook. I consider the appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose as exceedingly small. We have neglected our duty; and I say to my distinguished friend from Kentucky, that if this harbor be not protected, and we go to war with England, especially, the wealth and the produce of his section of the country will not have a chance of being sold in any way whatsoever; and really, looking forward to Cuba, and the difficulties there, Pensacola is the only position on the Gulf where our men-of-war can go in and be safe.

I cannot agree with my distinguished and talented friend from Virginia on this occasion. I think $100,000 to commence this work is too pitiful a sum to be considered. Senators, are you to neglect your duties because you have to borrow money, when for your five and six per cent. bonds you can get a premium? You can get as much as you want; but do not throw it away; apply it to legitimate purposes; and this is a most legitimate object, in which the whole Union—Boston and New York—are as much concerned as New Orleans and the West. I must sustain my friend from Florida on this occasion. I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. PUGH. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment. It is an old acquaintance. I recollect the debate at the last session, when the late Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Brodhead) assured us that we had just finished the wooden dock at that time. I believe he said it had just been six months out of the contractor's hands. If, as soon as we build one dock, we are to take it down and put up another, we shall never be done with this business. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Hale, Hammond, Hayne, Iversen, Mallory, Sebastian, Simmons, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wright, and Yulee—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Brodhead, Cameron, Clark, Clay, Colamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, King, Mason, Pearce, Pugh, Reid, Rice, Seward, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wade—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment of the Naval Committee is to insert on page 8 after line one hundred and sixty-three:

That the Secretaries of the Treasury and Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to ascertain, in such way as they may deem best, the actual value of the ten acres of land heretofore belonging to the naval hospital estate at Chelsea, Massachusetts, and ceded by the sixth section of "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic service of the Government," approved the 3d March, 1855, for the purposes of a marine hospital for the district of Boston and Charlestown. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the so ascertained value of the said ten acres, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the credit of the naval hospital fund, out of which the original purchase of the property so ceded was made.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to have some explanation of that.

Mr. MALLORY. The chairman of the Committee on Finance will find an explanation of it in the report of the surgeon's bureau, to be found at page 931 of the President's Messages and Documents for this year, part 3. In 1855, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, made in the House of Representatives, the President of the United States was authorized to take a certain portion of the land which the United States had reserved for a naval hospital at Chelsea, and give it for a marine hospital to the Treasury Department, though the land was bought by the Navy hospital fund, which is a fund contributed by the twenty cents per month of the seamen and officers of the Navy. It was a sacred fund; and without knowing that, I presume, on a mere amendment to an appropriation bill, the House of Representatives, without discussion, took ten acres of that land and gave it to the Treasury Department for a marine hospital. The amendment contemplates the repayment of the value of that land back into the naval hospital fund. It has been twice recommended by the head of the surgeon's bureau.

Mr. HUNTER. Was not the money thus expended devoted to a marine hospital?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; but the Senate will remember that the naval hospital service is entirely distinct. We build marine hospitals for the merchant service under the Treasury Department, administered by the several collectors; but we build naval hospitals for the sailors and officers of the Navy. Congress took ten acres of land which had been bought by the naval hospital fund—a fund made up by the contributions of the Navy—and devoted it to a marine hospital for the merchant service. The amendment is to pay back from the Treasury, into the naval hospital fund, the value of that land. This provision passed the Senate once before, but failed in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have another amendment to come in after line six, on the first page:

That medical officers and engineers of the Navy shall be entitled to the pay of their several grades from the date of their appointments or commissions therein respectively.

Medical officers and engineers undergo several examinations for promotion. Frequently when they are entitled to an examination for promotion their chief sends them out of the country, and detains them perhaps a couple of years when they might have passed, and they are thus kept from their promotion. The practice has been to give them the date of their commission from the time they were entitled to their examination, but under an opinion of the Attorney General, the practice of giving them pay from the date of their commission has been suspended, and they now only get their pay from the time they actually passed. The amendment contemplates making their pay and commission go hand in hand.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I rise to a question of order. This is a proposition to put a private bill on the naval appropriation bill. I objected to these bills—there are half a dozen of them on the Calendar—when they came up. The proposition, as I understand it, is neither more nor less than this: to pay a man at the rate allowed for his advanced grade as a medical officer in the Navy before he has reached it, upon the ground that being abroad he has not actually reached it as soon as he would have reached it if he had been in the country. That is the whole of it. We have four or five of these bills now on the Private Calendar. They were reported from the committee as private bills, and I objected to them, on objection day, upon the ground that the principle was wrong.

Mr. MALLORY. If this be a private bill I trust it will not be put on the appropriation bill, because it is not contemplated to permit any private bills to go on it, but I think the Senator is mistaken. It does not reach the case he supposes. It is prospective in its character. It is to provide in future that officers who are abroad, when entitled to their examination, shall have their pay from the date of their commissions.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I withdraw the point of order, if it does not refer to the past.

Mr. MALLORY. It is prospective entirely. If it is not, the Senator can make it so.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let it be read again.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. That is retrospective.

Mr. MALLORY. Put in the word "hereafter." It was intended to be prospective.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Louisiana is somewhat mistaken in regard to his objection to private bills; and the non-passage of them. On Friday last the bill for the relief of Dr. George H. Howell, which had previously passed the House of Representatives, passed this body, and is now a law. It was passed for his relief precisely under the circumstances indicated in this amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It escaped my scrutiny.

Mr. IVERSON. There is another bill of the same character still pending before the Senate, which has not yet passed the House of Representatives. There are only two bills of that character before the present Congress. It is right, proper, and just, that these officers should receive the pay. They are ordered out upon a cruise; and, while they are engaged in the service of the country, performing active duties, the time of examination fixed by law comes on; and they cannot be here, of course, to undergo examination and get the promotion. If they were here, doing nothing, as other surgeons and assistant surgeons are doing nothing, on land, they would be entitled to their examination and to their promotion, and they would get their pay. The refusal to do justice in this case, is simply a bounty to those who stay on land and do nothing, and actually imposing a penalty on those who go to sea and perform service. That is the result of it. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The word "hereafter" will be inserted after the word "that," as suggested by the Senator from Florida, by unanimous consent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs, is to insert after line fifty-eight:

That the Secretary of the Navy cause to be constructed, as speedily as may be consistent with the public interests, five steam screw sloops-of-war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water, in active service, shall not exceed twelve feet, and four steam screw sloops of war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water, in active service, shall not exceed fourteen feet, which ships shall combine the heaviest armament and greatest speed compatible with their character and tonnage; and, in addition thereto, one side-wheel war steamer, whose greatest draught shall not exceed eight feet, armed and provided for service in the China seas; and that there be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose above specified, the sum of $1,200,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out that part of the amendment which relates to the four additional steam sloops of fourteen feet draught, so that the amendment will stand simply for the five steam sloops not exceeding twelve feet draught of water, and the side-wheel steamer for the Chinese seas. My reason for making this motion I will state. Being a member of the Naval Committee, I agreed in recommending the first five sloops, and disagreed as to the latter part of the proposition. If we are going to have any use for steam ships, we shall want something larger than these little vessels. We have on the stocks at Portsmouth and Kittery, a ship which has been razed down and made into what, according to the opinions of the officers of the Navy, and Mr. Lenthall, the chief constructor, is as fine a model of a ship as there is in the world; and I shall propose, by direction of the Naval Committee, an amendment providing for an appropriation of $300,000, to put that ship to sea with full steam power. Then, I think, if we increase our steam marine by five new sloops, and a side-wheel vessel for the Chinese, and the Franklin, which will require $300,000, it will be as much as we can afford at the present time. Besides, I think the sum recommended by the committee for the construction of these steam vessels is altogether inadequate to finish them. I have stated my proposition; I do not want to argue it. My proposition will leave the five steam sloops and the side-wheel steamer, and then I shall offer the amendment to fit out the Franklin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved to amend the amendment, by striking out that portion of it which provides for building four sloops-of-war of a draught not to exceed fourteen feet.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will be stricken out. This is no time to add to the Navy in the mode in which it is now proposed; but as I am anxious to get along with the bill, I shall say nothing in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Florida until I see whether the Senate consents to strike out this portion of it. I hope the Senate will agree to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MALLORY. I am sorry to hear the Senator from Virginia say that he can see no reason for an increase of the Navy in the manner here pointed out, and I should like him to indicate in what way he thinks the Navy ought to be increased. If the size of these ships, or their draught of water, or their contemplated armament be insufficient or inadvisable, I should like him to indicate what he considers advisable; or is not that simply saying that he is opposed to any increase of our naval armament at all? If that is the objection, I can understand it.

Now, sir, I presume the Senate will not object to an increase of the naval establishment of the country when they consider the wants of our commerce and the present condition of the Navy with reference to our merchant tonnage, and with reference, too, to the condition of our foreign relations. For this purpose, to satisfy my own mind of the inadequacy of our naval defenses, I have looked abroad, as we must all look when we build ships, at the condition of other navies. If other countries had none, we should, perhaps, require none. England and France have a built navy; we have a navy to build. They are restricted in the qualities of their ships by the want of that enlarged timber which we have; and in constructing our navy, we must unavoidably build our ships in reference to those navies with which we come in contact. If we find Great Britain's frigates of a certain size, we should make ours no smaller, because all the glory we acquired in the last war was in combats of ship to ship; there was no fleet fighting. It was a brilliant succession of single combats on the sea, in which frigate was matched against frigate, sloop against sloop, brig against brig. We had nothing to deplore for the reason that we inculcated the philosophy which I hope to see carried out now. Great Britain had a built navy, and we had one to build; and when we laid down the keel of a frigate, we laid it and armed it so as to render all the advantages on our side in single combat of frigate to frigate. Great Britain has recently launched one hundred and eighty-four gun-boats. She has divided them into four classes. Each class is precisely alike, not only in tonnage, and in armament and draught of water, but in the engines, so that if you take an engine out of one boat and put it into another, it fits precisely as does every part of it.

Here I may say, in passing, as a monument to the remarkable constructive power of Great Britain, that she built these one hundred and eighty-four gun-boats within the period of four months; and one single manufacturing house, Penn & Co., of Manchester, took the contract to build eighty steam-engines for the fourth-class boats, of sixty horse power, in four months, and they were built, and absolutely put on board the vessels, within the contemplated time. I mention this to show the constructive power of Great Britain to launch a steam navy at any moment. These boats were built for a specific purpose, and when they were launched Senators will remember, perhaps, the magnificent display of naval power on the waters of the Solent. It was the fleet launched to contend against Cronstadt. Great Britain's fleet, at that time, extended in two lines twelve miles in length, and between the two lines the sovereignty of Britain advanced with her Court, and received the cheers of forty thousand seamen. It is with reference to such a naval power as this that we keep up a naval force at all; and shall we not increase our defenses, when this is the condition of Great Britain?

We have extensive sea-coasts, and a vast commercial marine, larger than any other on the face of the globe. What ships do our peers keep upon our coast? I find, from the latest official intelligence, coming down to the 1st of April last, two months ago, that Great Britain had thirty-four vessels upon our coast altogether. That is, she had ten in the Pacific, mounting two hundred and ninety-three guns; sixteen in North America and the West Indies, which are now all on the coast of Cuba, mounting the three hundred and sixty-nine guns, and she had on the coast of South America eight vessels, mounting one hundred and thirty-two guns; or, in other words, she had thirty-four vessels on our coast, mounting seven hundred and ninety-four guns. She had in commission at that time, the 1st of April, five hundred and sixty-six vessels, mounting sixteen thousand and thirteen guns, propelled by eighty-eight thousand three hundred and sixty-two horse power. She had, in addition to that, one hundred and eighty-five steam gun-boats, and she had one hundred and thirteen ships for port service. She had sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-three guns—nearly twelve guns to one of the United States.

Now, it may be very well to look at our own Navy. This is the condition of Great Britain on our own shores, in the Pacific, and in the West Indies. We find, from the returns of the Secretary of the Navy, that we have afloat twenty-nine vessels all over the world, Great Britain having thirty-four on our own coast, and those twenty-nine vessels have six hundred and twenty-eight guns. Recollect that these twenty-nine vessels, with their six hundred and twenty-eight guns, are in commission scattered over the face of the habitable globe. How do we compare with Great Britain, which has thirty-four vessels and seven hundred and ninety-four guns on our own coasts? We have, in ordinary, twenty-eight vessels with eight hundred and twenty-two guns, and when you have said that, you have named all of our Navy, except the five sloops that are building. I say this to contrast the Navy we have at our control now, with that which Great Britain has placed immediately on our own coasts; but last year she had nearly one hundred more guns on our coast than she has this year. The Senator from Virginia remarks that he does not see the utility of increasing the Navy in this manner. Does he refer to the class of vessels? The Secretary of the Navy, to whom we have delegated power on this subject, tells us, in his last report:

"The act authorizing the five sloops-of-war having specified the class of vessels to be built, did not admit of the construction of small steamers of light draught, which are very much wanted in the public service. For some years past the Government has had no means of supplying its indispensable wants, except by hiring small steamers as occasion might require. At this moment, when much needed, we have no vessels which can penetrate the rivers of China. We have few that can enter most of the harbors south of Norfolk. Harbors which are the recipients of hundreds of millions of our commerce are not accessible to most of our public ships. This state of destitution is so remarkable that it should attract particular attention, especially as some of our greatest interests and most vulnerable points are thus left exposed. Besides, this class of steamers, of light draught, great speed, and heavy guns, would be formidable in coast defense. They cost but little in construction, and require but little to keep them in commission; and, for most practical purposes in time of peace, are as effective as larger vessels, and often more so. One or more of them should be at every point where we maintain a squadron. Three or four should be constantly employed on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Economy, efficiency, and utility, combine to recommend them as almost indispensable. Ten of them would be of incalculable advantage to the naval service, and would cost $2,300,000."

That is the estimate of the Navy Department. The Secretary says truly that we have scarcely a vessel which can enter any of our southern ports; and from the abstract of the coast survey report, I have marked such ports as we have that no man-of-war except the smallest steamer can enter, which our sloops-of-war could not enter; for instance, Hatteras inlet, Ocracoke inlet, Cape Fear, Georgetown, South Carolina, Charleston, St. John's river, Florida, the Cedar Keys, St. Mark's, Cat Island harbor, Galveston bay, and a great many other points which would afford admirable harbors for our naval vessels, and to which they would naturally be driven if chased by an enemy in the Gulf of Mexico. The maximum is fixed in this amendment; the draught of water is not to exceed fourteen feet for one class, and not to exceed twelve for another. The naval constructor and the Secretary, whose responsibility is here invoked, will construct them according to the best plans. We leave that to them. With fourteen feet of water they may enter all the ports I have mentioned south of Virginia; with twelve feet of water they may enter a great many of the inlets which are mere roadsteads and harbors, but which are useful for national defense. The British gun-boats, which have been committing the outrages upon our commerce, are gun-boats of the fourth class. They draw six and a half feet of water, and they have sixty horse power engines. They have coal for about five or six days; they are right in the vicinity of Jamaica, their own island and coal depot; and in any maritime war with Great Britain, these gun-boats would never be twenty-four hours out from a coal depot anywhere. These small vessels of ours are principally designed for home defense; they would take the place of the home squadron, because, carrying a small quantity of coal, they would not be sent upon long voyages.

I know, if it be proper to say it here, that the House Naval Committee are anxious to pass a bill for twenty vessels. I think the present condition of the country eminently demands such a measure. Here, when circumstances have arisen which have rendered it necessary to send vessels to the Gulf of Mexico, what have we done? One commissioned vessel that we have sent is a water tank, built in the Potomac river for the supply of a squadron. She has been put into the shape of a steamer, with four or five small guns. Then there is the Arctic, a slow vessel, with perhaps two guns; the Fulton, a small vessel, perfectly useless as a war steamer—a side-wheel steamer, though, as a dispatch boat, very useful, with perhaps six large guns, perfectly inefficient before a single one of the British gun-boats. The whole combined would not be considered a fair match for one of these gun-boats. We have not placed it in the Secretary's power to meet this contingency; we have not the power now; and when, after all the speeches made here a few days ago, and the unanimous opinion expressed with relation to the outrages on our commerce, this proposition is made, are we to be told that these vessels are not essential? The gun-boats which are now contending against our commerce draw but six and a half feet of water. They can enter the very smallest harbors in our country. Are we not to build vessels to follow them? I do not think there has been a man-of-war in the port of Charleston since 1832; and I do not know that in any harbors of the South have we had a single ship, certainly not a sloop. I know not a frigate of ours that could get into them.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I should like to ask the gentleman—he speaks of many of the British vessels drawing six and a half feet water—whether there is any proposition for vessels of light draught—say eight or ten feet draught? If not, I hope he will move an amendment, or I will move it. I desire to have some vessels of the kind he refers to, from six to ten feet draught.

Mr. MALLORY. I have, of course, paid some attention to the subject, and I consider the responsibility of recommending the building of a six-foot vessel as very great. If the Senator will look at the harbors on our coast, he will find that, where a vessel of six feet can enter, a larger vessel can enter; and the amendment does not restrict the Navy Department to any draught as the minimum; it restricts them to the maximum. They cannot go over twelve or fourteen feet; but they may build them as small as they please. I should think it very unwise to say to the Navy Department, you shall build a vessel drawing precisely so much water. I think we had better fix the maximum, and leave the responsibility where it ought to be.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I fully agree with the Senator from Florida that it would not be wise to say six or seven feet. I made the remark because of what he previously said; but, on the other hand, this difficulty presents itself to my mind: if you propose that the limit shall be twelve feet, I do not believe the Department, judging from their course formerly, will make a single ship that will not be of that draught. In fact, whenever we order any vessel to be built, they seem to select the largest possible class that will answer the description. I am reminded of an anecdote of some person who had a disposition to magnify all that he had himself. "Well," said one of his friends, "I have got one thing that you never can have, and that is a fine flock of geese." "Why," said he, "when I have geese, all your geese will be swallows." [Laughter.] The disposition of the Navy Department always has been to make the largest class of ships; and the consequence is, that out in the China seas, where they are very much wanted, none of our ships can get in. I remember Mr. HUMPHREY MARSHALL told me our affairs would have been in better condition if we had vessels to go into the Chinese rivers. Our commerce and people are protected in those waters, and in South America and other countries, where they get any protection, by British ships of light draught that can go in.

We want two things: We want vessels that can go into shallow seas, and we want enough of them to be stationed wherever our commerce is to be protected. Senators are well aware that our Navy is not more efficient now than it was about forty years ago. In 1816, I believe, it was about as efficient as it is now, and we have four times the shipping interests now to protect that we had then. What I desire, is to get a liberal increase of small vessels. I would not select six or seven feet; I should like them to have about ten feet draught. You may call them gun-boats or what you please; but I would not allow the Department to exceed ten feet. If such an amendment be in order, I will move a proposition of that kind. In time of peace such vessels are exactly what we want. All the difficulties that the President's message complains of, and our Committee on Foreign Affairs make a fuss about, generally originate from the fact that there is nobody there to look after our interests. By having a large number of small ships that can be scattered all over the world, at least where our commerce is, we shall escape these disadvantages; and in time of war they will be very useful. We never can expect, without an expenditure to which the people of this country will not submit, to meet Great Britain fleet for fleet, but if we should be involved in a war with that country, there is one thing we might do; Great Britain could send a fleet to New York, or Boston, or Philadelphia, where we could not meet it; she could blockade those points; but suppose she breaks up her fleet into small detachments, they could only operate at one point on the coast, and we ought to be able to beat them. Our coast is very extensive. It would be impossible for her, if we had a tolerable Navy, to blockade the whole of it, and I think there ought to be a steady increase that would enable us at least to make defense to that extent, and also to cripple her commerce. It seems to me that light ships, whether you call them gun-boats or anything else, that could move rapidly, that could get out of the way of a large ship, and overtake a merchant vessel or anything it could fight, and readily escape from a formidable armament into shallow waters, are what we need. Therefore, if it be in order, I move an amendment for building ten steamers that do not exceed ten feet in draught.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question now is on an amendment to an amendment, and another amendment is not in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I give notice that, if it meets with any favor, I shall make a motion of that kind.

Mr. HUNTER. Before the vote is taken, I should like to say a word or two in regard to the propositions for increasing the Navy; and first, in reply to the ground taken by the Senator from Florida, as to preparation for war. My idea of the proper mode of disposing of this bill is to regard it solely as a bill for a peace establishment. If the Senate or Congress should believe there is danger of war, and it is necessary to provide for war, that ought to be done in another bill. We ought to separate our extraordinary from our ordinary expenditures; because I consider it to be very important to hold the Departments, if we desire economy, to a certain scale of ordinary expenditure. Let us appropriate, in these bills which are designed to carry on the Government, what is necessary for that purpose. If the Senate should hereafter think something more is necessary, in order to put the defenses of the country on a war footing, that ought to be the subject of another bill. We can thus secure responsibility in the Departments; we shall thus, too, ourselves be held to a readier responsibility by the people.

There are two wars: there is not only this war of which the Senator speaks, but there is another of which I am very apprehensive—and that is the war upon the Treasury; and for the purpose of protecting the country against that, I desire to make these bills only for the ordinary expenditures of the country. Let us do that, and if it be necessary to make war preparations, we can take another bill. The sole question, then, for us to consider is whether, if we are passing a bill for the usual ordinary expenses of the Navy, we ought at this time to make this addition. I think we ought not. I am willing, when the Treasury is full, to vote for additions to the Navy. I think that is the time. It occurs in our financial history that we have periods of plethora in the Treasury. I think when they occur, we ought to devote the excess to adding to the Navy, and to the establishment of fortifications, &c.; but in times like these we ought to restrict the expenditures, if possible. We ought to do it, because there is no sort of hope of avoiding the necessity of resorting to another loan at the next session of Congress, unless we restrict the appropriations somewhere within the estimates that have been made.

In regard to these steamers, as to the size proposed, and all that, I have nothing to say. If the Senator from Florida chooses to bring up the scheme in a separate bill which looks to a state of war, and of preparation for war, at another time, we shall be able then to consider it; but I submit that upon an ordinary appropriation bill, we ought not, in the present condition of the Treasury, to make these appropriations; nor ought we to do it anywhere until we know what is to be the size of the ships, and what is to be their probable cost. All this is indefinite here. A steamship drawing twelve feet of water, I suppose, may be of almost any size. I have no particular knowledge on the subject, but I presume it is no limitation, at all, except as to the mere matter of draught, none in regard to the expense, to say they must not draw more than twelve or fourteen feet of water. In a better condition of the Treasury, I believe it would be very wise and politic to build some small steam screw gun-boats, which the Secretary of the Navy recommends. At another time, it might be very well, especially for coast defense. I should judge, from the report of Lieutenant Dahlgren, that they could hardly be of much service to us on foreign stations, because they could not carry coal enough. They might be very useful at home; and if the Treasury were in a better condition, I should not oppose the construction of a few of them; but I am unwilling now on this bill to add anything of this kind. Let us keep the bill within the estimates; and if the Senate then think it proper to have preparations for war, let them bring forward the measure in another bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish merely to remind the Senator from Virginia that the British gun-boats have gone into the Baltic, the Crimea, and elsewhere. They use their sails, except on particular occasions, and then steam power can be used. They might be sent anywhere as sailing vessels, with auxiliary steam power. That would depend on their construction.

Mr. HUNTER. This is the report of Commander Dahlgren, who was sent out to examine into the subject. He says, speaking of screw gun-boats:

"As may be supposed, the vessel is nearly occupied by this amount of ordnance and steam power, and little space is left for stores of coal, provisions, or water, or for the accommodation of men; wherefore, such craft cannot cruise far from their depots, whether afloat or ashore, but quite as far as would be required for coast defense."

Mr. BELL. I should like the honorable Senator from Virginia to tell us what prospect there will be if we take this advice—and his reasoning is very plausible indeed—and omit to make this amendment to this bill, of ever making any provision for new steam vessels of war at this session? Does he think a separate bill for increasing our naval force can be passed at this period of the session? I think that if we mean to move in the policy of increasing our naval force, this is the only opportunity we shall have of doing it during the present session; and many months must elapse before we shall be together again, unless we be called by the President on some special emergency. If it be true that there is no occasion for any increase of our naval force now, particularly when the Treasury is so low, I must plead in my own defense for having given my assent to this proposition, in the Committee on Naval Affairs, that I have been misled, I have been misguided, I have been deceived into the idea that it was proper to make some addition to our naval force; and that even it might be proper to go on and greatly increase our Navy, beginning at the present time, if we had to borrow money to do it; and I should like now to call up from their hiding places, if they be about the Senate Chamber, those war spirits from whom we heard so much the other day. Has anything occurred to change the feeling and the temper of the Senate since that debate? Where is the honorable Senator from Georgia, for example, who told us that he not only wanted war with England now, but had wanted it for years past, and was ready for it at any time.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am now; but we shall not get a fight out of this crowd.

Mr. BELL. He was dissatisfied with the report of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and thought it was not worth the snap of a finger for any effect it was likely to have. Where is the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] whose proposition lies on the table? Where is the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] I do not see him now; but I believe he is not much in favor of any increased naval force. Those gentlemen were not content with the moderate counsels of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who, I thought, went quite far enough. He found that he was far behind the spirit of the Senate as well as of the people of this country, and at the close of the debate I thought he rather shrank from his position. He certainly did not answer with any energy, or vigor, or determination, the arguments of these worthy gentlemen.

My friend from Florida is acting in character, and acting up to his professions. He did not mean any bravado in the speech he made the other day; but I call on other gentlemen who thought it was time we should be facing Great Britain at once, who not only expressed the opinion that we ought not to be content with any apology or explanation she could make, but that we ought to prosecute this controversy until she abandoned her doctrine or principle of the right of visitation and the right of search, that we should compel her to admit an abstraction. Other gentlemen were for authorizing the President to send our naval force immediately to catch or capture the British vessels. I thought "catch" was a term well enough to apply, because, according to an old saying, "there is catching before hanging." [Laughter.] I thought then, it was very likely it might occur that we should find ourselves hardly able to do that in the present condition of our strength in those seas; but I know that the spirit of the country is such that if it would be necessary to vindicate our honor we ought to authorize the President to send our little fleet there, and make war upon these aggressors upon the honor of our flag, even if they were sunk in the conflict. That was the spirit of the debate the other day. There was no margin left for any gentleman who did not speak on that occasion, if he wanted to come up to the supposed spirit of the people of this country, to make any proposition. I shrank from it, not being one of those who like to place themselves in the position of going beyond what is the sober-tempered spirit of the people of the country. There was no margin left for any gentleman who wanted to distinguish himself as the undaunted champion of the honor of his country under all circumstances, except to propose that the President should give orders to our naval forces to sink the whole British navy. [Laughter.] You might as well make such an order as that as one to capture her forces even in the West Indies at the present time, the disparity is so great; but, nevertheless, if it be necessary to vindicate our honor, we must come up to it.

But I ask now, in reference to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Virginia, where are those war spirits that excited us so much the other day? I thought, even before the recent occurrences in the Gulf, and these insults to our flag, we ought to go on from year to year making a moderate addition to our naval force, such as the increasing wealth and resources of the country would justify, such as our credit, if not the money in the vaults of the Treasury, would justify; but I confess that after I heard those speeches from those gentlemen, I felt it my duty as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs to give my support to an increase even beyond what we had before talked of or considered.

Mr. PUGH. May I ask my honored friend does he support this proposition on the ground that he thinks these vessels are to be used for fighting Great Britain? Is that the ground of the Naval Committee?

Mr. BELL. From the first I have considered that there was no probability of a war with Great Britain.

Mr. PUGH. That is what I want to know. If there is war I am ready to vote for them; but if they are for peace I am against them.

Mr. BELL. I have acted on the principle, since the time of the acquisition of our States and Territories upon the Pacific ocean, that it would be the proper policy of this country to put ourselves in an attitude of defense for the contest which was likely to come sooner or later with that great arrogant Power across the ocean, as rapidly as that policy could be pursued with our means and the support of the country, and that the way to postpone such a contest to the latest period, if it could be done consistently with the honor and dignity of this country, was to prepare gradually and silently, and never to use bravado on any occasion; add to your ships of war, adopt the modern improvements in all of them, the application of steam as an auxiliary to the sails of your vessels; qualify them to go upon long cruises, and to be able to take coal enough to supply them with the auxiliary power when it might be needed in battle on the coast of another continent if necessary, and make intercommunication with the Pacific through your own country. I am sorry that scheme is so gigantic as to alarm so many men; but from the time we acquired our possessions on the Pacific coast, I thought it was the duty of this Government to provide a means of overland communication, as safe and convenient a one as was practicable and possible. We have neglected that for ten years. The country has not come up to my notions on that question.

In the debate, the other day, I refrained from taking any part. I could not conceive it possible that Great Britain intended to insult this country in her present condition, or as it will be for a long time to come. With her still unsettled affairs in India, with the condition of her relations with France, in the opinion of many, lowering and scowling upon her—the French army, at least, courting a contest with the English, and the monument of Waterloo still glaring in their faces and in their minds—I could not suppose that England courted hostility with this Government. I thought there must be some mistake; some violation of orders, and in considering the other connections, the trade and the dependency of Great Britain, in some degree, for the subsistence of her own population, and keeping her manufacturers at work, by getting cotton from this country, I could not suppose England meant any such thing; but still we ought to have all the reparation that a country, jealous of its honor and confident of its resources in the end to meet Great Britain, or any other Power, ought to expect from a country always proud of her honor. Certainly, more we ought not to demand; and if she will not give that, we ought to meet her at all hazards. I will tell my friend from Ohio, further, what I thought. From the temper of the debate, and from the interest that seemed to be felt in getting up an excitement in the country, (except that I have heard that none of our naval officers are very young men,) I feared they might take fire, light up their feelings according to the spirit which they found prevailing in Congress and among the people of this country, and transcend their orders a little, if necessary, to come in conflict with the war vessels of Great Britain, in the Gulf of Mexico; and I should not be surprised if some of our ships-of-war, sent there, have captured some of the British vessels, after a conflict, or have been captured. When I heard the debate, I did not know but that there was an interest felt in some quarters that we should have war with Great Britain, and I thought then, as I think now, that if we wanted it, we can have a war out of this business in the Gulf. The President can have a war, if he wants it. He holds in his hands the power of giving orders to our vessels, and they are not more likely to obey them strictly now, than they were recently, on another occasion.

Sir, I am trespassing too long on the Senate; but I want the gentlemen who were so warlike the other day to come up to the support of this proposition for a small increase of our naval force. It is half an hour since the Senator from Virginia took the position that if we needed an increased naval force the measure should be brought forward in a separate bill. I have given attention to the fact that it is not likely that an opportunity will be presented for such a separate bill during the present session; and if there was any sincerity, if it was not all hollow bravado, which it would have been better for the honor and dignity of the Senate to have pretermitted altogether in the debate the other day, there is occasion for this increase, and it ought to be followed up by some real movement which will show that we are in earnest, and that although the Treasury is low we are ready to use the credit of the country to make an addition to our naval forces. That was my object in rising, and if now this amendment shall be voted down, I shall not think that it has been consistent entirely with the spirit manifested the other day, and will show that that was hollow.

Mr. BROWN. I think, sir, the Senate will bear me witness that I do not belong to the category to which the Senator from Tennessee has alluded—the war-making portion of the Senate. Since this English difficulty has existed, I have not said one word about it. I have purposely abstained from doing so; and therefore no part of the remarks on that point, of the Senator from Tennessee, has the slightest reference to me. I shall vote for this amendment with great pleasure. I should vote for it with more pleasure if it proposed to build twenty instead of ten ships. As to the size of the ships, I am unable to say now whether they are a proper size or not, and should be just as little able to say it the next year or the year following. The capacity of ships must necessarily be determined upon by those who have the command of them, and those under whose supervision they are to be placed. It is impossible that I can ever understand what sized ships are best for naval purposes. I assume necessarily that the Naval Committee, charged with the settlement of that question, the Secretary of the Navy, and officers of the Navy who have been called into consultation, have properly considered that subject, and have made a proper recommendation. I feel that your Navy is too small; that there is a necessity for increasing it—a necessity which has existed for years, and exists in greater force now than at any former period. If the Secretary of the Navy, the Naval Committee, and the naval commanders, have made a false or improper recommendation as to the size of the ships, the responsibility must be upon them. If I could be better instructed at the end of six months than I am now, I might say, let us wait a little while; but I shall not be. At the opening of the next session you will have to rely on the same sources of information on which you rely now, because each individual Senator for himself can have but very slight information on a point of this kind, and he would not like to risk his own individual opinion against the opinion of the Secretary, the committee, and the officers of the Navy.

The Senator from Virginia says that at another time, when the Treasury is full, he will be willing to vote for this supply. When will the Treasury be fuller than it is now? No man can tell. When can you borrow upon better terms than you can borrow now? Your credit, instead of rising, in case you get into difficulties with Great Britain, will fall, and fall rapidly. Instead of being able to borrow at three or four per cent. then, you will have to borrow at ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent., and perhaps at a higher rate. You now borrow because you choose to do it. Get into a war with England, and you will borrow because you are forced to do it; and a forced loan, a loan when you are compelled to have it, is always obtained upon harsh terms. This is the only object for which I would agree to borrow money to any extent. I would not borrow money in any large sum to keep up your Army. In the proper administration of your Government, you have very little use for an army. About all the service it performs in time of peace is to watch Indians, and I very much agree with my venerable friend from Texas, [Mr. Houston,] that if you let the Indians alone, they want very little watching. But your flag, according to the declaration of gentlemen all around the Chamber, has been insulted, again and again, on the sea. We have heard the Senator from Tennessee recapitulate the simple facts that war speeches have been made on both sides of the Chamber, speeches calculated to stir up the blood of young America, speeches calculated to excite English spirit, if she be acting upon a system, speeches calculated to produce an issue, to bring the two Governments face to face—that you must either have a fight or have a back out, on one side or the other. English courage never has receded from a conflict, nor has the courage of America. I hope that at the last hour we are not to shrink from the conflict, and do it on the miserable plea that, after all the boasting we have had here, we are unprepared for war. Do gentlemen calculate that their speeches are to be read in the British Parliament, by British statesmen, and no notice taken of them? Do gentlemen calculate that Great Britain is to take down her flag, and not to stand up to any national position she has assumed? If they make such calculation, then let me say, history does not justify their making it. If they are quite assured that the recent transactions in the Gulf of Mexico are unauthorized, then their speeches were unworthy of Senators. I supposed that those speeches were made because there was a settled conviction on the minds of Senators that Great Britain did authorize these outrages, that we were talking, not to the poor creature who commands the Styx or the Buzzard, but that we were talking to Lord Derby and his council, that we were talking to the Queen upon the throne. If we were, if that was the view of the subject, then Senators ought to consider that the words uttered here are not light and frivolous words, and will not be so considered and treated by the world, but that these bold words ought to be backed by bold and manly actions.

Mr. President, I know very well that, in case of a conflict with Great Britain, the great burden is to fall on that section of the country from which I come, and upon no portion of it more heavily than upon my own State. Mine is a cotton State; purely a cotton producing State. We sell scarcely a penny's worth of anything else than that great staple, and Great Britain is our best customer; but I say before the Senate to-day, and before the world, that, sooner than allow my flag to be insulted, I would have my people carry every bale of their cotton to New Orleans and Mobile, to make barricades, and, if necessary, I would put the torch to it and burn up every fiber of it without one sixpence of insurance from any quarter. With me, sir, the defense of the flag is the first great duty of an American patriot, and I would defend it, cost what it may. But I should talk idly if I said I was for a war with Great Britain. I want no war with her. I want her to respect the rights of these States united; I want her to pay proper deference to the glorious banner of the stars and stripes. If she refused that, I would not stop an instant to count the cost in dollars and cents—nay, sir, not in blood and life. I indorse what my friend from Tennessee has said, that these violent speeches, unbacked by acts, amount to little. When they are carried across the Atlantic, and are read there, British statesmen cannot fail to see that this is mere bravado; that you will talk valiantly to the populace about war; but when it comes to preparation you do not make the preparation.

It is confessed now that you have not an available naval force to vindicate your flag in the Gulf of Mexico. Who does not know that that is true? How often has it been stated here without contradiction that the British guns in the West Indies and the Gulf of Mexico outnumber yours more than two to one, and that you have not an additional force to send there? Yet, in the face of these facts, gentlemen have talked of war, of blowing Great Britain out of the sea, capturing her vessels, and bringing them into port, holding them as hostages, and all that! If you mean to meet an issue with a Government like Britain, you have a very different game before you; and it is high time you commenced preparing for the conflict. These war speeches have satisfied me that there is danger, imminent danger; that, if you vindicate the honor of your flag, you will have war. I do not say that you will have it absolutely, but that there is danger of it; and, in the face of that danger, I will provide for the contingency in advance of its coming. Let us have the twelve sloops. I repeat again, I am sorry the committee did not propose twenty. Twenty would not be half enough. Better borrow the money now, when you can get it at three or four per cent., than stumble headlong into war and borrow at twelve, fourteen, fifteen, or perhaps twenty, or even a higher percentage.

But even in a time of profound peace you need the vessels. If there was no menacing anywhere, I might say that, inasmuch as there is no pressing necessity for it, I will not go for an increase of the Navy; but in view of the present danger I am for the increase, cost what it may. I think it will have a wholesome effect on diplomacy. While I would not undertake to menace a Power like Great Britain, because she is not a Power to be menaced or bullied, yet I think if she saw that you were backing up your bold words by equally bold and valiant deeds, she would not be quite so likely to be so overbearing and haughty as a nation as we know her to be—as she would be—if you simply talk and do nothing. I am for backing up all we have said by equally bold deeds. I am not finding fault with gentlemen now for talking. It is all well enough. Up to this hour I have taken no part in it; but I choose to put my declaration on the record not only in favor of vindicating the flag on this question in words, but in favor of preparing to do it by deeds. These sloops, if you would build them will not encumber your Navy.

Your Navy is not, it never has been, large enough. Your coast has been extended. If you had no further service for it, your coast has more than doubled within the last fifteen years; there is a greater amount of coastwise trade to guard on both sides of the continent. It requires a greater expenditure; and if there be grumbling among the people about the expenditure, the answer is easy: "you insisted upon the addition to the country; you knew when you were getting all this coast that it would need defense; if you are a sensible and thinking people, you must have seen it would involve an expenditure to protect it, and keep it, and maintain it." I am for increasing the Navy from ten sloops up to twenty, and I would vote for forty.

Mr. TOOMBS. Being one of those who felt it their duty to propose, and to advocate, very decided measures for seeking redress for the insults to our flag by the British authorities in the West Indies, I feel called upon, by the extraordinary speeches of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Mississippi, to vindicate that course of policy which I deemed it proper to pursue. I can tell the Senator from Mississippi, that the great difference between him and me is, that I am for a war with England and he is for a war on the Treasury. That is what marks our respective policies. Sir, no country on the face of the earth is better prepared for war to-day than the United States of America; no country better prepared to vindicate its honor by land or by sea. The best preparation any people can have is to have all the material of war. You have got men; you have got money; you have got provisions; you have got all the material necessary for a war with any nation upon earth, or with all nations upon earth. Therefore, give me a war measure and I will give you war supplies; but I will not give you war supplies with peace. Go, and pass your resolutions, and order your President of the United States to take the aggressors in the Gulf of Mexico, the English officers who have seized and insulted and trampled upon your flag and fired into your ships, and then come to me for war supplies and you can get them; but you cannot have just war enough to make it a siphon to drain the Treasury and be kicked again in the Gulf, as you have been year after year. That is my policy. I think we are prepared now, on the general principle. I again repeat, that the best preparation for war is the development of the great material interests of the people. You have two hundred thousand seamen accustomed to navigation; you have ample means in the general prosperity of the country; you have a vast military force, sufficient to meet the whole world; and I think we are ready.

I do not belong to that class who are disabling the country for war by an overshadowing peace expenditure. The worst preparation for war is to break down your Treasury by spending eighty or a hundred million dollars a year, squandering it in time of peace. I would leave it in the pockets of the people for the development of the great resources of the Republic; and when war came, they could improvise a navy. You have the men; you have the means; you have the material; you have everything that a great nation needs. What has been the great need of nations in the most recent wars? Look at the Crimean war. England went all over her dominions, and she could not find men. The crooked-backed people about her factories were unfit to serve in the Crimea. Ninety-nine out of a hundred were rejected by her surgeons. She even came here, and followed the exile, whom her policy had driven from her own shores, in order to take him up with her drum and fife to enlist under the banner from which he had fled. She had not men enough; that was her great need. She could not get them. She went to foreign countries to hire them; she went to Switzerland; she went to Germany; everywhere, begging for foreign troops to vindicate the flag of England. When this great country, on the contrary, had a war with a foreign nation, the only difficulty was, what to do with the thousands and tens of thousands upon every hill who were rallying at the call of their country to march to a foreign land to vindicate its honor. This was our picture; that was hers. She ransacked the whole earth to get the quota of soldiers which her treaty required her to furnish France. Our whole difficulty was to select among the multitude of able and patriotic men, who jumped on the first proclamation, to the defense of their country. That is the preparation. You have the means; you have the men; you have the material of war—every possible element for war, and you have not overtaxed them; you have not broken down industry by very heavy expenses in time of peace. You have not, as England has, run your expenses to $350,000,000 a year. You have not drained the last cent from the people. You have not drawn the last penny that you could from their income. You have not resorted to treachery, as she has in India, to wring pence out of poverty. You have a great, a powerful, a prosperous people, ready and willing, at any hour, to vindicate the national honor. That is my preparation for war; and therefore, if you agree to the proposition of my honorable friend from Illinois, pass the bill which was passed in 1839 by a unanimous vote; then, with a war measure, I will give you war supplies; but I will not give you war supplies on a peace measure.

As for our naval estimates, I believe they are from thirteen to fifteen millions. Some comparisons have been drawn between the Navy of the United States and of other countries, and a vast difference has been shown between us and France. I had occasion last night to look into the last estimates of the French navy. Their budget for their navy was 120,000,000 francs, ours eighty—two thirds of what theirs is. The French navy is represented to be some four or five hundred ships, ours fifty or sixty. Look through our Navy estimates now at eighty million francs, $16,000,000, and what is it? It is like Falstaff's reckoning, so far as efficient service is concerned—"a penny worth of bread to all this sack." You have a beggarly account of some few hundred guns afloat. I took my pencil just now when the patriotic Senator from Mississippi was arguing for war supplies, to estimate how much of the appropriations in this bill were for navy-yards, and they lack but little of two million dollars. That is the way you are spending money—$2,000,000 for navy-yards, besides the appropriation of $100,000 asked by the honorable chairman of the Naval Committee for another naval dock, which is not such a very good defense to ships as my honorable friend from South Carolina seems to imagine.

Then, I say, I agree with my honorable friend from Virginia—it is too great for a peace establishment, and I will not vote for it as a peace measure; but pass the bill of my honorable friend from Illinois; tell the President to defend the honor of the country; punish the past and prevent the future; and authorize him in that bill, as our fathers did in 1839, to employ the military power; and I will give it all to him, to be used for that purpose; but not to be thrown about your navy-yards, not to be squandered in the inefficiency and effete ness that have marked and characterized the administration of your Navy for twenty years. I do not want a dollar there; you had better not own a navy-yard; you had not a single one of them in the last war with Great Britain. It is not navy-yards, it is not ships, that prepare a people for war. We can build five hundred as soon as we can one hundred, or one ship. We have private yards and public yards sufficient to build five hundred ships within the same time that we can build one. We can provide a navy, man it, and victual it, as soon as England or France, with their ships on the stocks. We ought to know what time it takes to put one of ours to sea when lying in ordinary. We can build ships; but, so far as we are concerned, the standing policy of our country has never been to make our Navy as great as that of France or England, or the other naval Powers. On the basis of our expenditure, if it costs us from thirteen to sixteen millions per annum for fifty ships, how much would it cost us if we had five hundred, as England has? The wealth of the whole world would not maintain them. They would cost more than the profits of the entire industry of the people of the United States. You would beggar the people in peace by way of preparing them for war! Hence, our policy has been to make the nation strong and powerful and great, by developing its material interests, making the people rich with abundance of food, abundance of men, and light taxation, and then you are always ready for war. That is my policy, and not the one of the honorable Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HAMMOND. I should like to know what is the exact proposition before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The amendment of the committee proposes to build three classes of vessels. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is to strike out that portion of the committee's amendments which proposes to build four sloops-of-war drawing not less than fourteen feet of water.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I inquire whether it would not be in order first to move to strike out and insert?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I send an amendment to the Chair for ten gun-boats with full steam power, as I believe it is in order to perfect the clause before striking out any portion of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My amendment I suppose comes in to perfect the section. I move it in that way.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator cannot move an additional appropriation.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not move any additional appropriation. I leave the appropriating clause to stand as it is, but after the provision for an eight-foot vessel for the Chinese seas, I propose to add "and ten gun-boats, with full steam power."

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order. I think the Chair is mistaken. It is in order to perfect a section before a motion is taken to strike out the whole section; but it is a matter of judgment whether a section is perfected by striking out one particular clause or adding a particular clause. As I do not propose to strike out the section, but to leave it, and my motion is to amend it by striking out the provision for four sloops-of-war drawing fourteen feet water, I put it to the Chair that that is in order, in preference to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to add ten gun-boats; because the rule is, that where there is a motion made to strike out the whole section, it shall be left for the friends of the section to amend it before that motion prevails. Therefore, I contend that my amendment takes precedence, and is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the impression that, in that view of the case, the question must first be taken on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. My only object in asking the question was to enable me to say that so far from concurring in the striking out proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, all the members of the Naval Committee except himself are in favor of doubling the number of vessels; and as far as I am concerned, I concur in the amendment which I understand the Senator from North Carolina intends to offer. I do not regard this as a war measure. I think, from the sentiments I uttered a few days ago in the Senate, it is understood that I am not an alarmist; that I am not disposed to take any measures that would precipitate this country into a war with Great Britain, while I am ready to meet that war whenever it occurs. If I recollect aright, the Secretary of the Navy, in his annual report, recommended that ten new steam sloops should be built, long before there was any apprehension of a difficulty with any foreign Power. Ten sloops, therefore, will be recognized specifically as a peace measure as necessary to sustain the Navy Department in time of peace. The opinion of the Naval Committee is that the recommendation falls short of the necessity, and that twenty such vessels are required for the Navy in time of peace. If we were going into a war with a great naval Power like Great Britain, this would be but a meager preparation; yet, of course, in all creations of a navy, we must necessarily have an eye to war; and without intending to advocate these twenty sloops as a war measure, whoever advocates them must necessarily do it with a view to the protection of our commerce, and of the incidents connected with it.

I imagine that there are few members of the Senate who know the condition of our Navy. Why, Mr. President, it is playing at sham with a navy. Comparing our Navy with our commerce, with our population, and with our extended and defenseless coast, it is perfectly ridiculous. If it were not for the gallantry which animates the officers of the Navy, and for the fine vessels that we have built, which have commanded the admiration of the world, I would say it was contemptible. As far as our Navy does go, it is equal to any other navy; and I would be willing to risk it at some odds against any other navy; but when we consider the proportions between our Navy and our commerce, I repeat, it is a mere sham. Why, sir, we have a commerce equal to that of Great Britain; our tonnage is equal to hers. She has a navy of twenty-two thousand guns to protect her commerce. What have we got? We have a Navy—counting all the ships in service, all the ships in ordinary, and all the ships on the stocks—of less than two thousand guns. Where ever we meet Great Britain, even in our own seas, she appears as ten to one; and throughout the whole world she is nearly as fifteen to one. Great Britain, at this moment, has more guns in the waters of America, and a greater number of seamen in our own waters, than our entire active Navy. She has seven hundred and ninety-four guns surrounding our coast, and we have but seven hundred and eighty-nine, all told, to meet her.

Mr. MALLORY. Six hundred and twenty-eight.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have seen an estimate of seven hundred and eighty-nine, and I wish to state it on the largest scale. Statements vary. Certainly Great Britain has a larger force in our own waters than we can control, if every ship we have was brought together at once. Are we safe? I do not wish to allude to the late outrages on our commerce, for I do not advocate this proposition as a war measure, but as a measure of decent regard to our dignity, and to the prospects of peace. Why, sir, when these outrages occurred, what had we in the Gulf? Thirty-five guns, all told. And what had Great Britain? Three hundred and sixty-nine, that she could concentrate at any point of the Gulf; and we could not, by any possibility, within any reasonable time, send over two hundred guns there. We are at the mercy of England. It is well known that England protects our commerce in the distant seas. It is well known that, but for the kindly and motherly protection which Great Britain condescends to afford us, our commerce would be at the mercy of the pirates of the world in all the distant seas; and yet we set up for a great commercial nation; and, when England insults us, we talk of sending down ships to capture hers. Where would you get them from? The Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from New Hampshire, insist that these belligerent acts of Great Britain should be met instantly, and that force should be sent to sink or capture her vessels. Where is the force to come from? Is there any possibility of building a fleet as Aladdin's palace was built, in a night? Are you to create ships by resolution of Congress?

As the Senator from Georgia has just said, with all the material you have, can you get a navy on the instant? You may readily raise an army; you have nothing to do but to light the beacon fires from hill top to hill top, and an army will spring up as if by enchantment; but a navy cannot be had at call. You cannot season wood, you cannot put it together, you cannot obtain practical seamen in a moment. Seamanship, unlike mere soldiery, is a profession; and a nation which intends to protect itself, its rights, and its commerce, must be more or less prepared with a navy at all times. The little State of Denmark, whose commerce might be annihilated from the ocean and it would never be missed, of whom most of us in America never heard until the question about the Sound dues arose, has a navy superior to ours. Sweden, another small State, has a navy five times stronger than ours. Even Spain, of whom we talk with so much contempt, every stump orator in the country thinking it a small matter to seize Cuba and to chastise Spain if she resists—Spain has a navy twice as large as ours. The navy of Russia is three-fold as large as ours; yet what did that perform in the late Crimean war? The navy of France is seven times as large as ours. Are we to pretend to be a great people, to pretend to compete with England in the only legitimate competition for the mastery of the seas, in commercial tonnage, yet have such a contemptible navy as this, so that we can be insulted anywhere and everywhere without any power of immediate resistance? Sir, I feel these insults in the West Indies as much as any man. I feel that we have been stricken in the face. I do not feel that a mere apology without reparation will be satisfactory. I wish we had the force, and I do hope that fortune will so favor us that some of our vessels may capture or sink one of the British vessels with or without orders, for that is almost necessary to put us on an equality in any negotiations that may happen.

Mr. MASON. You are filibustering.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am not filibustering; I am only lamenting that our Navy is so weak that whatever we say here in the way of defiance will be considered empty braggadocio. It can mean nothing else in the present condition of our Navy.

Mr. TOOMBS. I would ask my honorable friend from South Carolina how many ships we had afloat when our fathers declared war in 1812?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know what number we had afloat; but when we declared war in 1812, England was engaged in a war with France. Her ships were all well employed. She could not afford to send a squadron to this country. We met her single-handed at sea.

Mr. TOOMBS. I will say to my honorable friend that France had not a vessel on the ocean at that time. They had all been taken away before then.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is of no consequence whether she had a vessel on the ocean or not; England had to blockade the French ports to prevent the French vessels from coming out. But I have said I do not put the necessity for these vessels on the ground of war. In the Chinese seas, which swarm with the boats of the natives, the waters are shallow, and though we have sent vessels out there, they are utterly incompetent to any good purpose, and at this moment we are hiring a small steambot there at a cost of $5,000 a month in order to effect anything whatever. In Puget Sound the Indians come down in their large canoes, with fifty or sixty Indians in them, and land on the shores and commit any depredations they please. A shallow steambot placed there would save us hundreds of thousands of dollars from the Treasury every year, and save the lives and property of the people there. What are we to do for all the insults that we are constantly receiving in the shallow waters of South America? We have no vessels to go there. Our commerce may be interrupted anywhere by any little State, and if war should come upon us we have scarcely one vessel that can enter more than two or three ports south of the Chesapeake.

It is agreed by all who are acquainted with these matters that light steamboats, such as have been described by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, which can go into shallow waters, which can escape large vessels—active, spry, effective—are indispensable to every squadron on every station which our flag visits; and therefore I advocate these ten sloops, and the twenty which the Senator from North Carolina will propose as a peace measure distinctly, yet, like all peace measures connected with the Navy, with a view to war. At the same time, I will say, frankly, that I do not wish the United States to become a great naval Power. We have no desire for a Navy for conquest; we have no desire for a Navy to hold the balance of power among the great navies of the world; but, in peace and in war, we must have a Navy large enough to at least enable us to predominate at all times in our own seas. Interest, honor, safety, demand that much.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I agree, Mr. President, with most that has been said by my friend from Georgia, [Mr. Toombs,] and especially that we ought to determine what we are to do in reference to the outrages upon our flag in the Gulf of Mexico and the West Indies before we decide the amount of money we shall vote for war purposes. If we are going to content ourselves with simple resolutions that we will not submit to that which we have resolved for half a century should never be repeated, I see no use in additional appropriations for Navy or for Army; if we are going to be contented with loud-sounding speeches, with defiance to the British lion, with resolutions of the Senate alone, not concurred in by the other House, conferring no power on the Executive, merely capital for the country, giving no power to the Executive to avenge insults or prevent their repetition, what is the use of voting money? I find that patriotic gentlemen are ready to talk loud, resolve strong; but are they willing to appropriate the money, are they willing to confer on the Executive power to repel these insults, and to avenge them whenever they may be perpetrated? Let us know whether we are to submit and protest, or whether we are to authorize the President to resist and to prevent the repetition of these offenses. If Senators are prepared to vote for a law reviving the act of 1839, putting the Army, the Navy, volunteers, and money at the disposal of the President to prevent the repetition of these acts, and to punish them if repeated, then I am ready to give the ships and the money; but I desire to know whether we are to submit to these insults with a simple protest, or whether we are to repel them.

Gentlemen ask us to vote ships and money, and they talk to us about the necessity of a ship in China, and about outrages in Tampico, and disturbances in South America, and Indian difficulties in Puget Sound. Every enemy that can be found on the face of the earth is defied, except the one that defies us. Bring in a proposition here to invest the President with power to repel British aggression on American ships, and what is the response? High-sounding resolutions, declaring in effect, if not in terms, that whereas Great Britain has perpetrated outrages on our flag and our shipping, which are intolerable and insufferable, and must not be repeated; therefore, if she does so again, we will whip Mexico, or we will pounce down upon Nicaragua, or we will get up a fight with Costa Rica, or we will chastise New Granada, or we will punish the Chinese, or we will repel the Indians from Puget Sound, [laughter,] but not a word about Great Britain! What I desire to know, is whether we are to meet this issue with Great Britain? I am told we shall do it when we are prepared. Sir, when will you be prepared to repel an insult, unless when it is given? England has her ships of war, of various sizes, searching our vessels, firing across their bows, firing into their rigging, subjecting them to search, not only in the Gulf of Mexico, but in the Caribbean sea and upon the Atlantic. It is not confined to one captain, or one vessel, or one locality, but the outrages are committed by various ships, by the Styx, on the coast of Cuba; by the Forward, five hundred miles east of there; by the Buzzard, a thousand miles from Cuba. Every arrival at our ports brings us information of the repetition of these offenses, clearly demonstrating the fact that they are not accidental. They are not confined to one locality. They are not the acts of one ship or of one officer. They are the result of orders from Great Britain to execute this system of outrages on the American flag and American commerce. Are we to submit to it? If so, let us not say another word about it, pass no resolutions, make no speeches, vote no extra appropriations that we would not vote if these things had not occurred. If, on the contrary, we are not going to submit to them, why not act as we did on the northeastern boundary question in 1839? When the news arrived here on the 2d of March, 1839, that an American citizen had been taken prisoner on the disputed boundary of Maine, showing a disposition on the part of Great Britain to insist on her claim to the exclusive possession of that country, instantly the Senate, by a unanimous vote, passed a bill authorizing the President to repel any attempt on the part of Great Britain to enforce that claim, and, for that purpose, putting at his disposal the Army, the Navy, the militia, fifty thousand volunteers, and ten millions of money, to enable him to execute the will of the nation in that respect.

Now, sir, why not revive that act, striking out the disputed boundary and inserting "her claims to the right of visitation and search," and then every provision of that bill would be applicable to the present case. My friend from Missouri [Mr. Green] calls my attention to the vote of the House of Representatives on that occasion. It stood 197 in the affirmative, and 6 in the negative. The vote in the Senate was forty-one in the affirmative, none in the negative. Your Clays, your Calhouns, your Websters, the great men of former times, were here then; men differing in politics in times of high party strife, at a period when Mr. Van Buren was President, and Clay, Webster, and Calhoun led the Opposition. Still, the moment this outrage was perpetrated by Great Britain upon our rights, all party dissensions were hushed; the Opposition and the Administration stood as one man when the honor of the nation was assaulted. They did not hesitate to confer upon Mr. Van Buren the power to resist the outrages committed by Great Britain, in case they should be persevered in. Why not now revive the same law which was then passed by a unanimous vote in the Senate, and with only six dissenting voices in the other House, and confer upon President Buchanan the same power and authority which was then conferred upon President Van Buren on the motion of Mr. Senator Buchanan? Do that, and then I am prepared to vote the ships, the money, the men, anything, everything, necessary to vindicate our firm resolve. Yes, sir, I will go further, I will vote the ships and the money even now, trusting that Congress, before it adjourns, will arm the President with the necessary power and authority to prevent a repetition of these aggressions. I am, however, extremely unwilling to bury up the outrages of Great Britain under all the talk and noise that is made about the injuries perpetrated by the South American Republics. I know that in South America outrages have been perpetrated on our commerce, on our citizens and their property, which ought to have been punished on the spot. I know they are continuing, and will continue, from day to day, and year to year, until you clothe the Executive with the authority to punish them as promptly as the British Government punish similar outrages on their commerce and their rights; but these things have been going on in South America for years. They are weak, feeble, unstable Powers, entitled to our sympathy and our contempt mingled together. While I would clothe the Executive with power to punish them, I would only do it after I had avenged the insults perpetrated by Great Britain, or I would in the same act authorize the President to avenge them.

Sir, I tremble for the fame of America, for her honor, and for her character, when we shall be silent in regard to British outrages; and avenge ourselves by punishing the weaker Powers instead of grappling with the stronger. I never did fancy that policy, nor admire that chivalry which induced a man, when insulted by a strong man of his own size, to say that he would whip the first boy he found in the street in order to vindicate his honor; or, as is suggested by a gentleman behind me, that he would go home and whip his wife, [laughter,] in order to show his courage, inasmuch as he was afraid to tackle the full-grown man who had committed the aggression. Sir, these outrages cannot be concealed, they cannot have the go-by; we must meet them face to face. Now is the time when England must give up her claim to search American vessels, or we must be silent in our protests and resolutions and valorous speeches against that claim. It will not do to raise a navy for the Chinese seas, nor for Puget Sound, nor for Mexico, nor for the South American Republics. It may be used for those purposes, but England must first be dealt with. Sir, we shall be looked upon as showing the white feather if we strike a blow at any feeble Power until these English aggressions and insults are first punished, and security is obtained that they are not to be repeated.

I shall vote for the amendment offered by my friend from Florida, under the authority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, providing for ten sloops-of-war. I shall also vote for the proposition of my friend from North Carolina for the ten gun-boats. I wish he had increased the number to fifty, because I understand they can be constructed for about $100,000 apiece, and $5,000,000 would give you fifty gun-boats, vessels of a character more serviceable for coast defense than any other vessels you could have. They could enter every harbor, every creek, every bay, every nook where it is necessary to afford protection, and each one of them singly would be strong enough in time of war to capture an enemy's merchant vessel, and bring it into port or sink it, as easily as a seventy-four, or the largest class of ships of war. I would increase the number of gun-boats to fifty, I would give the sloops asked for by the committee, but I would never permit this Congress to adjourn, after all the resolutions we have had reported and all the brave speeches we have made, until we give the President power, and thereby make it his duty, to repel in future every repetition of these British outrages on our flag; and to use the Army, the Navy, the militia, and the Treasury, to any extent which may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. MALLORY. I must protest, sir, against connecting the recommendation for the construction of these ten ships with any war measure which Senators may have in view who engage in this discussion. The Secretary of the Navy, at the commencement of the session, recommended the construction of these vessels without any reference whatever to our present relations. He recommended it, because years had demonstrated the value of just such ships, of which we now have none. The Committee on Naval Affairs have taken the subject into consideration, and have recommended this measure without reference to our relations with Great Britain. I agree with everything the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Georgia have said on this point. We have been too supine, and we may find ourselves drifting into war when we least think of it, not because we take active measures, but because we have not met the occasion in a proper spirit. Already we have authentic accounts that thirty of our vessels have been boarded and searched, for disguise it as you will, this right of visit is a right of search. Visit is a social term; it implies the consent of both parties, it implies frequently an invitation. It certainly does not imply forcing and searching a neutral vessel without its consent. It is a right of search in the broadest sense; and as I before remarked, in exercising this right of search, British officers have conducted themselves with less civility than has frequently marked England's roadside robbers and highway thieves. I regret that our Secretary of the Navy did not deem it expedient to order our frigates in the Gulf to bring one of the offending vessels into port, and so begin negotiations with equality.

Gun-boats are not wanted for that purpose. How contemptible is this measure, regarded as a war measure! Great Britain has now on our shores seven hundred and ninety-four guns. We have throughout all the world afloat six hundred and twenty-eight guns. The vessels which are contemplated may possibly if they are fully manned mount one hundred guns; they may have an average of ten guns apiece, certainly not more. Great Britain has now in these seas one hundred and sixty-six guns more than we have throughout the whole world. We shall then fall sixty-six guns behind Great Britain on our own shores, when we add this hundred.

Mr. TOOMBS. I would ask the honorable chairman if his statement about guns is not deceptive in one thing. Take, for instance, the Niagara and Colorado of forty guns; are they not equal to any eighty or one hundred and twenty gun ships?

Mr. MALLORY. It is not deceptive in any particular, because we have precisely the same kind of guns that England has.

Mr. TOOMBS. Eleven-inch guns?

Mr. MALLORY. She has no eleven-inch guns, and there is not an eleven-inch gun on board one of the ships the Senator mentioned. They have eight and nine-inch guns.

Mr. TOOMBS. There is one in the Gulf now.

Mr. MALLORY. It may get there possibly on the 1st of July, in the Plymouth; but it will take her thirty days, at least, to get there. We have not an eleven-inch gun in the Gulf. The guns on board our frigates are of two calibers, eight and nine inch. As a war measure, this sinks beneath contempt; it is not recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, or the Naval Committee, as a war measure. It was deemed expedient to recommend this proposition, because, as the honorable Senator from South Carolina observed, we have not any steamer except those which are useless as war vessels, that can enter our southern ports; and let me tell the Senator from Georgia, that if ever this country does get into a controversy with England or France, or any maritime Power, the first contest must, necessarily, be in the Gulf of Mexico. The distance from the Florida shore to Cuba is but ninety-one miles, and six steamers will bridge it across and speak each other every fifteen minutes; and that Gulf, if we were at war with a superior naval Power, would be as hermetically sealed as if nature had reared up a great wall at its mouth, and every ship we have would be shut out of the Gulf. The Senator from Georgia is for waiting until the contingency arrives before he builds ships, and the Senator from Virginia has the same view. I imagine that if we had these ships, we should conduct ourselves just as we are doing now. If we had these ten gun-boats, the Secretary of the Navy would not have ordered any of them to capture the Styx and the Forward. He had power to do it, I think, and the force, as I conceive, if he had chosen to do it. If he had done it, it would have awakened a throb in this country; because whatever leaders may think, the heart of the people is always right. If we are to have a war with Great Britain, we can never have it on higher ground than now.

I differ with the honorable Senator from Georgia as to our preparation for war. I concede that the American people are naturally soldiers, and on every field the blood of our volunteers has been nobly shed, but a navy is necessarily a work of years. A sailor is not the creation of a day; he requires a long and painful training, and when a sailor, he is good for nothing else. The most opposite creature on earth from a sailor is a soldier. You cannot make sailors of soldiers, nor can war ships be built in the time they could formerly. The constructive power of Great Britain is shown in the construction of these gun-boats. As I remarked before, a single house constructed eighty within four months, and put them up. I can only compare it with the constructive power of this country in 1815. We wanted a ship on Lake Ontario; and our constructor was Henry Eckford, and from the time the first ax was struck into a tree at Sackett's harbor, until the three-decker was built up to her third deck, was precisely six weeks. She was ready for launching. He picked up carpenters as he went along the road; he cut down the trees where the ship stood, and put up her frame, and he laid every particle of timber in the ship as he found it; and astonishing to say, that ship is perhaps the soundest one in the Navy to-day. There is a decay of but one square yard of timber throughout the ship built in 1815 of timber as it then stood in the forest. We can construct a navy to any extent, but in the first six weeks of a war with a naval Power our maritime towns would necessarily be destroyed, our Navy and all our commercial tonnage would be swept from the ocean.

The Senator from Georgia has contrasted the expense of our Navy with that of France. I do not know where the Senator from Georgia gets his French estimates. They are very different from mine. According to my information, the naval estimates of France were 243,000,000f. or $48,000,000; and I know that the naval budget of England for the present year is £11,000,000, and that excludes her ordnance and a large number of half-pay retired officers. A large portion of the expense of our Navy, as the Senator from Georgia has said, has been exhausted in navy-yards. Why did the Senator from Georgia bring forward a new one? He brought forward the Brunswick yard, if I mistake not.

Mr. TOOMBS. That is a mistake.

Mr. MALLORY. I may be mistaken; but that the Senator from Georgia indicated it with his usual zeal, I am certain. If he had then the views of navy-yards that he has now, would he have exhausted his strength in constructing a new yard of doubtful propriety at least? I agree that much of the money of this expenditure has been taken away from the legitimate purposes of vessels. How much of it goes for mail service every year? I think $900,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Not in this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. That expense is included in the estimates for the Navy.

Mr. TOOMBS. None of that is in this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I think I am right about that matter. A portion of it is here, I am informed.

Mr. HUNTER. That is in the mail-steamer bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Is not a portion of the mail service included in this bill?

Mr. HUNTER. Not the mail-steamer service.

Mr. MALLORY. Now, sir, when we speak of our coastwise defenses, we speak of a line of coast exceeding that of almost the entire coast of Europe. Our coast extends from Canada to Puget Sound, a voyage greater than any European Power would perform in coming to America. That is the coasting trade. A vessel clears coastwise from New York to San Francisco. On our coast route there are thousands upon thousands of inlets, where, in a foreign war, our vessels could escape into neutral ports. There are thousands of other places where they would have to go to a neutral port to get a supply of coal. We have vessels that cannot approach them. Our large naval steamers now could not receive a supply of coal at any of our southern ports that I know of, except Key West or Pensacola. They would have to go North for coal. Our home squadron should consist expressly of such vessels as are here contemplated, that have great speed, with heavy guns, and carry a small supply of coal, and have their depots immediately under their lee; while for foreign service we are necessarily compelled to build a larger class of vessels, which will cross the Atlantic with their coal, using sails as an auxiliary power. These small vessels cannot go abroad. The honorable Senator from North Carolina says the British gun-boats have gone to China, and are all over the world. There are one hundred and eighty-four of them. Great Britain uses them in China, in India, in the Pacific. Why? Wherever a standard can be reared, or a gun can be planted, there she has a power, and there you will find a coal depot, rendezvous, or fitting station. They are never twenty-four hours from a depot; while, the very instant we leave our own shores, we are at the mercy of a neutral for coal, without which steam vessels cannot cross the seas; and, in a maritime war tomorrow, we should have to rely upon neutrals for coal. I concede that, if we were at war with England, France would have a right to open her coal depots to both belligerents alike, and we might obtain a supply of coal; but we should be dependent on her mercy. For foreign service we are compelled to build vessels that will carry their own supplies, and be floating batteries. Another reason is, that we are compelled to build them as other nations do. If other nations build frigates of four thousand tons, we must put ours at four thousand. If they use eleven-inch guns, we must do the same, because we cannot pretend to compete in fleet fighting; and it is not the policy of the country to have a grand, large Navy, to extend over the world; but we do pretend that, wherever, in open warfare, yard-arm to yard-arm, on the high seas, an American frigate meets one of another nation, she finis no superior; and it is the duty of Congress to provide for that emergency now, to say that when we build a frigate, we build it with reference to those she has to contend with, and we are not at liberty to decrease the size of our frigates or sloops. We find Great Britain and France have abandoned the idea of having many large vessels for special service, and are building a smaller class. The gun-boats draw six and a half feet of water. I find, on referring to an authentic report made by one of our own officers, that their third-class gun-boats, drawing six and a half feet water, with sixty horse power, are the most numerous. They can enter every American port from Galveston to Maine, and we have not a single vessel deserving the name of a man-of-war that will do it to-day; and still we are told this is a war measure.

I would say to the honorable Senator from Illinois that, in bringing forward this measure, it is not proposed at all, or sanctioned by the Naval Committee, as a war measure under the guise of peace. It is not that we want vessels really for a war with Great Britain, and choose to name them vessels for the Chinese seas—by no means. If we were to give orders to-morrow to take the Forward, the Buzzard, or the Styx—those vessels that have infringed on our commerce—I am not willing to admit that it would be a war measure. If the Secretary of the Navy were to order the Colorado to-day to bring either of these vessels into port, it would be simply an act of reprisal, such as Great Britain herself has resorted to in hundreds of cases, and we should then be in a condition to negotiate fairly with her. In the Chinese seas we are now paying $5,000 a month for a vessel, and we have been doing it for six months past.

Mr. TOOMBS. I would ask the chairman of the Naval Committee by what authority $5,000 a month is paid for a vessel there to help the British and French to superintend the Chinese?

Mr. MALLORY. I am not here to say by what authority our foreign relations are conducted abroad, for I know nothing about them.

Mr. TOOMBS. Is there any authority of law for that?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know. The simple fact is stated, and I believe it is true, that our Minister is paying, in China, $5,000 a month for the use of a steamer, because we have no steamer of our own in which his official negotiations can be carried on. What his authority is I do not know. If that be the fact, it only shows the propriety of constructing a ship of our own for those waters. Great Britain has frequently constructed gun-boats for the Chinese rivers. Some steamers will be wanted for Oregon, where the Indians transport themselves in large canoes across the sea. A single steamer would be worth regiments of troops there. In addition to what I have said, the steamers are wanted for the southern coast.

Mr. PUGH. I think the Senate has derived a vast deal of useful information from this debate. We are now solemnly assured that, with an expenditure of over fifteen millions a year, the Navy is absolutely contemptible; that it renders no service; that it can fight nobody; that it can render no service to the country. That is the argument of the honorable members of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MALLORY. Where does it come from? Who says that?

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from South Carolina said the Navy was a sham. If I misunderstood him I shall be happy to be corrected.

Mr. HAMMOND. I said comparatively. I did not say it is an absolute sham; but comparatively it is child's play, compared with our commerce and our relations to the world; and I will take this occasion to say what I intended to have said before, that I am perfectly certain that our Navy, if the Department was properly managed, could be increased at least three-fold with the same expenditure. I am not responsible for that.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator has expressed the very point to which I was about to come. If an ordinary annual expenditure of $15,250,000 gives us a navy that is unable to protect our commerce, I am willing to go with the Committee on Naval Affairs for any increase of the number of ships; but they ought to accompany the proposition with some attempt to reduce the abuses which evidently exist in the system. There must be abuse in the Navy; there must be shameful profligacy at some place, if $15,000,000 every year cannot give us a navy that does not even rise above the dignity of a sham. Let my honorable friend from Florida tell us where we can take money out of the navy-yards, or some other place, and put it into ships, and he shall have my vote; but it is a continual recommendation of increase, increase—no retrenchment, no improvement. I am not satisfied that while this system continues any amount of money will produce any greater efficiency. That is my difficulty on this occasion. I asked the honorable Senator from Virginia how much money this bill contains, and he told me $13,250,000—that is a peace bill—without the amendment. Where is all this money spent, and where do we want these new ships? We do not want them to capture the Styx and the Buzzard; it seems we intend to keep away from them. We want one, I am told, in China, and the amendment provides for one to go to China. The Senator from South Carolina says one is required at Puget Sound. Where do you want the other eight? Do you want them to go with the Niagara to carry the cable of Great Britain from one of her provinces to another? Do you want them to visit the Mediterranean sea? Where is all our Navy? Two years ago we had plenty of ships to lend England. This great Power, which had more ships afloat than we had guns, came to us to borrow our ships to lay her own cable, and we lent her the Niagara and the Susquehanna, and now we have lent her the Niagara again; and if we get into a war with her, she will be very foolish if she does not keep it to fight us with. This Navy needs retrenchment and reform somewhere. I do not understand it. I am a land lubber, and my constituents are land lubbers; we live here on the fresh water; but I beg the Committee on Naval Affairs, when they offer this proposition, to which I am not opposed, to accompany it with some measure to reduce the estimates somewhere else.

Mr. CLINGMAN. At this point, with the consent of the Senator from Ohio, I would say to him, and I say it in the presence of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that a Democratic member of Congress from the State of New York, in reply to a remark of mine about the large expenditure and small return, told me that, in his opinion, in one of the navy-yards, I shall not specify which, two thirds of the money was wasted. He said he knew enough about it to be satisfied that one third of the money could get all the service the Government now got by that expenditure. I make this remark for what it is worth, in the hope that the Committee on Naval Affairs will at least inquire into these matters.

Mr. PUGH. I think that is very probable, for it is my experience, that two thirds of the money we vote for any purpose is wasted; that only about one third of it comes to any good. Gentlemen call this a peace measure. Well, sir, I have made no warlike speeches, because I have seen nothing like war in the Senate; and I think if the President had intended to go to war, he would have sent us a message. He was fast enough to send us a message when your Pauldings and Chatards went to Central America to capture American citizens. He sends this without any expression of opinion.

Mr. POLK. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether the member of Congress from New York, to whom he alludes, mentioned the navy-yard?

Mr. CLINGMAN. He did mention it; but I do not wish to be the cause of getting up any committee of investigation. I hope the Committee on Naval Affairs will inquire into the condition of all our navy-yards. He seemed to be pretty well informed, and said he could give many facts, and that he had no doubt one third or one fourth the money would pay for all the service we got; and he thought it could be ascertained how the money was wasted. I was remarking on the fact that, with a large expenditure of from twelve to fifteen millions a year, we had not more ships, and did not get more service, than when we only spent one third or one fourth the amount; and then he made the statement which I have given. I prefer not referring either to the navy-yard or to the member, except to say that he is a Democratic member of Congress from the State of New York.

Mr. PUGH. I was about to say that I had not seen any warlike indications in the Senate. I do not hear the President sending us any word on the subject. I do not hear any proposition that is received with favor in the Senate which is to go down to the coordinate war-making power of this Government and be passed on by them. When the Senator from Illinois introduced one bill, it was eviscerated and disemboweled, and the part of Hamlet expressly left out of it. When he brought us in another bill, it got on the table, and there, I imagine, it will stay, so long as a majority of the Senate can keep it there. Consequently, when my friend from Tennessee began to lecture us on the subject, I asked him whether the committee intended this as a war measure? Do you want these ships to fight with? Do you want to attack the Styx and the Buzzard—for these have become familiar names to us of late. If you want them for that purpose, I agree these are not enough, and I am ready to vote you more. If you say that is the purpose, I will vote you any number; I will put the taxes on my constituents to the last extremity, and I know they will stand it; but I do not understand why it is that, when you are talking about war, all of you are sheering away from it in every direction; and I sheer away too, as is natural, being one of the younger members.

You tell me you want this as a peace measure, and propose to add to this enormous expenditure, and yet suggest no retrenchment in that. I do not understand it; I want to understand it. I have the greatest confidence in the Senator from Florida, as he knows; and if his committee will bring in any proposition for retrenchment, I will sustain it. If they cannot hit it in any other way, I recommend them to put in an amendment of three or four lines before the appropriation for the navy-yards, saying that "seventy-five per cent. of the following sums be appropriated." If you cannot retrench in any other way, introduce the horizontal principle of the great tariff of 1833, and I think you will come somewhat near retrenchment. We do not understand these estimates, and we may stay here until doomsday afternoon, and we shall not understand them then. They are not made to be understood. I have heard it said that figures cannot lie, but the fact is they tell more lies than anything else; they conceal everything. The great fact stares us in the face, that, with an annual expenditure which is greater than the whole expenditure of this Government at the beginning of Jackson's administration, with that sum of money lavished on the Navy, you are now told that it is of no account, that you cannot go to war with anybody; that you not only cannot fight England with it, but that you even cannot carry on a foray against the pirates of China with your present Navy. Then where has our money gone? What account can we give of our stewardship? How can we go to our constituents, and say, "we have levied these taxes on you, but cannot tell where the money has gone; what has become of it, what is to be shown for it." If Senators want a war measure, I think we had better tack on to this bill the bill which was introduced by my friend from Illinois. That is in earnest; that is talking right; and if the Senator from Florida will withdraw his amendment, I hope my friend from Illinois will offer his as an additional section; if he does not, I shall do so myself.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to remind the Senator from Ohio that, whether the United States have a ship afloat or not, they must make preparations for having ships afloat, and a large portion of the annual estimates necessarily consist of amounts needed for keeping up a state of preparation. We have here, on our coasts, nine navy-yards. They have been created by Congress; the Administration must suppose that Congress intended to maintain them; and that involves an expense in providing work-shops, quarters, and other preparations for putting a fleet afloat; and we might increase our Navy double what it is without incurring anything like a proportionate increase of expense.

Mr. PUGH. What state of preparation do you mean? Do you mean to say we are laying up timber?

Mr. MALLORY. We lay up timber every year.

Mr. PUGH. Lay up timber for the sea-worm we have heard of this morning to destroy?

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator comes from an agricultural State, and he may be very excusable for not knowing anything about this question. A large portion of these expenses must be incurred whether we have few or many ships afloat. That the Senator will readily understand. Here I will remark, in continuation of what was said by my friend from South Carolina, that I do not, by any means, agree to any censure on our Navy. So far as our ships and men go, it is the most brilliant navy afloat, or that the world has ever seen. Our ships cannot be matched by any nation. England, at this day, is engaged in an endeavor to match them. When she saw the Merrimack, she laid down one to match her.

Mr. PUGH. Inasmuch as they cost more than anybody else's ships, they ought to beat anybody's.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I will say it is unfair and not exactly logical, to compare the expenses of the Navy now, to what they were at the time of the last war with England. For instance, the expense of sailing an ordinary sloop-of-war is $95,000 a year, but if you put a propeller into that sloop you make the expense $154,000 a year, at once. France and Great Britain have sent their propellers all over the world. We have to do that. The expenses of our Navy have been very materially increased by the introduction of steam navigation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I cannot let this question pass away from the Senate without making a single remark, representing, as I do in part, the third commercial city of this Union. I am desirous, especially as gentlemen here have declared their willingness and their readiness at any time to proclaim war against Great Britain, to know in what position we, who are upon the Atlantic coast, are to find ourselves when that declaration of war shall be made. I have not opened my lips on this question; I have not said one word in regard to courting the war with England to avenge our insults; but I agree entirely in every word that has fallen from the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, and if this is to be the prevailing sentiment of the country, I hope the Senate of the United States will take some steps, and adopt some measures, by which we may not be stripped entirely of our possessions and our homes.

I ask gentlemen when they consider the question of war, what is to be the position of the Atlantic States in such an event? I have been surprised to find gentlemen representing the cities of the Atlantic coast upon this floor, with the single exception of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMMOND,] willing to let this debate pass without one word being said. From the great city of New York there is not a word, nor is there from the representatives of Philadelphia, or of Boston. I ask gentlemen representing maritime States, what is their hope if this declaration of war shall be made with your forty-one effective ships of (all told) less than two thousand guns in the American Navy? Sir, while I indorse the sentiment of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina that the American Navy may be a sham—I take it in his sense—I go further, and say it is a reproach to the country. I do not mean the personnel of the Navy, for as far as that Navy goes, I am willing to proclaim here and elsewhere that it is equal, to that extent, to the navy of any other Power on the face of the earth; but what is it, sir? Forty-one or forty-two effective vessels to contend against a great maritime Power like England! When, with such a force, we are vaunting and bragging that it is only necessary to show fight and they will back down, what is the amount of tonnage and of marine that we have scattered all over the world? Is it statesmanlike, is it proper, is it in accordance with the duty that is devolved upon us to protect American interests that we shall vauntingly and boastfully proclaim our readiness for war, and yet use the argument that we are not declaring war against England, but against the Treasury of the United States? No, sir. All that I have, or hope to have upon God's earth, in that event, shall be at stake. No man is more tenacious of the American people and of the American flag than I am. No man in this American Senate, from inland or the sea-coast, will go further to protect the honor and dignity of that flag than myself; but I cannot sit here tamely and quietly and hear Senators upon the floor of the American Senate say that they are better prepared to resist aggressions now than they have ever been, with almost every fort dismantled, and hardly a stone one upon another that an ordinary gun-boat could not knock off.

I did not rise to make any speech on this occasion. I only rose, in vindication of the interests of my own constituents, to ask if belligerent speeches are to be made here, if taunts are to be thrown to England, that we may not play the coward; that when the chip is put upon our own head, and we defy them to knock it off, we are not tamely to say, "You are the larger man; but if you do so a little longer I would fight you anyhow!" I have not been one on this floor who has raised his voice for war. I have thrown no taunt. I am prepared to adopt the pacific measures of any gentleman here; but I wish it distinctly to be understood that, although living upon the Atlantic coast, no man will be more ready or more willing to take up the gage when it is thrown down, against insulted honor and indignity to our flag.

If such a proposition would be in order, I would go further than any gentleman yet. It is no excuse to me, to say the Treasury is impoverished. I do not here mean to bring up charges against the Administration as to why it is impoverished. With that I shall now have nothing to do. But, whether that be the fact or not, it is not to be weighed as the feather in the balance, when the national honor and the dignity and safety of our country are at stake. For myself, representing, as I do in part, a sovereignty here, and that one of the most exposed, with the great Chesapeake bay leading to its metropolis, which would be the very first to be laid bare, with hardly a gun mounted, with hardly an arm to raise, except that which may be raised in defense upon the land, against the thundering cannon of an English seventy-four sailing into our ports to lay waste our homes and our firesides, to break up our commerce, to bring ruin and desolation—I am willing to yield all these when the honor and dignity of the American flag are assailed. But I wish to be understood as not making a war speech now. It is emphatically a measure of peace that I am advocating. I am not here to blow the war-trumpet at all; but in the vindication of the rights of the American flag, when unjustly assailed, I am prepared to go as far as he who goes farthest; and, as a question of statesmanship, and of wise and sound policy, which all Senators are bound to enforce, I demand, when we take that stand, that we shall not place ourselves in the position of a vain braggart; but to be sure that we are right, to prepare for any emergency whatever; and then, whatever the consequences or cost may be, to maintain the dignity, the honor, and glory of the flag, and the country at large, by sacrificing to the last cent any interest that our Commonwealths may have in this great Confederacy, when the great bond of the Union that binds us together requires it.

While my honorable and distinguished friend from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH,] and other gentlemen inland, may look with calm indifference upon the situation of our defenses, and believe that one American citizen is a match for ten other men, I have none of that sentiment myself. I believe that human muscle and blood are pretty much the same; and especially if you come to oppose the Anglo-Saxon blood here against those from whom we have derived our highest boast and glory. Believe me, sir, it will be no child's play. I believe the American people are warlike; I believe they are brave; I believe they are equal to any emergency that may arise; but I am not one who believes that one American is better, or greater than, or superior in physical power to, any other three men in creation.

You have had an exhibition to-day from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the power of England; you have had an exhibition of the contemptible—and I use it with full force—power of the American Navy. I speak of it numerically—not so far as the personnel of the American Navy is concerned—as compared with the navies of other Powers; for I do not believe that one American sailor is equal to five or three of any other nation.

It is because I have a just regard to my own interests and the interests of my State and of this country, that I am in favor of this amendment. But when you come to adopt an amendment like this, what is it? Some ten little gun-boats, involving an expenditure of two or three million dollars, for the protection of this country. With your marine scattered over every sea, your flag floating everywhere, with an American heart beating in every breast, full of this pride and glory, let me say to the American Senate, that that pride may be humbled when the least expected.

I do not make these remarks in any view to excite popular indignation or popular feeling upon a question like this; but I do so, that in regard to the protection of American interests and the exposed condition of the whole Atlantic coast, I may call upon gentlemen, upon Senators here, representing the large commercial towns and cities of this Atlantic coast, to unite, at least, with me in endeavoring in time of peace to prepare for war.

I say again, I wish not to be understood as making a war speech. I am speaking in vindication of my own interests, the interests of my own people of the State of Maryland; and I beg and trust that Senators all are willing to unite in a manly and open advocacy of that principle which is to maintain the honor of this country—not to see the flag lowered and disgraced, and rendered contemptible in the eyes of the world by a sudden emergency or a coup de main. I beg to say that I believe the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] is much more experienced in legislative matters than myself; from him I am willing at all times to receive lessons of experience; his heart I believe is right, patriotic, and just; but upon this occasion I believe him to be eminently wrong, when he declares the sentiment that we are better prepared now for war than we have ever been. I am but a tyro here, but I have an interest to serve; I have a constituency whose interests are at stake; but, whether I may be regarded as a "land lubber" or not, we shall be the first to suffer, while gentlemen inland may sleep secure in their beds.

Mr. PUGH. I would remind my friend from Maryland that the danger is much nearer to a poor land lubber like me than it is to him. We had just as much trouble during the last war as they had in Maryland. The British outnumber us as much on the lakes as they do on the ocean.

Mr. KENNEDY. We do not differ. The gentleman denominated himself a land lubber.

Mr. PUGH. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am only quoting from your own remarks.

Mr. PUGH. I am in that regard just as much a land lubber as the Senator from Maryland, but we are as much in danger.

Mr. KENNEDY. Perhaps we are both equally land lubbers in one sense of the word. I am speaking for the interests of my State. I am speaking, I hope, for the honor and glory of the American flag. I do not wish to see, by any little petty economy, any dread of the responsibility of incurring a debt to defend that flag when grave Senators propose measures of war. I do not desire it; I am the last to desire it; but, when a war comes, as has been justly said, between England and ourselves, Mr. President, it is a war of extermination to one Power or the other. I do not believe it will be a war of extermination to America. There are moral considerations by which it can operate on that Power abroad more injuriously than on us. At home we are invincible.

But, sir, put us in a position to meet, if we cannot now meet, that gallant, great, and glorious Power as it is; and here, I am proud to have the opportunity to say that I do look upon England and her institutions as carrying out the principles of liberty and freedom upon that continent; and that at least entitles her to our consideration, and will bring us to her support in the illustration of liberal principles against arbitrary monarchies. But, sir, when that Power makes war with us it will be no child's play. It will end in the annihilation of all the hopes of mankind for free government. As I honestly and sincerely believe, however much we may be damaged, it will be the beginning of the end of that Power upon the continent of Europe.

Sir, deprecating, as I do, all this state of things, deprecating war as I do, I ask the Senate of the United States to pause and consider before you rush headlong into it by bold and violent declarations of power and intention, and at least to go to the little extent of some four or five millions in the way of defense. If in order, I should like to move (and I had intended to go further than the honorable Senator from North Carolina) for twenty little steamers with four or five guns. These would be but a small thing for a country like this. I am not accurately informed as to the amount of coast line we have to defend, but I think, if you take the indentations of this coast, we have not less than twenty thousand miles upon the Atlantic side, leaving out the Pacific. That may startle gentlemen, but when you come to an investigation of the fact you will find that I am not very far out of the way. We have large ships that can lay across the mouths of our rivers and bays, but I want an armed defense of our estuaries, our rivers, and our bays. I want to have some means to defend ourselves. When you do not make appropriations to build forts and fortresses, at least allow us the poor privilege of having some wooden walls upon which we can place a few large guns to take long shots in the shallow water of our bays and rivers.

I have made these few crude remarks, induced entirely by the debate that has arisen this morning around me, without any premeditation or preparation on my own part. I have done it in justice to the interests I am representing here. I have done it in justice to the rights of the whole

Atlantic sea-board. I have been somewhat amazed that the representatives of the large Atlantic cities have not contributed one particle, except the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina. If in order, I now give notice that at the proper time I will move to amend the amendment by adding twenty steamers, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SEWARD. If the representatives of great commercial cities are justly subject to the censure of the honorable Senator from Maryland, there is a double weight of censure to be thrown down on my head in regard to the support of this bill, for I represent, with my colleague here, not only a commercial city upon the sea-board, but I represent large commercial cities upon an interior sea-board. A war with Great Britain, which is the war that the honorable Senator apprehends, will take the State which I represent in front and in rear and cut it all up to the middle through and through. It is exposed on all sides, and whenever there has been a war with Great Britain it has had experience of that sort.

But, Mr. President, I must think that my honorable and excellent friend from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] is responsible for having misled the Senator from Maryland and many other Senators on this occasion; and I think, as he sometimes indulges in wit and humor, that he must have done it designedly. What is the question which the honorable Senator from Maryland has discussed? The necessity of increasing the Navy and preparing for immediate war with Great Britain. What is the question before the Senate? The question of building ten small sloops-of-war. What is the connection between them? Why, there was, a few days ago, a debate in the Senate about what ought to be the attitude of the country in regard to aggressions committed.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the Senator will allow me. I did not raise that point.

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator must be satisfied that the point which he did raise must be ascertained through the whole tenor of his remarks. I do not know on what ground the Senator lectured so severely the representatives of Atlantic cities, if it was not that there was an imminent danger of a war with Great Britain in which the cities which we represent would suffer severely.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman will allow me a moment. I will say, so far as my remarks are concerned, that they were merely in reference to speeches which had been made upon this floor some few days since, in which the probabilities of war were discussed fully and freely; and that, myself, entertaining no great fear of immediate war now, I thought we might slide into a war from this sort of talking; and that, if war was to occur, that we should at least have the benefit of these little light-draught steamers to be running into shallow water to protect us; and, therefore, I was a little surprised that the same view which I entertained myself had not been taken by the representatives of the Atlantic cities generally. Inland gentlemen felt entirely secure, and did not see the necessity of a measure of this sort as I did; and, therefore, I was desirous, I am frank to confess, to hear the sentiment of New York. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Hale] went as far, in his war sentiments, together with the gentleman who represents the city of Boston, [Mr. Wilson,] whom I do not now see in his place, as any others; but yet, I heard no proposition from those gentlemen to protect the Atlantic. The little forts or fortresses you have got there as against the ordnance of England and the power she will bring, in my judgment, are mere ant-hills; and therefore, I want to get the views of other gentlemen in Atlantic cities to see how far they are willing to go in this declaration of war.

Mr. SEWARD. I still think that the honorable Senator from Tennessee is to blame for having, somehow or other, brought into connection two subjects entirely different and separate from each other; the one a question about the attitude which the Government should take in resisting British aggressions on our commerce in the Gulf of Mexico, and the other the amendment proposed to the appropriation bill to build ten sloops-of-war. I am the more satisfied that it is so, because every Senator upon the Committee on Naval Affairs has expressly disclaimed that there is any connection between any popular war with Great Britain to result from those aggressions, and the measure of increasing the Navy, which they now defend and maintain. They may well disclaim it, for it would be an addition to the naval power of the country inconsiderable, inefficient, and contemptible. Why, sir, of these ten sloops-of-war to be built, one is to go to Puget Sound to chastise the Indians, one is to go to China to protect the American interests in that distant sea; and if this is a war measure, three or four at least must be sent into the Gulf to sink the Buzzard and the Styx. I must have two or three upon Lake Ontario, to protect the rear of the State of New York, one added to the defense of the city of New York, and how many would be left for the protection—

Mr. KENNEDY. I will go with the honorable Senator, if he will propose one hundred ships. I admit it is contemptible, and that twenty is hardly less so. If the gentleman will propose one hundred I will go for them.

Mr. SEWARD. I will explain to the honorable Senator, and he and I will agree. I know he would not see the city which I represent in jeopardy, and I am sure I am the last to see the monumental city exposed to any danger. I will tell him what my course has been about these British aggressions, and I think he will see the logic and consistency of it. When there was an alarm in the country and in Congress, I called upon the President to know whether he would desire from Congress or not any additional force or any legislation, to enable him to protect our commerce against those aggressions. The President has answered that message; he has sent the correspondence here, and left us, by his silence, to infer that he wants nothing for the redress of those aggressions.

I said, on that occasion, that no prudent man believed Great Britain wanted to make war with the United States; no prudent man believed that if Great Britain did want to make war upon the United States she would begin by attacking with gun-boats our commercial vessels in the Gulf of Mexico; no prudent man believed that if the British Government wanted to quarrel with the United States she would begin in that indirect and pitiful manner instead of making her complaints known according to the laws and customs of civilized nations; but that, nevertheless, inasmuch as men bearing her commissions, and sailing under her flag, had committed aggression upon our commerce, which must be abandoned, which must be disclaimed, which must be redressed, or for which satisfaction must be given, that I was not one of those who were willing to indicate beforehand that there was any satisfaction which she could render. I stand ready to pledge the whole military and naval power of the United States to maintain ourselves in resistance so as to suppress those outrages. If she makes an explanation, be it what it may, it must be one which in no sense revives, retains, or maintains any pretense of a right, on the part of Great Britain, to exercise police over the vessels of the United States. So I say now. I stated then that I believed such would be the issue on that question. I believe these pretensions will all be disclaimed and abandoned. We have evidence already that they have been disclaimed in the Gulf of Mexico to the extent of the arrest of the captain of the Buzzard, who has been sent into Jamaica for trial on complaint of the Spanish Government.

Mr. MALLORY. If my friend from New York will allow me to ask a question just here, I would like to know the authority upon which he says that the captain of any British vessel has been arrested for any insult or outrage upon one of our vessels?

Mr. SEWARD. I have none except what I state in regard to an aggression committed upon one of our vessels at Sagua La Grande.

Mr. MALLORY. I see that that report is contradicted by the passengers who came home from the vessel, who state that no such arrest was made.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well, sir; I can concede all that. I proceed upon such intelligence as we have. I know that the British Government is not bewildered, delirious, or crazy; and I know that it is not to be conceived, standing as the present British Ministry does, standing as the British nation does, in the attitude which it maintains towards the United States, that the British Government will sustain or sanction those outrages. If they do, then is the time to meet, and the time to redress them.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Douglas] has proposed to Congress and to the Administration to anticipate any intelligence from Great Britain by giving to the President of the United States the power to redress those injuries, and chastise the offenders. Everybody knows that neither the President, nor the Senate, nor Congress, is prepared to adopt that measure. What measures are they prepared to adopt? No other but to let the matter stand as it is until it shall be ascertained how far the British Government is compromised by those transactions. Now, in order that we might occupy a safe ground in that respect, I have from first to last proposed to extend the period of this session until that intelligence should be obtained, and that Congress should be here in order to defend the country, and put it in an attitude of aggressive resistance against Great Britain, if it shall be necessary, when that time comes. That is my attitude.

What other one is proposed? The honorable Senator from Maryland supposes that a different course is involved in this proposition to build these ten war-sloops. It is no remedy. It will add but one hundred guns to the whole of our Navy, to be distributed to all parts of the world when exposed in time of war. Shall we, then, vote to add these ten sloops to our Navy, and say we have put the country in a condition of defense when we expect a war—that a war is imminent; that it is inevitable; and yet the country is safe, because we have authorized to be added to the Navy ten sloops-of-war which it will take two years to build?

I agree very distinctly and very decidedly with the Senator from Georgia, in the proposition which he has made, and which has so excited and disturbed the nerves of Senators here, that this country was never in an attitude so strong and safe for a war of defense, or even of aggression, if he went so far as that, as it is to-day. We challenged a war with Great Britain eighty years ago, when we had no navy, and no army. We challenged a war forty years ago, with Great Britain, a war upon sea and land, when we had, all told, including our revenues from imports, from direct taxation, and from loans, $16,000,000, and owed a debt of $100,000,000. To-day, we have practically—for we had last year, and we have the same power to make it again—a revenue of $80,000,000, subject only to a drawback of $30,000,000, for the debt which we owe. We have all the elements for defense, but we have more than that. We had then the weakness that provoked insult and aggression; and when insults and aggressions were committed, we were so weak that complaint only brought upon us the attempt to chastise us. We are now forty years older, a vast deal greater, a vast deal more populous, a vast deal more rich, and we have yet to see the nation that, within ten years, or twenty years, or thirty years, upon the face of the earth, has willingly or deliberately, and of premeditation, insulted us. It is impossible. Character—character for justice, character for moderation, character for conscious strength and power—this is a greater resource than Cesar's legions on the plains of Pharsalia, or than a navy that would cover the German ocean. That character, I am sure we have got. We have acquired it, we have deserved it—we have deserved it by establishing a Government that consults the arts of peace, and that regulates its intercourse with nations by the rules of doing no injustice and of submitting to no wrong. In that I confidently rely, holding myself ready at any moment, for the purpose of maintaining that character when it shall be necessary, to vote all the means of defense; but until that time, deeming it right and wise that the nation should act with that moderation which its character and position entirely entitles it to, I shall vote none.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, my friend, the Senator from Maryland, has made it necessary that I should say something on this subject. He has remarked that nobody representing the cities upon the ocean has taken any part in the debate or expressed any anxiety about this question. Of all the gentlemen in this Senate, no man is so well or so favorably known in my own State as the Senator from Maryland. A very large proportion of my people have a great respect for his character and his opinions. If I were to sit still and let his speech go abroad without saying a word, they might imagine that we were going to have a war immediately, and that I had not done my duty to prepare the country for war. Now, all the people in Pennsylvania do not know that my friend, the Senator from Maryland, represents a very small State, and small States, like small people, are very apt to be afraid of a big State; but a big State will have no such fear. Now, I come from a great State, with four times the population of his State and ten or twelve times the wealth. We are not afraid—

Mr. KENNEDY. If my honorable friend will allow me, I beg to correct him in one single remark. He says that I represent a small State, and, like all small States, we are likely to be afraid. Allow me to say to the Senator, that there is not the slightest fear in the world on the part of Maryland; not the least.

Mr. CAMERON. I know, Mr. President, that my friend, the Senator, has no fear. I know, so far as they go, that the people of Maryland have as much courage as any other people in the world. I remember that, amongst the first people I ever saw in military array, was a gallant company from Baltimore, which marched to Fort Du Quesne. I know that they are always ready to defend the country, as far as they go; but it is no discredit to say that a small State may be afraid of a war; but, I say again, a great State like Pennsylvania has no apprehensions on this subject. They believe, as I do, that the Administration here, whose head is a citizen of our State, believes that there is going to be no war; he has told us that it is so. Whenever the Administration say to the Senate here that they desire ships and money and men, I will vote for just as many as they desire; but until that time comes, I am not disposed to make a speech for Buncombe; I am not disposed to be apprehensive of war, or of danger of war. Whenever they say that there is danger, the State of Pennsylvania will do as she always has done—she will give her quota, and, if necessary, a great deal more than her quota of men and money.

I do not believe, and I have not believed from the first, that the Government of Great Britain desired to go into a war with this country. They cannot afford to do it. Their thousands of millions of debt, with the taxes necessary to pay the interest upon that debt, their wars in India, their difficulties with France, are sufficient for them to take care of. The last people in this world that Great Britain would make a war upon will be the United States of America. They tried us in our infancy, they tried us in our youth, and they may now, if they will, try us in our manhood; but in every struggle they have been worsted, and will be worsted.

I do not believe that they desire to make a war upon us, and therefore I will not apprehend that they are going to do so. States are like men. A gentleman never believes an insult is going to be put upon him, but he is always ready to resent it and protect himself when it comes. So it is with this country. Whenever a war comes everybody in the land will be ready to step out from their fire-sides and homes to defend the honor and glory of the country. I do not believe, either, that it is necessary to have a great navy. I believe that the strength of England, about which Senators talk, is her weakness. Her great naval array, her mighty army, for which she makes a debt, paralyzes her people. If she had a simple Government like ours, without great armies and navies and an enormous civil list, she would be in much less danger of ultimate dissolution and destruction. The day will come when that great debt of England will destroy her. It may be long, and I trust it will, because, next to us, she is the only hope for liberty in this world. But it is her debt, it is the extravagance of her people and her Government which is destroying her. No measure comes up before this Senate but we are told of the expenditure, the power, and the extravagance of England. We are a simple people and we desire to have a simple Government. While I shall give everything for the defense of the country, I will not give one dollar for extravagance or waste, and when I say that I only speak the sentiments of my people. I do not believe we are going to have a war, but when it comes I am ready for it.

Mr. HAYNE. I wish to say but one word, sir, if you please. I have heard this great debate, and the speech of my honorable and distinguished friend from Kentucky. I have thought of it over and over again. I would not take from it, nor add to it, one word. The course of my honorable friend from New York, if I mistake not, has been somewhat inconsistent on this subject; and glad am I to hear him say, on this floor, that he is for a judicious course of conduct. If there be a man in this Senate that blew the trumpet of war louder than any other, it was that distinguished gentleman. I was astonished at him; but, Senators, I believe there is no one here that thinks of war. Those who have talked the loudest believe it is furthest from us; and some of whom, if I were in the House of Representatives, I would have called to order, and asked the Speaker where we were, to tell us our latitude; for debate that should come up to-morrow, is anticipated to-day, contrary to everything that is right. I simply rose to express the wish that the vote may be taken.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foster in the chair.) It is proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out the following words:

"And four steam screw sloops-of-war with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water in active service shall not exceed fourteen feet."

Mr. HALE. I wish to explain that amendment, and will not occupy a minute. If this amendment should be adopted, it will leave five ships with a draught not less than twelve feet, and will also leave the side-wheel steamer, making six. That is all I have to say, except simply to excuse myself from making a speech, by stating that I am not a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It reduces the number of ten ships, recommended by the Navy Department, to six.

Mr. HALE. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. KENNEDY called for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron, Chandler, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Polk, Pugh, Seward, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yale—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clingman, Dixon, Douglas, Fitch, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Simmons, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wright—31.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the original amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Before the vote is taken, I want to say just a word or two. If this bill is designed to provide for the Navy on its peace establishment, it surely can be no time to add to the expense which will be entailed on it by the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. If, on the other hand, we are going to build these ships with a view to war, then I maintain that we ought to do it by a separate bill. We ought to do it by a bill which would provide adequately for such a contingency, because, as was well said by the Senator from Ohio, this is no preparation for war. This is a mere bagatelle, looking to such an event as that. If we design to provide even contingently for it in the shape which is proposed by the Senator from Illinois, we ought not only to provide more largely for the finances of the country, but ought to make provision for borrowing the money. The loan which passed through this Senate was upon the estimate of a peace establishment. It is manifest that we cannot add to the appropriation these various amendments which are to increase the expenditure so much, and meet them with the sources of revenue which are now provided. I say, then, that it is but just to the country, that it is but fair to the Treasury, if we are going to do these things, to bring them, in a separate bill and provide an additional loan, in order to raise the money which is necessary to carry them out. They cannot be carried out with the existing sources of revenue. We shall have to provide for it, and ought to do it at the same time, by making the appropriation. I think that we ought not to insert such amendments on this bill, and if we have this purpose of preparing for war, we ought to prepare and report a different set of measures.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Virginia talks about putting this appropriation upon a separate bill. I ask why? Does not the Senator know perfectly well that at this late day of the session no separate bill would have the slightest chance on earth to pass?

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, for I do not want to speak on this question again, I take it for granted that a majority of Congress, if they should believe there was danger of war, would, no doubt, stay here long enough to pass the necessary measures in a separate bill. If they had believed there was any such danger, surely they would not have begun with such a paltry provision as this, in such a contingency as that.

Mr. BROWN. Then I come back to the original question. Why not put this proposition in this bill? It is in order here; no one disputes that. Why have two separate bills? Why put yourselves to the trouble of passing two bills through all the forms of law? Put it on here. It is in order under your rule. It is in the right place, made by the right parties, and at the right time. When the Senator brings in his question whether this is a proposition of peace or of war, I reply, as I said before, that I hope there is to be no war. Heaven knows I want no war, for I know where it will fall; but I know, if the honor of the flag is to be vindicated, that there is danger of a war, and I would provide for it right here, and now; not by ten sloops, but by twenty—nay, sir, by forty. I would go even to a larger figure, but I suppose we can get nothing more than ten now, and I am for putting it on here, because, if you do not do it now, at this time and this place, you will not do it at all. Everybody knows that we have no time now to introduce a new bill, and pass it through all the forms of law. I hope that those who are in favor of maintaining the flag and vindicating your rights in the Gulf of Mexico will here vote for an increase of the Navy, and I shall expect those who have spoken heretofore in favor of vindicating the flag to vote for this amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will inquire whether my amendment will be the next in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is next in order. The Senator from North Carolina moves to amend the amendment in line eleven, after the word "seas," by inserting "and ten gun-boats, with full steam power." The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Senator from Virginia insists that we ought not to adopt this amendment without providing additional means. Now we have agreed to give the Government $35,000,000 in the way of loans, in addition to all the revenue. That is the amount that it is supposed they will need for twelve months. Does not the Senator from Virginia remember that Congress will convene in six months? I do not believe this additional expenditure will require any increased loan; but if necessary, surely it will be time enough to do it in January or February next. There is, therefore, no necessity whatever for an additional loan at this time, and I do not believe the money will be needed.

But, sir, he says this is not a war measure. Well, it may be a very good measure if we should be involved in war. He means, I take it, by that, that if we are going to war, we should go much further than this. Why not take this proposition, then? These vessels will answer a very good purpose. The Senator from Virginia and every gentleman here knows that if the views which have been maintained by Senators on this floor are to be carried out—and I am not prepared to say that they are not right, and I stand ready to vote for those measures—of course we are involved in war, and in less than six months shall be attacked on a hundred points. In such an event there will be a great panic, and we shall have to spend $100,000,000; so that even as a war measure, this will be very well, and as a peace measure, Senators all around have argued that it is eminently necessary and proper.

On consulting with the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the House of Representatives, they have expressed the opinion to me that the House would very readily adopt the additional expense of twenty gun-boats; and therefore, upon the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland and several other Senators, including the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Illinois, I should be very glad to go to the extent of twenty gun-boats. In fact, there has been no time within the last five years that I would not vote $25,000,000 to the public defenses, in addition to the expenditure made. I believe, that by expenditures for useful and necessary purposes, you will not increase so much the entire expenditures. The money will be wasted to private purposes and jobs, unless it is going to something useful. I desire to see the Departments pinched as much as possible, and driven to make the money go as far as possible. I do not care, therefore, to see a very full Treasury. I think we can afford to vote two or three millions for the public defense. I wish, therefore, to modify my amendment so as to make it twenty gun-boats, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from North Carolina what he means exactly when speaking of twenty gun-boats? and in making that inquiry I do it because really I am entirely ignorant of what that term implies. If the ten steamships of small draught, recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, are to be included under the head of gun-boats, then perhaps I may agree with him. If not, I would like him to say what he means by the power of these twenty gun-boats. I do not know what they are. I am, as the distinguished Senator from Ohio said some time ago, upon these matters a mere "land lubber," and therefore I should like to know.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will answer with very great pleasure, and state what I mean. I had supposed, though, from the discussion which had already taken place to-day, and from what the Senator from Maryland must have read, that he would not require to be enlightened by one like myself, who am eminently what he is pleased to term a "land lubber." Why, sir, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs told us to-day that some of these British ships were found to be among some of the most effective. Did the Senator state what was the draught of the Styx and Buzzard?

Mr. MALLORY. The Styx is not a gun-boat. She is a side-wheel battle steamer of one thousand two hundred tons.

Mr. CLINGMAN. What vessel was that to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. MALLORY. I stated that the fourth class gun-boats, built by Great Britain, drew five and a half feet of water with twenty horse power, and the third class were of sixty horse power.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to say, I supposed the gentleman had named the draught of some of those ships. He went on to mention those of five and a half and six feet to be effective, some of which were sent off into the China seas.

Mr. MALLORY. Of twelve feet.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We all remember, Mr. President, that Great Britain got up a large fleet of what were commonly called gun-boats, but propelled with steam, and armed with heavy guns, and sent them into the Baltic; and such boats are used by her in all parts of the world. I do not mean, therefore, in adopting that term, a less class of ships than those described by the original amendment from the committee. That amendment provided for two classes, of fourteen and twelve feet draught. I learn, from conversing with gentlemen who are officers of the Navy, that a vessel may be made of seven or eight hundred tons quite formidable in armament, and draw perhaps as much as ten feet of water. Of course, a great deal will depend upon the mode of construction. My purpose, therefore, was to leave the Department to build a class of ships which would not draw perhaps as much as twelve feet. At the same time, I think it advisable not to put in any limit. The Department, perhaps, might select one class of six or seven feet, and another of eight or ten feet. I was willing to leave that, therefore, to the Secretary of the Navy; but inasmuch as we specified two classes of sloops, one of fourteen and the other of twelve feet, I take it for granted that he will select those of an inferior class as to the tonnage, draught of water, and armament. But every Senator at all conversant with the subject knows that ships may be made not to draw more than ten feet of water that could get into all the ports North and South, and be very serviceable, and yet be very formidable in time of war; sufficiently so to capture not only any merchant vessel, but dangerous, when there were several of them, to the largest ships, by being armed with large guns. Half a dozen, or two or three of them, could take positions where they could be very annoying to the most formidable ship, because, by having full steam power, they would be able to get out of the way of a more powerful ship, and afterwards approach her, and take her own distance. That is what I mean by using the term gun-boats.

Mr. KENNEDY. While the answer made by the Senator from North Carolina to my interrogatory has been very full, he does not seem exactly to have comprehended the scope of my inquiry; and I beg to put the interrogatory to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ask him to inform me, if these twenty gun-boats are added, how far, or how much, they would increase the armament of the Navy; and what would be the amount of guns upon each coast?

Mr. MALLORY. The term gun-boat received a signification during the last war, when recommended by Mr. Jefferson. It has received a very large signification, and they have been adopted by Great Britain. The gun-boats contemplated in the last war carried two guns, as a general thing. The gun-boats contemplated by Great Britain, one hundred and eighty-four in four months, for the Crimean war, carried from one to six guns.

Mr. KENNEDY. Of what size?

Mr. MALLORY. Ten inch caliber. Her largest gunboats are eight hundred tons, and two hundred and eighty horse power. They carry two heavy guns, one on the fore-castle, one between the two masts, and four side guns. Her smallest gun-boats are twenty horse power, and of two hundred tons; carry one heavy gun, of ten inch calibre, and, I believe, two side guns. They were designed to have great speed. They are very low in the water, built very long and sharp, with light draught of water, and carrying the heaviest caliber, and from six guns to two.

Mr. KENNEDY. May I ask further, of what draught those are?

Mr. MALLORY. The heaviest gun-boats of Great Britain draw twelve, and the lightest five and a half, feet of water.

Mr. KENNEDY. One question further, if the gentleman will allow me—not with any desire to catechise him or embarrass him, but really for information: is that the precise class suggested by yourself?

Mr. MALLORY. I have suggested none. In relation to this amendment, the Committee on Naval Affairs followed the recommendation of the Navy Department. It is not recommended as a war measure. The question of gun-boats is not presented from the Committee on Naval Affairs; but, if the amendment be adopted, I suppose the Department will follow out the system adopted by Great Britain, and build our gun-boats with reference to hers.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then, I have to say that I am prepared to accept the amendment of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, if it includes guns and vessels of that size and class.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is what it means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MALLORY. Before the amendment passes, I will repeat again that, from the sentiment expressed by the Senate here, I fear we are not prepared to adopt this amendment to the amendment of twenty gun-boats. I would prefer it, if the Senator from North Carolina would put his amendment as a separate measure, distinctly from the amendment now before the Senate. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommended this increase of ten vessels, prescribing the draught for various reasons, one of which was not adverted to, but which is acknowledged on all hands. The American flag is prostituted to the slave trade; that furnishes a pretense to Great Britain, as it did in 1852, to board vessels; and the vessels now proposed to be built, will be the best vessels for the purpose of protecting our own flag from that trade in the Gulf of Mexico. A minimum draught is not provided; they may be built of a lighter draught; but the maximum is provided. We have no vessels suited for that purpose, and that is one of the objects. I should like to limit the amendment reported by the committee to the ten vessels, and ask the Senator to withdraw his, and propose it as a separate section.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I cannot do it. We have heard a great deal said about this being a war measure. I think the best peace measure you can possibly have is to make some preparations for war. I want to be able to vote for the resolutions of the distinguished Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Mason,] if I can; but I cannot vote for those resolutions unless we do something practical. I wish to go much further than he proposes, but I am not willing to make any declarations here that we will resist those aggressions unless we do something. If you get some small increase in the public defense, it will look as if you were in earnest. In England, when they are threatened with a foreign war, they usually increase their defenses; in the United States we are to pass resolutions. I wish to vote for the resolutions of the Senator from Virginia, if I can; but, unless coupled with something practical, I am rather ashamed to do it. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will adopt this proposition. It makes no difference, if it is a good measure, whether it is to go on to the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs or be kept separate. I must remind the Senator from Florida that his colleague on that committee, the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Hammond,] told us that the committee were unanimously for this proposition, with the single exception of the Senator from New Hampshire. If the Committee on Naval Affairs were all for it, except one, and might have reported it, it might just as well go on here as anywhere else; and I hope, therefore, that he will withdraw his opposition and let it be put in.

Mr. MALLORY. I had no opposition to it, but would very much prefer that the proposition should be offered as a separate amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. No one knows better than the Senator from Florida that if I moved the appropriation it would be ruled out of order. Let it go in here: the Department can begin these things, and I have no doubt they will find money enough; or when Congress meets in December, if they have not sufficient, we can make additional appropriations. I hope, therefore, that he will consent to let it go on. If it shall be adopted, and the Senate then reject the amendment as amended, I will move to reconsider, and disentangle them; but I have no doubt if a majority of the Senate vote for my proposition they will pass the whole as amended.

Mr. HALE. I want to say, Mr. President, to let the Senate understand where we are, that I shall propose, with the consent of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, this amendment.

For the engine, machinery, ordnance, and ordnance stores for equipment and fitting for sea of the United States frigate Franklin, $300,000.

If we are going to war, we want some such ships as that instead of gun-boats. I wish the Senate to determine, because if they vote for these gun-boats, they will probably not vote for the Franklin. Having said that, I leave this matter to them.

Mr. WILSON. I want simply to say, Mr. President, that I have listened to-day to this debate, and I think we have made ourselves supremely ridiculous. This talk about preparing ourselves to go to war by constructing ten or twenty little gun-boats, it seems to me is ridiculous, and it is unworthy of the Senate, and of the country.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly; half a dozen.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to ask but one. I understood the Senator the other day to bring forward a proposition advising the President to go and seize those British ships. Does he believe our present means sufficient to do so?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We differ on that point. I will ask the gentleman this further question, for I want to be enlightened. It is stated in the papers, and I suppose truly, that the British have three times the force in the Gulf that we have. Of course, if our ships go there and commence war on the Styx and Buzzard, the other British ships will not stand idly by. Does the Senator believe our ships so excellent, and our men so brave, that we can with confidence rely upon their capturing three times the force that is opposed to them?

Mr. IVERSON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will make an answer to the question which the Senator puts. I heard the Secretary of the Navy say on Saturday that he had sent thirteen national ships into the Gulf, so that the British have not such a disproportion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. But I have seen the statement of those thirteen, and the number of guns they have; and it was stated that they were only one third the British force, and when war begins there, we shall have guns at other points.

Mr. IVERSON. That was the statement before the additional force was sent by the Secretary of the Navy. I apprehend now that our force is quite equal to that of Great Britain.

Mr. WILSON. If the honorable Senator from North Carolina will allow me—who, I am sorry to say, has brought a great deal of the habit of the House of Representatives into the Senate, of cross-questioning—I will go on and state what I wish to say. I suppose we all wish to take these boats. I have made up my mind to vote for the proposition of the committee. I am willing to vote any year for a small annual increase to the naval force of the United States; but this is a proposition to build ten small vessels. I voted for the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire because I thought we had better, in the present condition of the Treasury, vote for five of these vessels, and I would be satisfied with that; but the committee have proposed ten. It is a small force anyhow, and I am willing to vote for it; but I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not vote for it with reference to all to its being a war measure.

I wish to say one thing further. We have heard a great deal to-day about our weakness and the strength of England. We heard this talk before the war of 1812, and the Halls of Congress of those days rang with the charges of our weakness, and our inability to meet that Power. I have none of this feeling whatever. I have no fear of war. We have got guarantees on this continent for peace. There are three thousand square miles of British territory north of us, and three million people. Yes, sir; three thousand square miles north of us, with three million people; and in six months after a war commenced that would be ours, and England knows it.

The Senator from Florida tells us that these boats will be adapted to vindicate our flag; that it has been dishonored beyond all measure by the prostitution of it by pirates in the slave trade. I am going to vote for the proposition of the committee to furnish this Administration, this Federal Government, with ships adapted to vindicate the flag of our country, now prostituted by persons engaged in the slave trade on the coast of Africa, and on the shores of Cuba. When we have given the Administration these ten small sloops, this small power, that the chairman of the committee tells us can be maintained for from fifty to sixty thousand dollars upon the ocean annually, I then want this Administration to do what the honor of the country requires us to do—to see that the flag of the country shall no longer be prostituted to that accursed and inhuman traffic.

Mr. MALLORY. Allow me to offer the Senator information right here. It costs us now to keep a steam frigate afloat $274,000 per annum; and it costs us, to keep a sailing frigate afloat, $195,000 per annum. The difference is in the steam masts. The little Fulton would be about the size of one of these small sloops. We sail her for $57,000 per annum; and the effect of building ten vessels would be to enable us to withdraw from sea some of the large frigates, of which there are six, to withdraw four or five, having substituted smaller at far less expense.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the chairman of the committee for the information he has given us; and I wish to say that, with this information, and for the object of doing what we ought to do, furnish the Government of this country with power, and then command this Government to exercise that power to preserve the flag of the country from prostitution in the slave trade, I shall vote for this measure for that purpose. I go further. Whenever you require men, ships, or money, to defend the flag of the country, whether assailed by England or any other Power, my vote is for it; and I shall not stop to ask whether we are prepared or not, whenever that time comes, for plunging into it, for I know how we shall come out of it. I have no anxiety on that point; but I agree with the remark made to-day by the Senator from Illinois about this hue-and-cry against these outrages in the Gulf, that has been made in the Congress of the United States, and in this country, and which has ended in a proposition that I believe dishonorable to the American character and the American name, that we shall turn from the Power that has insulted us, and authorize the President to make war, if he chooses, on the poor and feeble Republics south of us. I am opposed to that scheme. The very thought of it has dishonored this country more than all the insults our flag has received from the guns of the British in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Massachusetts says the resolutions reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations are dishonorable to the country.

Mr. WILSON. The bill, not the resolutions. Mr. MASON. Then the Senator from Massachusetts says that the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations is dishonorable to the country. The country will understand that the Senator from Massachusetts may have one sense of honor, and the Committee on Foreign Relations a different one. The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations was intended to protect the peace of the country, and at the same time preserve its honor, both in the resolutions that have been proposed and commented upon here, and the bill which is intended for the protection of our interest in the adjacent States of Central America.

Sir, the honor of the country is interested in preserving its peace. War is the resort of barbarism or ruffianism. Peace is the result of civilization and refinement. It is the great end that nations have attained in ages past; and the object, I trust, of that committee, was to preserve the peace of the country while it was protecting its honor. I am not one of those, I confess, (and I had the honor to report those resolutions,) who look upon war as some Senators seem to look upon it here, as the only mode of preserving the honor of the country. There is another mode of preserving our honor than by fighting; that may be the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts. Sir, the honor of this great nation, which, I trust, it will pursue, is in its example, which it will set to the world, to look upon war as the greatest evil that can befall a country next to its degradation before a foreign Power.

I regret to see Senators permit themselves to go to the country, in this debate about peace and war, upon this proposition, not to increase the naval power for any purpose of war, but to increase it for a peace establishment. It is the pleasure of honorable Senators to do so, and to do so although, by formal vote, the Senate refused to consider that very bill which Senators now permit themselves to denounce; for I asked the Senate, on a former day, to take up the bill, that it might be discussed, and the Senate refused to do so. The honorable Senator from Illinois has been pleased, in a very statesmanlike speech, certainly, this morning, to say that it was setting the great example of shunning and evading a war with a great Power, England, and at the same time preparing to go to war with the miserable Republics upon our borders. He said that we are making warlike speeches here, (in which I think the honorable Senator set the example, or has followed the example,) in one breath, and in the next making a miserable and puny declaration that, if England insults us, a war with Mexico must be the consequence—a statesmanlike view of the subject, I dare say, in the opinion which that honorable Senator may entertain of the manner in which the honor of his country is to be preserved.

Mr. President, there are two propositions before the Senate that came from the Committee on Foreign Relations, both intended to protect the honor of the country; the one, not making war upon England because there is no cause for it—none, none; yet—what may happen, we do not know—one expressive of the sense of the Senate, that the country will expect the result of the discussion, now pending between this Government and England, to put an end forever to that question; and declaring, as the sense of the Senate, if an end is not put to it, that Congress will give the President power to put an end to it. Now, I am not at all aware that the honor of the country, more than the honor of a gentleman, is involved in at once considering, on every occasion, that he must fight, set an example to the world of a breach of the peace in the relations of society, without giving an opportunity to the adverse party, as was said upon this floor the other day, either to avow or disclaim. I am not aware that the honor of the country is involved in that course. If it is, I confess I am not one of those to espouse the honor of the country at such a cost—a cost, not of money alone, but of moral example and character in the world.

The other is not a war measure in any sense of the word any more than an order to one of our majors general to take a part of the Army and protect the frontier from Indian depredations—not one bit more; but entertaining, as I endeavor to do, all proper respect for the Republics on our borders in Central America, or in Mexico, I cannot be unconscious—their own experience shows it—that, for some reason or other, which others may be more competent to explain, they are utterly incapable of self-government. Nearly two generations have passed since 1824, when they threw off what they called the yoke of Spain. What has been their condition ever since? Utterly unable to maintain government at home; utterly unable to protect the lives and fortunes of their countrymen at home; and utterly unable to protect the lives and the fortunes of persons who go there. That is their condition.

I say, therefore, that this bill which has been introduced is not for making a war upon those Republics, but for doing for them what they are incompetent to do for themselves, as far as we are concerned, protecting our people and commerce—nothing more. I submit, then, to the honorable Senator from Illinois, that when he seeks to throw this reproach or stigma, whichever it may be, upon the policy which those resolutions indicate, or upon those who introduced them, as a purpose to avenge ourselves upon England by a war upon Mexico, it is not altogether the mode of treating a subject of such serious character before the Senate. Sir, I will tell the honorable Senator, if the day should come, or the necessity should arise when we should prepare ourselves for a war against England, I presume he will find no Senator on this floor behind him in that preparation, or in the action that may follow it, and yet we make no boast of it.

He instanced the case in 1839, upon which he has modeled a bill to supersede that reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations. What was the case there? The case was this: there was a part of the territory of Maine in dispute between Maine and New Brunswick, and, by a general assent not expressed by convention, it was agreed, as we understood, that, until the actual condition of that disputed territory should be arranged between the two Powers, England and the United States, matters should remain in statu quo; neither party should assume or exercise greater jurisdiction than it had, up to that time, assumed or exercised. A British force was marched into the territory and seized three citizens of Maine, two of them officers of the State government of Maine, and carried them as prisoners of war into New Brunswick; and when their release was demanded, upon the part of the State of Maine, before the Federal Government intervened at all, the answer given by the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, who was major general of the army, and who commanded the whole force, was, that those men were accused of offenses higher than the ordinary grade of municipal offenses; that they were considered by the law of England as State offenders; and that he could not release them until he had orders from England to do it. Maine then took measures, like a gallant State, as she is, to march an army into the disputed territory. She sent there six or seven hundred men, and was increasing them every day, when she received an admonition, from the same Lieutenant Governor and major general, that unless that army was immediately removed, his orders from his Government were peremptory to remove it by force, and take possession of the territory. That was the condition of things under which this law passed. Congress was about to adjourn. It was at the short session, the end of February, and Congress passed a law, without a dissenting voice in the Senate, and but six in the House of Rep-representatives, placing the Army and Navy, with $10,000,000, at the disposal of the President, to protect American citizens upon the territory in dispute, which we claimed.

The honorable Senator says that the same case has arisen now. Why, sir, if he is right, we would never have a collision upon the sea, you would never have any unexplained cause from any quarter, that the honorable Senator would not advise the whole public force of the country to be placed in the control and at the discretion of the President, with the Treasury to back him. If that is his reasoning, I regret very much to say, with the entire respect which I entertain for him, I hope he will have very few followers. He would jeopard the peace and jeopard the honor of the country with him. Not an accidental collision might arise at sea or elsewhere with any foreign Power, before it was explained, that he would not place at the discretion of the President, the war-making power, with the Army and Navy to back him. I say, if that is the policy of the honorable Senator, I trust he will find very few who will follow him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I concur entirely with the Senator from Virginia in the reasons he has given for the necessity of applying the provisions of the bill which he has reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, as a substitute for one I introduced, to Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and New Granada; but I do not perceive the necessity of limiting the application to those countries, and not extending it beyond them. If his objection be true that my proposition was to confer a war-making power upon the President, then, by applying the whole power of these provisions to Mexico, and the other three countries, he confers a war-making power to that extent. I suppose, if it is a violation of principle to give the President a war-making power as applied to one country, it is no more so to give it to him generally. The objection I had to his provision was this: I had introduced a bill to authorize the President, in cases of flagrant violations of the law of nations, under circumstances admitting of no delay, to repel and punish the aggression. The Senator from Virginia takes the provisions of that bill and indorses them as to four feeble, crippled Powers, and omits the very country that is now committing outrages upon our flag and our shipping. I had introduced a bill, general in its provisions, applicable to England, France, Spain, Mexico, Central America, South America—everywhere where there were flagrant violations upon our flag, under circumstances admitting of no delay.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. MASON. Has the Senator remarked the difference between the causes of quarrel existing between Great Britain and the United States and those existing between these Republics of Central America and Mexico, and the United States? Great Britain has certainly committed, or those in command of her armed vessels have committed, high offenses against this country. But we are utterly uninformed whether those are avowed or disavowed, whether reparation will be extended or refused on the part of that Government. The matter is open for explanation and renunciation. That is our position with England. What is our relation with Mexico? What is our relation with Nicaragua, and those States in that neighborhood? Our people are taken by the Government forces within the territory of Mexico and imprisoned, and are imprisoned at this hour? At Tampico, one of her sea-ports, from the decrepitude of the Government it is unable to protect our people when they go there. They have been seized and imprisoned within the last sixty days, and stripped of their property, which has been confiscated with a knowledge that the Government of Mexico is too feeble to extend redress. I say the measure reported by the committee is not to make war upon Mexico. It is only to do for Mexico what Mexico is bound to do herself. That is the whole of it. I submit to the honorable Senator, as I cheerfully submit to the country, whether the one bill is not properly authorized in morals towards those Governments of Central America and Mexico, when, if it were done in like manner toward England for the purpose of plunging us into war, it would be an offense unpardonable in the legislative power? Such is my judgment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I repeat that I agree with the Senator from Virginia that there was abundant cause for the application of the power which I proposed to confer, with reference to Mexico, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and New Granada. I agree, also, that the conferring of that power was not a war power, but a peace measure. The Senator does not consider it a war power; I do not consider it a war power. If it is not a war power with reference to them, it is not a war power when applied to other countries. Hence the very fact that he acknowledges that it is not a war power when applied to the countries to which he proposes to apply it, is an admission that it would not be a war power if it were made applicable to England, unless we are to understand that we are to apply one rule to a weak Power, and another to a strong Power. I do not understand that to be the rule. The measure that I have proposed with reference to these difficulties has been a measure of peace. I intended the one which I brought forward, for which the Senator from Virginia has introduced a substitute, adopting the same measure, but limiting its application, as a peace measure. It ought to exist in time of peace. It only confers on the President of the United States, outside of the limits of the Republic, that power which the Chief Magistrate of every other nation does already possess; it is only putting our Executive, in the vindication of the rights of American citizens abroad, on an equality with the Chief Magistrate of every other nation on earth. If it is not a dangerous power in the hands of all the Kings, all the Prime Ministers, all the Presidents of Republics outside of the United States, I apprehend that it cannot be deemed a very dangerous one to be exercised by the President of the United States on other people, and not upon our own citizens abroad.

Then, sir, what is the point of complaint? The point at issue is, that Great Britain is searching our vessels. The Committee on Foreign Relations agreed unanimously that she had no right to do it; that the practice of the right of search was a belligerent right; that it was an invasion of our sovereign rights; that we could never submit to it, and would never submit to it. Having resolved that far, the committee being unanimous to that extent, there was a difference of opinion as to how much further we should go. One side resolved that we will not submit to it; the other side so resolved, with a provision that, if it should be done again, we would repel it. That is all there is in the case. If it is right to resolve not to submit to it, it is a point of honor to repel the aggression when it is repeated. I ask if we are not disgraced as a nation; if, after resolving that it is a belligerent act, that it is an infraction of our sovereignty, that we will never submit to it, we then refuse to authorize the President to repel the insult if it be repeated. That is the whole point. I desire, instead of bringing forward a substitute for the Senator's resolutions, to give the President power and authority to carry out the assertion which the Senator from Virginia, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has made.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to ask where it is declared, either by the committee or the Senate, to be a belligerent act?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The report of the Committee on Foreign Relations so declares it, I think.

Mr. COLLAMER. That report has been presented to the Senate, but it has never been acted upon as yet. I wish to ask the Senator one more question; whether he regards the word "belligerent" as applying to a nation, and whether a belligerent act is a national act? If this is a belligerent act, and is a national act, we should declare war.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It does not follow that for every belligerent act we shall declare war. The Senator from Virginia, in his report, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, quoted Chief Justice Marshall to show that the practice of the right of search was a belligerent act. All belligerent acts do not necessarily produce war. You may repel them, you may grant letters of marque and reprisal—there are various remedies short of war for repelling and redressing belligerent acts. It does not follow, by any means, when one nation perpetrates a violation of right against another, which, of itself, is a belligerent act, that war is the inevitable consequence, any more than it follows, when one gentleman says something offensive to another, that a peremptory challenge is a necessary result. A demand for explanation may be necessary. There are pre-ludes to a declaration. So it is between nations. There may be a belligerent act performed. It leads to negotiation, to remonstrance. When these means fail, then the question comes, whether our rights or our honor are involved to such an extent as to make it imperative to go to war as a final resort? If this violation of the freedom of the seas were a new thing; if the assertion of the right to search American vessels were now made for the first or even the second time, we might not, although treating it as a belligerent act, deem it necessary to go to war. But when the question has gone through half a century of dispute; when it has reached such a point that we refuse to discuss the question of right any further; when we have asserted that the argument is exhausted, and that the only thing left is to resort to resistance if it be persevered in any further; it will not do for us, in the face of these outrages repeated each day, to be silent with regard to them, and proceed to legislate for the punishment of Mexico, Nicaragua, and other weak and feeble Powers at a distance. The bill reported by the Senator from Virginia would be right if it were brought forward at a time when the aggravation came from those countries, and not from England. I will vote for it. But to pass that by itself, and remain silent with regard to these British outrages, is to confess to the world that we are afraid of Great Britain, but we will maintain our courage by punishing some smaller, feebler, weaker Power. I do not bring forward the proposition to revive the act of the 3d of March, 1839, as a substitute for the bill reported by the Senator from Virginia, as he imagines. On the contrary, the two bills ought to go together. The one which I bring forward is applicable to England, and to her alone. It covers the present quarrel between us and England; not as a war measure, but as a peace measure. The only change that I make between that act as I bring it forward now, and as it was in the shape in which it originally passed, is to strike out the words "territory in dispute," and insert "the claim of the right of search." Then the two cases are parallel, and the provision is as applicable to one as it is to the other.

Sir, there was one member of this body, who, when the measure was brought in, in 1839, was disposed to treat it as an act of war, until the great minds of the Senate, the patriots of that day, came forward and said: no, Great Britain is performing a belligerent act; we must resist it at all hazards; if she perseveres in the wrong, then the consequences be on her head for having persevered in the wrong. Hence, you find that Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Buchanan, and the leaders of the Senate of all parties of that day, united with entire unanimity in conferring upon President Van Buren the power to resist it. One man only hesitated. A distinguished and respected Senator from New Jersey made the very point that is now being made, as to its being an act of war; but a distinguished Senator from Mississippi appealed to him, after a preliminary vote had been taken, and it was ascertained that the Senate were unanimous with one exception, not to persevere in his opposition, but allow the Senate to stand unanimous in the assertion of a principle upon which all agreed; and Mr. Southard, in deference to the opinion of the remainder of the Senate, waived his objections, and allowed the bill to pass by a unanimous vote. Sir, did it turn out to be a measure of war then? On the contrary, it resulted in peace, and you were saved from a war with Great Britain on the northeastern boundary question, by the unanimity of Congress, at that time, in preparing to repel the assault. The vote in the Senate was unanimous, and in the House of Representatives it was 197 against 6. This unanimity among the American people, as manifested by their representatives, saved the two countries from war, and preserved peace between England and the United States upon that question. If the Senate had been nearly equally divided in 1839; if there had been but half a dozen majority for the passage of that measure; if the vote had been nearly divided in the House of Representatives, England would have taken courage from the divisions in our own councils; she would have pressed her claim to a point that would have been utterly inadmissible, and incompatible with our honor, and war would have been the inevitable consequence.

I tell you, sir, the true peace measure is that which resents the insult and redresses the wrong promptly upon the spot with a unanimity that shows the nation cannot be divided. Unanimity now, prompt action, and determined resistance to this claim of the right of search is the best peace measure, and the only peace measure to which you can resort. You have said that this nation will not submit to the right of search; every department of this Government has repeated it, all political parties unite in the sentiment; there is one point on which the American people are united, and on which they have stood for half a century. It is violated now. The question is, whether we shall present the same unanimity in resistance that we do in denying the right to commit the outrage. Unanimity on our part, unanimity in our councils, firm resolve, but kind and respectful words will preserve peace. Sir, I desire peace. I would lament a war with England, or with any other Power, as much as any other man in the Senate. Nor do I think that my constituents desire war, but I believe that the true way to prevent it is to be prepared to resist aggression the moment it is made. What is the argument we hear used to-day? The Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMMOND,] who knows that I have for him the highest respect, portrays to us our weak, feeble, and defenseless condition; our thousands of miles of coast; our small Navy; our limited resources; to show that we are not ready for a war now. Sir, let Great Britain believe that picture, and she will be ready now for a war with us.

Mr. HAMMOND. I did not speak about war to-day. The measure proposed by the Naval Committee was one recommended before this speck of war arose upon the horizon, and it was a necessary peace measure. Six out of the seven members of the Naval Committee thought that as a peace measure we should construct double the amount of vessels that it is proposed to build; but I studiously avoided bringing in this question of war in portraying our resources to-day. I stated distinctly that if I was advocating this measure as a war measure, I should think it a very meager one; and I regret that this debate, which is on a necessary peace measure, has extended into the question of war, which would be much more appropriate on two or three measures that are to come up. I would be glad if Senators would avoid the question of war with England, and let us take a vote upon this measure, which, whether we have war or peace, in my opinion, should pass.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very grateful to the Senator from South Carolina for the correction that he has made. I would not misrepresent him, and I am sorry to have misapprehended him. I only say that I concur fully with him that the measure which he advocated is a wise and judicious one as a peace measure; but I think the necessity for it is more imperative in consequence of the little specks of war that we see upon the horizon. I have reason to suppose so from the fact that no Senator can rise to discuss it without referring to the possibility or probability of war with England. But, sir, I cannot join with him in the expression of surprise or regret that the discussion of the possibilities of war or of collision with England should have grown up upon the discussion of this measure. He says it will all be repeated again. Very true; but if the Senators who have alluded to the English question had let it come up first, as the Senator from Virginia himself knows I desired to have it, and had let it be decided, then when the Navy bill came up we should know whether it was necessary to make provision in the Navy bill for the contingencies that might be presented by this English difficulty. If we could have been allowed to have taken up that question, and discussed the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the bill that I introduced, for which the committee reported theirs as a substitute, and the subsequent bill that I introduced, or agreed upon any measure to authorize the President to resist the British pretension of a right of search or visitation; then the Senate, with entire unanimity, would have joined in the support of whatever was necessary to carry it out; then the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs would have met with no opposition; Senators who oppose it now would have supported it then. I desired that question to come up first. I think we ought to lay aside the Navy bill now; we ought to refuse to take up the Army bill until we decide whether or not we are going to sustain the President in resisting this practice of the right of search. If we are going to sustain him on that point, we must give him the means, trust him, rally around him, strengthen his hands, support him in protecting our flag, and maintaining the honor of the country. If, on the contrary, we are not to do that, let us say no more about British aggressions, no more about the right of search, no more in regard to her shooting across the bows of our vessels. Let us be silent on all these points, and recognize them as right, unless we are going to resist them; and if we are to resist them, now is the time. Present unanimity now, a unanimous vote, as you did in 1839, give the means to the President, and you will have no more war, and no repetition of the right of search. Our divisions are the only encouragement that Great Britain has. Our vacillation, our hesitation, our nervousness about the defenseless condition of our coasts and of our cities, are the sources of encouragement to England.

Sir, I repel the idea that the American coast is so defenseless as represented. I have passed round a great portion of the British coast, and I undertake to assert that the American coast is in a better condition of defense than that of Great Britain. New York is better defended than Liverpool or London to-day. It is easier for a fleet to enter the harbor of Liverpool or London than New York. There are not as many obstacles in the way in the British cities as in the American. It is possible that a steam fleet might run by the fortifications into either. It is not probable that it would ever escape from there if it did; but it is possible that it might effect its escape. But, sir, I do not believe that our coast is more exposed than hers, and I do not believe our commerce is more exposed than hers. I do not believe England is any better prepared for war with us than we are with her. If she has a larger navy, she has a more exposed interest to protect by that navy. She has her troubles in India; she has them at the Cape; she has them all over the world; and her navy is divided, and her army divided to protect them in those detached places on every continent, and every island of the globe. Sir, the extent of her power spreading all around the globe is one of the greatest sources of her weakness; and the other fact that she is a commercial nation, and we are an agricultural people, shows that she may be ruined, and her citizens starved, while we, although at war abroad, are happy and prosperous at home.

Besides, sir, as has been intimated by the Senator from Massachusetts, England has given pledges for her good behavior on this continent. She is bound over to keep the peace. She has large possessions upon this continent, of which she could be deprived in ninety days after war existed, and she knows the moment that she engages in war with us that moment her power upon the American continent, and upon the adjacent islands ceases to exist. While I am opposed to war; while I have no idea of any breach of the peace with England, yet, I confess to you, sir, if war should come by her act, and not ours; by her invasion of our rights, and our vindication of the same; I would administer to every citizen and every child Hannibal's oath of eternal hostility as long as the English flag waved, or their Government claimed a foot of land upon the American continent, or the adjacent islands. Sir, I would make it a war that would settle our disputes forever, not only of the right of search upon the seas, but the right to tread with a hostile foot upon the soil of the American continent or its appendages. England sees that these consequences would result. Her statesmen understand these results as well as we, and much better. Her statesmen have more respect for us in this particular than we have for ourselves. They will never push this question to the point of war. They will look you in the eye, march to you steadily, as long as they find it is prudent. If you cast the eye down, she will rush upon you. If you look her in the eye steadily, she will shake hands with you as friends, and have respect for you.

Mr. HAMMOND. Suppose she does not?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Suppose she does not, my friend from South Carolina asks me. If she does not, then we will appeal to the God of battles; we will arouse the patriotism of the American nation; we will blot out all distinctions of party; and the voice of faction will be hushed; the American people will be a unit; none but the voice of patriotism will be heard; and from the North and the South, from the East and the West, we will come up as a band of brothers, animated by a common spirit and a common patriotism, as were our fathers of the Revolution, to repel the foreign enemy, and afterwards differ as we please, and discuss at our leisure matters of domestic dispute. Sir, I am willing to suppose the case which is suggested by the Senator from South Carolina. Suppose England does not respect our rights, to fight her now—

Mr. HAMMOND. I said, suppose England would not submit to be bullied.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Who proposes to bully England?

Mr. HAMMOND. I understood the Senator to say that if we looked down she would rush on us; but if we looked up she would give way. I consider that bullying.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Precisely; that is the case of a bully, always. He will fix his eye on his antagonist, and see if it is steady. If it is not, he will approach a little nearer. If it is, he stops; but if his eye sinks, he rushes on him; and that is the parallel in which I put England, playing the bully with us. The question is, whether we will look her steadily in the eye and maintain our rights against her aggressions? We do not wish to bully England. She is resisting no claim of ours. She sets up the claim to search our vessels, stop them on the high seas, invade our rights, and we say to her that we will not submit to that aggression. I would ask to have the United States act upon the defensive in all things, make no threat, indulge in no bullying, but simply assert our right, then maintain the assertion with whatever power may be necessary and the God of our fathers may have imparted to us for maintaining it, that is all. I believe that is the true course to peace. I repeat, that if war with England comes, it will result from our vacillation, our division, our hesitation, our apprehensions lest we might be whipped in the fight. Perhaps we might. I do not believe it. I believe the moment England declares war against the United States, the prestige of her power is gone. It will unite our own people; it will give us the sympathy of the world; it will destroy her commerce and her manufactures, while it will extend our own. It will sink her to a second-rate Power upon the face of the globe, and leave us without a rival who can dispute our supremacy. We shall, however, come to that point early, through the paths of peace. Such is the tendency of things now. I would rather approach it by peaceable, quiet means, by the arts and sciences, by agriculture, by commerce, by immigration, by natural growth and expansion, than by warfare. But, if England is impatient of our rising power, if she desires to hasten it, and should force war upon us, she will seal her doom now, whereas, Providence might extend to her, if not a pardon, at least a reprieve for a few short years to come.

I repeat, again, that I am for peace, and not for war. I have proposed no proposition except with a view to peace. I believe that the power I desire to intrust in the hands of the President is advisable, and necessary for peace, and the friends of peace should rally, as a unit, and give him that power. I am willing to trust him with the very power, in the precise terms, and for the same object for which he and his compatriots, in 1839, intrusted it to President Van Buren.

Mr. HAMMOND. I regret very much the turn this debate has taken. There are two or three propositions before the Senate to which it would have been more appropriate. The question now, however, is not war or peace with England, but the voting of a small increase of our Navy, required for our peace establishment. When the question of war comes up, Senators can express their views upon it directly. I will only say, for myself, as I have said before, that while I do not wish to have any part in provoking a war, while

I feel we have just cause for war, unless what has been done be satisfactorily accounted for, I do not think the proper way to make war is by violent speeches or gassy resolutions. I am not willing to take one step towards a war that I would ever retreat from. I will vote for no gasconading resolutions, and support no war speeches, to alarm so great a nation as England, or to alarm anybody. I think the weakest, and silliest, and the most unsuccessful calculation in the world is to count upon alarming or bullying your antagonist. Sir, I will not move an inch in that direction; but, so far as I go, and so far, I hope, as Congress goes, we will maintain our position to the last, and will go no further, in speech or in measure, than we intend to risk all upon; but at this moment the question is upon these ships, and I hope Senators will confine themselves to that question, and avoid the discussion upon war, and take the vote at once on the pending question. It is late. We can settle the whole matter in twenty minutes; and when the bill of the Senator from Illinois, or the resolutions of the Committee on Foreign Relations, come up, we can then repeat, as will be repeated, all the speeches upon the war business.

Mr. GREEN. I wish to give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment, and I wish to present it now, so as to indicate to the Senate questions that may come up which may influence the vote on the pending question. I think it proper to notify Senators in advance of these other questions, and I do not say this to consume any time, for I am as much opposed to the consumption of time as anybody else. My amendment is:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That if, after the flagrant commission of outrages on our citizens by other Powers, the President deem it necessary and important for the protection of our citizens, rights, and commerce, or for speedy redress of such wrongs, he shall be authorized and empowered to grant and issue letters of marque and reprisal to American vessels, to continue until the meeting of Congress next thereafter; and he shall then inform Congress of all the facts that induced his action in that regard.

I give notice of that for this reason: we are now considering the subject of the increase of the Navy. The great strength, the great power of the marine of the United States, consists in the merchant marine. It is for their protection that we have a Navy, and also for the vindication of our own honor. That merchant marine in four weeks can have an armament upon it, which in force and efficiency will make it an overmatch for any Power on the globe. But while I know that to be true, I would not have the President invested with a dangerous power, and hence I have thrown guards around it. In the language of this section, it must be a case of flagrant wrong, it must be upon the commerce of the United States, it must not be internal to the nation, it must be foreign in its character, it must be imminent in its nature, and redress must be required for the protection of rights. If in such a case we should not have Navy enough, and power afloat sufficient to protect your constituents and mine, who have rights and lives floating upon the ocean, the great highway of nations, and we can by the issuance of letters of marque and reprisal, command sufficient force to effectuate this great end, I desire to give the President the power. It is a power of protection, a power of defense, a power for the benefit of all. And yet, lest there might be danger of an abuse of the power, this section says it shall only continue until the next meeting of Congress, leaving it for Congress then to continue it or not, and requiring the President then to communicate to Congress all the reasons that induced him to issue those letters of marque and reprisal.

I ask you, sir; I ask Senators; and I ask the country, where is the difference between war conducted by privateers and war conducted by national naval vessels? If your President can command them in the one case, is there not as much danger in it as if he commanded them in the other? At the great congress of nations at Paris, when Russia and France and England undertook to settle great questions affecting the diplomatic relations of the world, it was proposed that all should relinquish the right of privateering; but we had a Secretary of State who had the ability, the manliness, the intellect, the patriotism, and the power to oppose and defeat it; for our power consists in the merchant marine.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move that the Senate adjourn

Mr. GREEN. I have not got through.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thought you had done.

Mr. GREEN. I am not half done. As Paul Jones said, when he was asked to surrender, "I have just commenced to fight."

Mr. KENNEDY. If the Senator from Missouri has just begun the fight, as it is now half past six o'clock, I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. GREEN. I cannot yield to an adjournment.

Mr. KENNEDY. We shall have to have gas light presently.

Mr. GREEN. I have no gas to expend, and I have but a few words more to say.

Mr. POLK. With the permission of my colleague, I wish to say a word in this connection. Before the Senate adjourns, I desire to have an executive session for the purpose of making a motion, of which I gave notice on Saturday in executive session.

Mr. GREEN and Mr. STUART. That is not necessary.

Mr. POLK. The time does not expire except in executive session.

Mr. GREEN and others. That is understood.

Mr. POLK. Then I shall take that to be the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Is it in order to move an adjournment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not unless the Senator from Missouri yields the floor.

Mr. GREEN. I cannot yield it; because I desire to have the bill disposed of to-night, and I did not take the floor to consume time; but I really think that, if we need an additional naval force, to be at the command of the President whenever an extreme necessity may arise, the single section I have drawn up will afford all that service to him without any of these extraordinary expenses, and be more effective. I propose to authorize him to grant letters of marque and reprisal whenever the occasion may justify it, leaving him responsible for the exercise of the power, and making it his duty to report his action to Congress at the next session. I shall not go into this war question. I take it for granted that we are all alike. We may differ about terms and phraseology; but we are one people; we are united; and when the time comes, we shall stand together, "terrible as an army with banners."

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KENNEDY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to make a few remarks in reply to the speech of the Senator from Illinois, who argued with much zeal for unanimity in the country, unanimity in Congress, unanimity in the Senate. If he would wait until he got an answer from England, he would probably have unanimity. If England avows that she asserts the right to search American vessels on the high seas, that Senator will not alone be foremost amongst those who are ready to vindicate our flag. If on the other hand England should declare that her officers had acted without her orders, and should abandon the right to search American vessels on the high seas, what becomes of the Senator's war speech? Brutum fulmen. There are two parties to which I never have belonged and never intend to belong—the war party in peace, and the peace party in war. I have no idea of proclaiming war when the world is covered with peace, peace to us and all of ours. I have no idea of getting up a war fever in the country for the mere purpose of declamation in the Senate.

But the Senator from Illinois, with a view to encourage us to unanimity, assures us that if we will only stand firm and will not show that we are going to back out, England will back out. The bold words of the Senator sufficiently convince us that he is not alarmed. Then why does he assume that others are? I know not anybody that is scared, and some like myself believe there is not a great deal of danger.

But, sir, what is the proposition on which the Senator makes his war speech, invoking us to prepare for war as the best means of preserving peace? Twenty gun-boats—twenty little gun-boats, to go and take the police of the high seas, and compel England to abandon her pretensions on blue water—little things, that hardly dare to go out of sight of land; useful, perhaps, for some purposes of sea-coast and harbor defense, and for all that inner navigation in which our country is so rich, whether in Puget Sound or the inner channel between Mobile and New Orleans, or from the St. John's river up to the Savannah, or at other places—very useful, and readily built. I am not disposed, in a remote contingency of a war, to build vessels, in order that they may decay and become useless before they are needed. The number we require for the police of the seas in peace I am willing to keep; for the rest, I prefer to make preparations which will enable us, on short notice, to put the country on a war footing, so far as its Navy is concerned. I prefer to make engines rather than vessels, to collect timber rather than to put it together. Green timber made ships with which some of the most glorious battles of the war of 1812 were fought. Since then the steam marine has, to a great extent, taken the place of the sailing marine; and steamships now constitute the best preparation we can make for war. Steamships, guns, shot, shells, powder—these are what we want.

The Senator refers to the specks of war in the horizon. Reared in a climate which approaches the tropical, I have been too accustomed to flying clouds to find in each the portent of a storm. It is not every little collision that may occur on the high seas which means war between two Powers tied together by their commercial relations to such an extent that neither Government can desire war with the other. It may be that we may drift into a war with England, without either Government intending it; it may be that indignities may be offered which cannot be sufficiently atoned for by apology, and may require blood to be shed between these two great Powers. When it comes, it will be the war of the giants; and if the mountains are not upheaved from the seas, the face of the ocean will be furrowed all over. Are twenty gun-boats to carry on a war like that?—twenty little gun-boats to war on the great navy of Great Britain. I am sure the Senator who moves this amendment cannot have looked upon it as a war measure. I am sure no Senator who hears me can consider it anything else than a little means for keeping the police of our coast, and, in the event of war, guarding our inner channels of navigation, and our harbors that cannot be approached by greater vessels.

I love the flag of my country too well to trust its honor to a little gun-boat. When I send a vessel upon the high seas, there to maintain the honor and the name of the United States, I would send her with the tonnage and the metal to confront any enemy, and to maintain her position without fear of disgrace. These poor little things, if they ever ventured to brave the elements, would sink to the fathomless depths of the sea, if a single shell by a direct fire were dropped upon their deck from the upper tier of an armed vessel. There were three wise men of Gotham that went to sea in a bowl, and if that mighty army of militia that the Senator proposes to raise were to be sent to sea in these gun-boats, I fancy he would find the descendants of those three wise Gothamites, and nobody else, would go in gun-boats to the sea.

As to the state of preparation of our country, it is not complete, and never will be. I hope we shall never maintain in peace a navy large enough for the purposes of war; and I hope we never shall in peace maintain an army large enough for the purposes of war. Our fortifications are not so poor as have been described; and even in their present unfinished condition, they might defy any fleet that could be sent across the Atlantic to come into the harbor of New York. The anchorage might be commanded; the port might be blockaded; but the city could not be taken. If an enemy's fleet should attempt to enter the harbor of Charleston, Fort Sumpter, with her threatening brow now mounted with many guns, will form a very different defense from the little old fort of Moultrie that tried the courage of the British fleet on a former occasion. Moultrie was on an inner navigation; Sumpter stands out in the water, bristling on every side like a hedgehog; and woe be to the fleet that attempts to sail under her guns; such, at least, is my conviction. And Boston harbor, too, since she has been threatened, has probably the strongest work ever erected on this continent, and the armament of which may be placed in at any time; and woe be to the fleet that attempts that harbor. We have gone on, not very rapidly, it is true, but steadily, in the increase of the guns that constitute the armament of the fortifications, as well as field defenses, in the manufacture of small arms, in the collection of material, the manufacture of powder, of shot, and of shell; and we may well say the country was never before in so good a state to go to war as now, whether we look at it in relation to our military preparation, in relation to our population and the vast resources of the country; or whether we look at it in the mere aspect of the fortifications that have been erected to guard our important cities and harbors. I do not see that anybody ought to be scared. I think the Senator's speech was a little out of place. The people are not scared. Moreover, I think they are in no danger; and, if they were convinced that they were threatened by a bully who would only attack them in the belief that they might be intimidated, I do not believe there is such danger from assaults of that kind as would make even weak nerves to quail. At the beginning of a war we should suffer reverses; our commerce would almost be swept from the sea, for our Navy is not large enough to protect it.

But the Senator's gun-boats were to be used in catching merchantmen of the enemy. What would the merchantmen of the enemy come into our ports for in time of war? It is the last place into which they would go then; and, as his gun-boats could not leave the coast, the enemy's commerce would be rather free from their attacks. I am not, myself, much disposed to vote for gun-boats. They brought the great intellect, known as the apostle of Democracy, into contempt; and, though they may be improved, though they may be made larger, though they may be made steam-propellers, though they may put on heavier guns, still they are miserable things for any purpose except the defense of such harbors of shallow draught as cannot be attacked by an enemy's fleet. Where a bar presents an obstacle to sea-going vessels, the gun-boats would be very effective against launches that might be sent from the fleet. These are the exceptional cases. Small iron steamers, plying along our inner lines of navigation, we shall want in time of war. If we have engines and material collected beforehand, in less time than Perry's fleet was built we can put them together and have this little iron marine plying on our inner lines of navigation. I do not look on it, therefore, as necessary to prepare for war; neither have I any disposition to build vessels that we may send them to the China seas. Our policy is continental, domestic. We have no colonies, and we want none. We have no purpose to force our commerce on any people. We invite their commerce to us, and are ready to exchange with them. Having no such purpose, I know of no use we can have for a steamer in the China seas. The small vessels which have been referred to, may answer very well in the Chinese and some other seas into which Great Britain sends a navy, but they would not answer along the Atlantic coast. That rock-bound coast and stormy sea would never suit vessels of such shallow draught. We should be preparing the way to the wreck of our own vessels and the loss of our own seamen, and, if such be the purpose, I am opposed to it. I am opposed to putting them outside the coast of Virginia, or North Carolina, or anywhere north of that. I rose, however, rather to reply to those remarks of the Senator from Illinois which seemed to be of a war character; and my great object was to say, that I shall be for war when we get an answer from Great Britain that justifies it, and I am not for war when I expect that we shall have no occasion for anything but peace.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Mississippi seems to be under a strange misapprehension. He speaks of my having made a war speech. Why, sir, I did not introduce the subject. Various Senators treated these measures as war measures and discussed the question of war before I uttered a word. The remarks I made, to which the Senator from Mississippi alludes, were principally in reply to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason]—not upon the measure proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Cline] for the gun-boats, but in reply to the topics brought into debate by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will pardon me. It was not his last speech only that I heard, for I pay so much attention to him that I recollect more than one speech of his. He spoke before to-day; and I thought his proposition was to have fifty gun-boats to catch the commerce that came into our ports.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am gratified to find that the Senator from Mississippi pays so much attention to the speeches that I make. I have no doubt he will profit by them; and, as I am in the habit of paying attention to his, I have no doubt that is the reason we are both so well informed on all subjects that come up in the body. [Laughter.]

As to my proposition for fifty gun-boats instead of twenty, I have only to say that I prefer the larger number; and with all the respect I have for the Senator from Mississippi and his superior knowledge on all matters of military defense, I must be permitted to entertain doubts whether he is correct in this particular. As to the usefulness of those vessels called gun-boats, the experience of the last few years shows that a gun-boat can wander from the Carolina coast, and can venture to sea. England constructed immense numbers of them expressly for the Black sea and the Baltic during the Russian war; and she used them with great effect. She used them in the Gulf of Finland and at Sweaborg. They were built expressly for that service, and had to go three thousand miles to get to the Black sea, and nearly two thousand to get into the Gulf of Finland. England has sent them to the West Indies; and the very outrages of which we now complain are being perpetrated by gun-boats. The Forward, that seized our vessels five hundred miles east of the Island of Cuba, on the high seas, is a gun-boat. The Buzzard, that seized our vessels one thousand miles from Cuba, off in the Atlantic ocean, is a gun-boat. All the vessels England is using now, for the annoyance of our commerce, are gun-boats—that very despised little craft which the Senator from Mississippi thinks will never venture out from shore. I think that if a gun-boat is powerful enough to stop our merchantmen on the high seas, search them, and take them into port, or do what she pleases with them, such vessels will be efficient enough in time of war for us to annoy the enemy's commerce with. I think daily experience proves that these gun-boats are efficient not only in the defense of harbors, in running into the mouths of rivers and shallow bays, but in annoying the enemy's commerce, as they are being used by England for that very purpose at this time. But, Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS. Before the Senator leaves that point, I wish to correct what I think is a misapprehension on his part. The small vessels of which he speaks are not all gun-boats: some of them are, and these are just hugging the shores of Cuba, where they have coal depots to supply them as they get out. As the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said this morning, we have nowhere on the face of the globe a coal depot; therefore we cannot send them out.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am surprised again at my friend from Mississippi. He has not paid that attention to the transactions in the Gulf and the West Indies that he usually does to such matters. It so happens that the only one of the vessels of Great Britain that have been perpetrating these outrages on our commerce, which has hovered around the coast of Cuba, is not a gun-boat, but a small side-wheel steamer—the Styx.

Mr. DAVIS. What is she?

Mr. MALLORY. A side-wheel steamer, of about twelve hundred tons, and six guns. If my friend from Illinois will allow me, I will settle this question about gun-boats. I have the official report as to the first, second, third, and fourth class gun-boats. Now, as to the first class:

"The largest of these vessels are three-masted schooners of fine model, two hundred tons, and three hundred and fifty feet long, with engines of three hundred and fifty horse power, and steam from ten to eleven and a half knots. They have a crew of one hundred men, and their armament consists of two sixty eights, one between the foremast and mainmast and one on the forecastle, and four thirty-twos, carriage guns."

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was going to remark that the gun-boats Forward and Buzzard, which have been perpetrating outrages on our commerce, did so at sea, while the steamer Styx kept near shore. The gun-boats were a thousand miles from Cuba, on the ocean. The British gun-boats range from two to eight hundred tons, and carry from one to six guns, according to their tonnage. They are intended to enter harbors, rivers, and bays, where the water is shallow, and seize an enemy's vessels, where one gun, or two, or three, are sufficient to take a merchantman; and thus they save the trouble of sending a large ship of war after a mere merchantman. It strikes me, therefore, that this class of boats would be peculiarly useful, and admirably adapted to our coast defense, and to annoy an enemy's commerce. But in everything I have said on this question I have treated it as a peace measure, and not a war measure. Those who have assailed my views have insisted all the time in bringing in the war question. I have acted on the defensive in regard to it, and I have insisted that the vote I was giving was given for a peace measure, on a peace establishment, as a defense against war, rather than as a war measure.

Mr. MASON. I think it is very manifest that the Senate has the wrong bill before it. We have been detained here now for four hours on a discussion of measures not before the Senate, but which, if the Senate adjourns now, I shall ask it to take up to-morrow morning, and when they are ended we can then go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not adjourn. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Clark, Clingman, Douglas, Hammond, Harlan, Houston, King, Mason, Pugh, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wright, and Yulee—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Cameron, Collier, Crittenden, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Green, Hale, Hamlin, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Simmons, Stuart, and Wilson—31.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN], to amend the amendment by inserting, "and twenty gun-boats, with full steam power."

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll on the amendment, and Mr. ALLEN responded to his name.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to modify my amendment at the suggestion of the chairman of the Naval Committee, by reducing the number of gun-boats to ten.

Mr. HUNTER. One member has answered. It cannot be done.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Rhode Island cannot withdraw his vote. I object to its being done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A member having answered, the proposition cannot be changed. The Secretary will continue the calling of the roll.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to state, on behalf of my colleague, Mr. SIDELL, and the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD], that they have paired off on this measure.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was requested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] to state that he had paired off with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY].

The vote being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Clingman, Douglas, Fitch, Green, Hammond, Kennedy, Reid, Sebastian, and Thomson of New Jersey—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collier, Crittenden, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Simmons, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—34.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the amendment of the Naval Committee.

Mr. GREEN. I move this as an addition to the amendment now pending:

And that if, after the flagrant commission of outrages on our citizens by other Powers, the President deem it necessary and important for the protection of our citizens, rights, and commerce, or for speedy redress of such wrongs, he shall be authorized and empowered to grant and issue letters of marque and reprisal to American vessels, to continue until the meeting of Congress next thereafter, and he shall then inform Congress of the facts that induced his action in that regard.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President—

Several Senators. It is of no use.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it is of some use to expose these propositions that are made, and I think it is time some one did it. We have had the proposition talked about all day of throwing upon the President the responsibility and authority of making war, and now it is proposed to allow him to grant letters of marque and reprisal. By what authority do you divest yourselves of this power which the Constitution puts upon you—upon Congress—and undertake to cast it upon the President? The Constitution of the United States declares that "the Congress shall have power" "to declare war," and to "grant letters of marque and reprisal;" and yet we have heard propositions discussed here the whole day to shirk this responsibility, and cast it upon the President. Sir, I think the President of the United States has drawn to himself quite too much power, and I am surprised to hear these speeches, and to see these propositions made by persons so tenacious, as they tell us, of the rights of the States. They talk about authorizing the President to send out a vessel to capture the Styx and bring her into port. I am not going to discuss the question of these outrages; but if Senators are serious, let them take the responsibility themselves; do not talk about adjourning Congress and going home, and casting off the responsibility which the Constitution has devolved upon them. Bring in your bill to declare war against Great Britain, if you mean it; bring in your bill to direct the seizure of the British vessels and reprisals if you mean it; do not call on the President to do it if he thinks proper, and report to the next meeting of Congress. Sir, we have no right to divest ourselves of the responsibility which is upon us. If a crisis has arisen, if the time has come when we are to talk about war with England, and about seizing her vessels, what excuse has Congress for adjourning, and attempting to put the responsibility on somebody else?

The state of things now has been compared to the state of things during Mr. Van Buren's administration, when, upon one occasion, the Congress of the United States gave very large powers to the President. But, sir, when that was done, if I recollect aright, the Congress was about expiring; it was then near the 3d of March; on the 2d day of March, I think, the information came that might render it necessary to act, and Congress was about to be dissolved. No such case occurs now; and I am opposed to surrendering that power which justly belongs to us and casting it upon anybody else. If the time has come when we are to enter into any such great measure as that of war with England, let us stand up to it. I am not for making belligerent speeches; I am for peace. I do not believe in any of these measures. I know, we all know, without its being repeated here, that the people of this country are ready for a just war at any time. But, sir, we do not want these proclamations; we do not want to cast the responsibility which justly rests upon the Congress of the United States on the President, nor have we any power to do it. I deny that we have any authority to surrender the war-making power to the President of the United States. He is not vested with it by the Constitution; and we have no right to divest ourselves of that power which the Constitution vests in us. I trust, therefore, that this measure and all like measures will be voted down; and if, when we investigate our difficulties with England, there is a cause for war, let us declare it; if there is a cause for reprisals, let us direct them to be made.

Mr. GREEN. I presume there is not a Senator here who does not know the difference between perfect war and imperfect war, as understood in international law; and I also presume everybody knows that the power to declare war is lodged in Congress alone; yet Congress has a right, in anticipation, to arm the Executive with authority to do certain acts of a warlike character. It is an act of a warlike character to protect a citizen, to protect a ship, to protect our commerce; yet, in contemplation of international law, it is not a declaration of war; it is defense. It is an act of war to redress a grievance; but yet the act of redressing that special grievance is imperfect war—a thing not contemplated under the Constitution of the United States; and it has been held, and wisely held, that the Executive alone, as the head and commander of the Army and Navy, has the right to protect our ships, to protect our people, to protect our commerce, and to interpose for speedy redress without any previous declaration on the part of Congress. A declaration of war is a declaration of a state of relation between two Powers. A specific act is a difficulty growing up in consequence of the action of certain officers, men in the employ of the Government, or assuming to be in the employ of the Government. When two nations formally declare war, all the citizens of each are at war with all the citizens of the other. Every citizen who owes allegiance to the one, is at war with every citizen that owes allegiance to the other Government; but when a difficulty springs up, when a collision upon the seas, when a wrongful act upon your commerce, when a wrongful visitation of your vessel takes place, it is not war—it is a wrong; in other words, it is an outrage; and to authorize the Executive to take proper steps to correct that outrage is not a declaration of war.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no doubt the principle of law for which the honorable Senator contends is correct; but if he is willing, I should like very much that we come to a vote on this question.

Mr. GREEN. I am much obliged to the honorable Senator. I am as anxious for a vote as he is, and a little more so; but I have more interest in this question than he has. I regard the safety of our Treasury as a matter of great importance. I have proposed an amendment which I think will secure that, for it arms the Executive with power to protect our citizens, to protect our commerce, to redress our wrongs in all these little accidental cases without any war, without any violation of international law; and as he can do it without building up a big navy, as he can do it by the use of a merchant marine which we possess stronger than any Power in the world, I propose to give him the privilege to do it.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] is wrong when he supposes that I propose to transfer to the Executive the war-making power. I propose no such thing. It is to redress wrongs, to repel wrongs, to protect our rights. It is no war-making power; and if I had the time, and the Senate was not too impatient, I could illustrate this so clearly that no man could misunderstand it. International law, the principles of right reason, those rules that govern the conduct of nation with nation, will vindicate me in all the positions I take. If, however, the Senate choose rather to vote down this privilege, and to leave the Executive unarmed, unprotected, without power of calling upon our merchant marine, let them do it. I made the proposition; I have done it as a measure of economy; I have done it as a means of protecting our rights without extravagant expense; but I have no right to obtrude my opinions upon other people; and if they do not accord with me, I cannot quarrel with them, or find fault with them. I can simply give my vote, and ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 6, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Douglas, Green, Johnson of Tennessee, Pugh, and Rice—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clingman, Collier, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Simmons, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—40.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. [Oh, no!]

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY and Mr. PUGH called for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the committee, and they were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Insert after line fifty-eight:

That the Secretary of the Navy cause to be constructed, as speedily as may be consistent with the public interests, five steam screw sloops of war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water in active service shall not exceed twelve feet, and four steam screw sloops of war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water in active service shall not exceed fourteen feet, which ships shall combine the heaviest armament and greatest speed compatible with their character and tonnage; and one side-wheel war steamer, whose greatest draught shall not exceed eight feet, armed, and provided for service in the China seas; and that there be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose above specified, the sum of $1,200,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Brown, Clingman, Crittenden, Douglas, Fitch, Iverson, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Simmons, Wilson, and Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Green, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Yulee—24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I now move a portion of the same amendment as a distinct proposition for five sloops of war instead of ten.

Mr. HALE. I do not raise a question of order; but I would suggest that the usual mode is to go through with the amendments of the committee before individual amendments are offered, and the Committee on Naval Affairs have not proposed any such amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I have other amendments from the committee. I shall offer this in the Senate again. The next amendment of the committee is to come in on line one hundred and six, on page 5:

That the pay of the purser at each of the navy-yards at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, shall hereafter be at the rate paid to pursers at the other navy-yards in the United States.

Mr. POLK. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if that increases the compensation? I suppose it does.

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the Senate that by some legislation, to me unknown, some years ago, a distinction was made between pursers at our navy-yards. There is no distinction, or very little, in the duty they perform, and the proposition is to equalize the pay at the different yards.

Mr. POLK. Equalize them by raising them?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir. It puts them all on an equality hereafter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if it could not be equalized by reducing the others, so as to conform to these two?

Mr. MALLORY. If the honorable Senator knew what the salary was, and the duties to be discharged, I presume he would not propose to reduce them, and the committee is not in favor of that proposition. I do not think the Senator would advocate a reduction of these salaries.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have never known an equalization to take place in the way I suggested, and I wanted to know if it was practicable to get the salaries equal, by reducing the higher ones so as to conform to the lower. I wanted to see if we could make this rule once work both ways.

Mr. KENNEDY. I should like to understand what are the salaries of the various officers of the Navy of the United States. When I come to compare them with those of the officers of the Army, it strikes me that they are below them. I have no idea upon what principle of justice such a distinction has been founded; and therefore I should like to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee if he can explain why it is that officers performing in the Navy the same grade of duty as officers of the Army are receiving much less, in some instances not more than half, the Army pay? I was struck with that on looking over the Navy list the other day. I may be wrong, but I should like to be informed.

Mr. TOOMBS. I should like to know of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whether his amendment does not carry all the pursers in the navy-yards up to the salary paid to the one in San Francisco, California?

Mr. MALLORY. The pay of pursers at the navy-yards was fixed by the act of 1842, I think, when the distinction was made. The pursers of the navy-yards at Boston, New York, Norfolk, Washington, and Pensacola get $2,500; the pursers of the navy-yards at Portsmouth and Philadelphia get but $2,000. There was a distinction of $500 made—wherefore I never could perceive—before I came to the Senate, in favor of Pensacola and the other navy-yards, and against Philadelphia and Portsmouth.

Mr. TOOMBS. Can the Senator tell me what is the pay of the purser at San Francisco?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not remember. The pay at San Francisco was placed upon a larger scale.

Mr. TOOMBS. So I say.

Mr. MALLORY. The commander there received the pay of a captain, and there was no purser there that I know of. The navy agent was doing purser's duty. I never heard that there was a purser there.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think the effect of this amendment would be to put all these offices on that basis; but there is no evidence that $2,000 is not enough. As was said by the Senator from Illinois very appositely, we have been acting all the while on the idea of equalizing salaries by raising them. I think the Naval Committee would do much better in these times, at least, if they would propose equality by cutting down and paying them all at $2,000. If the committee wants equality, bring them to $2,000, and I will vote for that proposition, unless they can show us that $2,500 is necessary at these other places. We are without the least information, except that we are told it is proposed to make them equal by putting them up. I will go with the Senator from Illinois and others to make them equal by putting them down. It does not appear that $2,000 is not enough anywhere. I hope the amendment will not pass, unless the chairman alters it, and proposes to put Portsmouth and Philadelphia on an equality with the others, and I will vote for that.

All this system of putting captains and other people at navy-yards, and giving them extra pay, is an enormous abuse, a fraudulent abuse. It is a great deal better for a captain to come here to this navy-yard and be waited on and have a house, than it is to go to Georgetown and hire his own, for they give him $1,000 more pay and find him all these things; and if he comes to Georgetown or this city, he gets $2,000 less money than if stationed at a navy-yard, and no conveniences. It is a mere piece of favoritism. They ought not to get one dollar more on duty than off duty. If they are in the public service they ought to do duty when the public want it. This system is an inconvenience, a great evil, social and pecuniary. You take two captains who come from sea, and put one at the Washington navy-yard, and turn one loose, and he rents his own house, and pays eight hundred or one thousand dollars for it, and all his own expenses. The one at the navy-yard will come to the Naval Committee, or somebody who has influence at the Navy Department, to get him a place; and you not only pay him extra, but you double the expenses of the man you leave out. The whole system is wrong. As for giving a purser in the navy-yard more than a purser in Washington city, it is a mistake. You have not one hundred people to pay at one of those navy-yards. You have not five hundred at the Washington yard. It cannot be five hours' duty every three months that he would have to do.

Mr. HALE. There has been very singular legislation about this subject. I speak in reference to the navy-yard in my own State; for the law happens to be so at this moment that, while the purser there and the purser at Philadelphia are paid less by the law of Congress, the purser's clerk at the navy-yard at Portsmouth is paid higher than the purser's clerk at any navy-yard in the United States. It must have been the result of accident. These pursers feel that the discrimination against them is unjust. Some time ago, there was a distinction made between the clerks at the yards of Portsmouth, Philadelphia, and Washington. Subsequently Washington was taken out and put on the same footing with the other yards. Since that time, the yards at Philadelphia and Portsmouth have been made yards for repairing, where there is a very large amount of work done—a great deal more than at Pensacola or Washington now. The pursers feel that it is very unjust that these yards should be subjected to less pay than others, and it creates a feeling of dissatisfaction.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if this is a proposition of his to reduce that clerk at Portsmouth?

Mr. HALE. No; this has nothing to do with the clerk.

Mr. TOOMBS. Why not bring him to the same basis with the others?

Mr. HALE. Because the Senate, by a unanimous vote at this session, have passed a bill to bring the others up.

Mr. TOOMBS. Count me out of that vote. It could not have been unanimous, unless it was one of those matters that nobody observed.

Mr. HALE. I cannot count anybody out, for the bill was reported from the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and passed the Senate upon an explanation without a division. There has been a proposition before both Houses, and there has been a joint meeting of the Naval Committees of the two Houses, to raise the whole pay of the Navy. You cannot put it down. The feeling is that it is vastly lower than the Army pay, and that whatever it is, high or low, it ought to be equal. This proposition is simply to raise the salary of these two officers $500 each. I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. CAMERON. I know something about Philadelphia, and my impression is that $2,000 a year is ample compensation for an officer of this kind there. If I were a purser living at Philadelphia, I should prefer $2,000 there to $2,500 at Charleston, Pensacola, or New Orleans. I think the law was right in making the discrimination. In regard to the clerks, I remember that by some accident, a year or two ago, the pay of the clerks at a number of the navy-yards was reduced from eleven or twelve hundred dollars to six or seven hundred dollars. This year it has been raised to a sufficient sum to enable the clerks to live on it. I am sure there is no necessity for increasing the pay of the purser at Philadelphia; and I think that in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, a man can live as well and as cheaply as in Philadelphia for that sum of money. In my opinion, we had better leave this matter as it is. This is a bad time to increase the pay of anybody.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment of the Naval Committee is to insert after line two hundred and fifty-one, following the clause making an appropriation to pay for the preparation of a naval code, this proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of the seventh section of the naval appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1857, directing the Secretary of the Navy to have prepared and to report to Congress at this session, for its approval, a code of regulations for the government of the Navy, &c., be extended to the next session of Congress.

Mr. PUGH. I think the bill already contains a provision for a code of regulations. Do we want two codes? The bill from the House of Representatives has an appropriation for a code.

Mr. TOOMBS. This is only to extend the time for its coming in.

Mr. PUGH. If it is all one code I have no objection.

Mr. TOOMBS. Only one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. My next amendment is to insert at the end of the bill:

That the Superintendent of Public Printing be, and he is hereby, directed to transfer to the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography the plates from which the illustrations and charts of the late Japan expedition were printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have another amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to come in after line one hundred and fifty-seven, following the appropriations for navy-yards:

For the completion of the coal depot at Key West, Florida, $20,000.

The Secretary of the Navy recommends this appropriation in his annual report; and I have also a letter from him on the subject, in which he says:

"The present condition of the coal depot at Key West is such as to render it useless for the purposes for which it is intended. The walls only had been put up when the appropriation was exhausted. It has no roof or other necessary convenience for protecting the coal from the weather; and the Department is obliged to pay for the storing of the coal in a private lot. I would therefore suggest that an appropriation of $20,000 be added to the naval appropriation bill for the purpose of roofing and otherwise making the coal depot available."

Mr. POLK. This is a subject about which I am not very well informed. I should like to know the extent of this coal depot. Will it take $20,000 to put a roof on it? How much ground does it cover?

Mr. MALLORY. The ground purchased by the United States for military and naval purposes at Key West, on which this coal depot stands, is very extensive. Previous to building the coal depot, the Government placed about ten thousand tons of coal there, which took fire by spontaneous combustion, and burnt up. As they use Cumberland with anthracite, the Cumberland takes fire. The Government have built a very large stone building, but it is without a roof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. The next amendment is to insert, after line one hundred and forty-two, at the end of the appropriation for the Norfolk yard:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase tools and furnish the machine-shop and foundry at the Norfolk navy-yard, $20,000.

This item was sent to the House of Representatives too late to be inserted in the bill there, and it was then sent here by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, with an accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Navy. In this letter the Secretary says:

"To enable the Department to fit the machine-shop and foundry at the Norfolk navy-yard, to construct the engines, boilers, &c., for the new steam-sloop building there, an addition to the estimates submitted, of $20,000 for the next fiscal year, will be necessary. I have to request and urge, therefore, that that sum may be added to the estimate for that yard for that purpose."

Mr. HUNTER. We have built the foundry; this is an estimate for the tools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I have another amendment, as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to enlist boys for service in the United States marine corps, with the consent of their parents or guardians, not being under eleven nor over seventeen years of age, to serve until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; the boys so enlisted to receive the same pay, rations, clothing, &c., now received by boys enlisted in said corps under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I next propose, on page 6, after line one hundred and seventeen, to insert the words "and the new purchase" after "yard;" and in lines one hundred and twenty, one hundred and twenty-one, and one hundred and twenty-two, to strike out "$263,516," and insert "$320,166," so as to make the clause in relation to the navy-yard at Brooklyn, New York, read:

For boiler-house and setting boilers, water pipes, drains, quay wall, sewer extended to quay-wall, boiler to dredger, timber-basin, repairs of oakum shop, filling ponds in yard and the new purchase, dredging channel and scows, piling site for marine barracks, machinery for machine-shop, boiler-shop, saw mill, foundry, smithery, and brass-foundry, and repairs of all kinds, $320,166; and the amount heretofore appropriated for coal-house may be applied to the completion of the store-house.

This amendment increases the appropriation $50,650, for filling the new purchase, as recommended by the Department. (See Book of Estimates, page 233.) If the dirt which can now be had is not used, it will cost the Government twice as much next year.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe the amount is necessary to render this land available. The appropriations for all the navy-yards were reduced by the Committee of Ways and Means, but this item was, I think, left out by mistake.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I am also directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a judge advocate general for the naval service, to hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President, and who shall receive for his service $2,500 per annum and his traveling expenses. It shall be his duty to prepare, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, all charges and specifications of charges to be preferred before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and to keep accurate records thereof, and to prepare specific instructions in each case to the acting judge advocate to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, to codify and arrange all the laws of Congress, and the rulings and decisions of the district, circuit, and supreme courts of the United States touching courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and to compile and submit to the Secretary of the Navy general instructions, forms, and principles applicable to them, and the manner of conducting them, and to preserve perfect records of all such courts and of the cases tried or heard before them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall preclude commanders of squadrons on foreign stations from ordering such courts, when in their opinion the exigencies of the public service may demand them, under such rules and regulations as said judge advocate general, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Navy, may prescribe.

I think the Senate should adopt this amendment as a matter of economy. We now pay annually a great deal more for performing badly the duty which this amendment contemplates, than the salary of this office would be. The Army have a judge advocate general—not by that title, but an officer who does precisely these duties, as I understand, that this officer would be called upon to do for the Navy. At present, the laws applicable to courts-martial are construed differently on different stations, and many persons who should be punished escape punishment for the want of the system which would be produced by having such an officer.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after "appoint," the words, "by selection from among the officers of the Navy."

Mr. MASON. I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Mississippi whether we can place that restriction on the sphere of choice of the President. We may create the office, but he must have, by the Constitution, the unlimited sphere of choice.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not doubt the constitutional power, because the Constitution confers on Congress the right to provide a Navy and to make rules and regulations for it. This is but a regulation of the Navy.

Mr. MALLORY. With the view I have of a judge advocate general—an officer who is to be familiar with the administration of military law, as applied to courts-martial, who is to compile the decisions of the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, in reference to courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and who is to prepare the charges, and specifications of charges, to be preferred before those courts—I do not think there will be found now, in the Navy, an officer competent to enter on this task. We shall find such a man, probably, at the bar. It may, however, be possible to get such a man in the Navy, and, if so, I should prefer it, but I do not think we shall find the requisite information there.

Mr. DAVIS. The reason I offered the amendment was, that I think nowhere out of the Navy can you find a man who will understand the sentiment of the Navy, and the laws peculiarly governing the service. Mr. Wirt, with all his high legal ability, when called upon once for an opinion, in relation to the Army, said that he did not consider any lawyer's opinion as good as that of an officer of sound judgment, and accustomed to the rules of the service and the application of the laws to them.

Mr. BAYARD. I differ so far from the honorable Senator from Mississippi that, for my own part, I shall necessarily vote against the amendment of the Naval Committee if his amendment be adopted. I think the last place to go for justice is to courts-martial as they are generally constituted, and it is simply for the want of a proper presiding head.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 13, noes 21.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Naval Committee; and they were ordered.

Mr. STUART. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Florida what compensation is proposed to be paid to this officer?

Mr. MALLORY. Two thousand five hundred dollars a year.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senate should understand that the appointment of this officer will not relieve the Navy from the appointment of special judges advocate. This one officer will be in a central position. He may attend a court here, and occasionally somewhere else. If we have many courts we must have special judges advocate at the same expense as now.

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir. This judge advocate would unquestionably attend all the courts-martial in the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. He could not do it.

Mr. MALLORY. With the knowledge I have of them, I am certain he could attend all the courts-martial in the United States, and compile the rulings and decisions in addition; but it would not deprive the commander of a fleet on a foreign station of the power of calling in special judges advocate, under such rules and regulations as might be prescribed and matured.

Mr. IVERSON. The Government is in the habit now of paying judges advocate, who are employed for the purpose of attending to courts of inquiry and courts-martial, twenty-five dollars a day. It is paying that now to Mr. Carlisle, of this city, for attending the court-martial about to assemble to try Captain Routwell. It paid him and two others twenty-five dollars a day each for attending the courts of inquiry on the retired naval officers last year. This proposition, I think, would save a great portion of that expense—certainly much more than the salary of this officer.

Mr. STUART. That is certainly very much a matter of opinion, and, with the lights before me, I differ entirely from the Senator from Georgia. During the last year we have had three or four courts of inquiry in existence at the same time. If you have a court of inquiry in existence in one city, and another somewhere else simultaneously, or nearly simultaneously, this officer cannot attend both. The result will be that you have a supernumerary officer at $2,500 a year, and all the expenses attendant on that.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know of a single instance in the whole history of our Navy where two courts-martial or courts of inquiry have been sitting within the country at the same time, except under the law passed last year in relation to the retiring board. No contingency can possibly arise, under ordinary circumstances, where two courts-martial or two courts of inquiry will be sitting at the same time, and one judge advocate can, ordinarily, attend all the courts-martial and courts of inquiry within the United States.

The question being taken, by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Crittenden, Dixon, Fitch, Foster, Hale, Iverson, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Sebastian, and Wright—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bigler, Broderick, Chandler, Clingman, Collamer, Davis, Doolittle, Douglas, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Rice, Seward, Sidel, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wilson—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASON. I am requested by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will give way, there are one or two amendments yet to be offered from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will allow me to offer this amendment, for reasons which I am sure he will appreciate. It is to add as an additional section:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That, to defray the expenses and compensation of a commissioner to the Republic of Paraguay, (should it be deemed proper by the President to appoint one,) in execution of the joint resolution of the present session "for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay," $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the compensation hereby allowed shall not exceed the rate of $7,500 per annum for the time employed.

I offer this amendment, by instruction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in pursuance of a request of the Secretary of State, which says the contingent fund is not equal to it during the recess; and this is the only opportunity to make the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer as an amendment to the bill, to come in after the word "dollars," in the twenty-first line, these words:

For the engine, machinery, equipment, ordnance, and ordnance stores for the equipment and fitting for sea of the United States steamship Franklin, $300,000.

That is in accordance with an estimate from the Department, and not so much as the Department asked by considerable. In explanation of it, I will say to the Senate that that ship is now finished and ready to receive her masts and spars. By the unanimous judgment of those officers who have given an opinion upon it, and the naval constructor of this city, Mr. Lenthall, she is pronounced to be the finest model of a ship now in existence. Most of the expense upon her has been made. Everything up to fitting out her machinery has already been incurred, and she is now on the stocks. If we are to make anything of an exhibition of naval power, this is something that the committee think should be done. Having made that explanation I leave it to the patriotism and judgment of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the amendment again reported.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. HUNTER. I would ask if that is recommended by the Department?

Mr. HALE. I will state that it was by a vote of the Senate we called upon the Secretary for an estimate; and I have a letter from him, which I will send to the Chair, and ask to have read.

Mr. HUNTER. I also ask what the tonnage of the Franklin is?

Mr. HALE. The chairman can tell.

Mr. MALLORY. Her tonnage is about four thousand six hundred tons. She is one of the largest ships in the world.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 5, 1858.

Sir: In reply to yours of the 28th ultimo, desiring an estimate for the equipment and fitting for sea of the United States ship Franklin as a screw steamer with full steam power, I have to state that, with the $80,000 included in the estimate submitted at the commencement of the session, and which will be included in the general appropriation for increase, repair, &c., there will be required for the engine, machinery, &c., $225,000; equipment, &c., $125,000; ordnance, ordnance stores, &c., $50,000; amounting to $410,000.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

ISAAC TOUCEY,

Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. S. R. MALLORY, Chairman Committee Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. We have quite a large appropriation in the bill already for some of those purposes. Here it is:

"For increase, repair, armament, and equipment of the Navy, including the wear and tear of vessels in commission, fuel for steamers, and purchase of hemp for the Navy, $2,850,000."

This is a proposition to add $300,000 more, as I understand. This was not originally estimated by the Secretary of the Navy. This letter is in reply to a resolution, I think, sent to him by the Senate. It is information which he furnishes at the request of the Senate, and it is the addition of that amount, as I understand, to be made by the Senate, and not asked for by the Department. Now, I think we had better adhere to the original estimate of $2,850,000.

Mr. MALLORY. It is my purpose, when the bill is reported to the Senate, to ask the Senate to pass the original amendment introduced by the Committee on Naval Affairs for five sloops of war. The Senate has voted down ten sloops. I shall offer the five as a separate section, in which case I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire for the present to withdraw his amendment. The Senate has indicated its indisposition to vote for ten sloops, and five I understand will certainly be preferred, and I have been assured will pass. I suggest the withdrawal of this amendment until we have a vote of the Senate upon the proposition for five sloops.

Mr. HALE. I want to say that I understood the Senate to vote down the building of those small vessels because they thought it was mere trifling, and did it with a view of voting in favor of the amendment to fit out the Franklin, which would make a highly respectable and very creditable appearance of the strength, naval power, architecture, and skill of the country. Viewing it in that light, I must not withdraw it. It is from that committee. I hope the Senate will fit out the Franklin, and then not agree to the five sloops.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to ask the Senator a question. What draught of water will she draw? Twenty-five or twenty-six feet?

Mr. HALE. She will draw a good deal; I should think as much as that.

Mr. CLINGMAN. She will require twelve hundred men to man her.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. CLINGMAN. She will do to exhibit in the Mediterranean, I suppose; but can she get into many of our ports?

Mr. PUGH. She can carry the submarine cable.

Mr. HALE. She will do in the Gulf very well.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We might use the whole Gulf as a harbor for her.

Mr. HALE. I want to put it to the Senate, what is the use of building ships and letting them rot on the stocks? What good does the Franklin do there? What is the sense, or the propriety, or the economy, or the philosophy, of building the handsomest ships in the world, and letting them rot on the stocks? If it is the policy of the country to have a navy, after building a ship, certainly it ought to float her.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes, eleven; noes not counted.

Mr. HALE. I have one other amendment to offer from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which is very brief, and offered without much faith, though it has a good deal of merit in it. It is to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the naval appropriation act approved August 31, 1852, adding a percentage to the clerks' pay in the navy-yard and commandant's office in Washington city, District of Columbia, shall be so construed as to include the clerks and messenger in the Navy agent's office, for said yard, and the messenger in the commandant's office.

Let me explain this amendment, in a word, and then I shall leave it. In 1852, Congress passed an act raising, by special act, these clerks' pay. It was construed not to apply to the clerks embraced within this amendment, who, I believe, are only two. In 1854, the Senate undertook to alter that matter, and passed an amendment in an appropriation bill, which they supposed did put these clerks on the same footing with others; but owing to some defect in phraseology, the intention of the Legislature was defeated and construed not to apply to them. Since that, Congress, by general act, have raised these salaries, and these clerks are receiving it; and this amendment is simply to remedy what Congress believed was a misconstruction of the first amendment. That is the whole of it.

Mr. HUNTER. As I understand this amendment, it relates to back pay, and is not in order. It is a private claim.

Mr. HALE. It is the construction of an act.

Mr. HUNTER. It is to give back pay, which has been ruled to be a private claim, and is not in order under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the compensation retrospective?

Mr. HALE. The appropriation is already made, and this amendment is to correct what Congress believed to be a misconstruction of the statute. That is the whole of it. Congress tried twice to give the clerks the money by act of Congress, the acts of 1852 and 1854. Congress tried very hard twice to give a man a salary, and he could not get it.

Mr. HUNTER. This is good as a private claim. It is clearly retrospective.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems so to the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Very well; let it go.

Mr. IVERSON. I have an amendment to offer from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Georgia allow me to submit an amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. IVERSON. I withdraw my amendment for the present. I thought the committee were through with theirs.

Mr. SEWARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to submit the following amendment:

For continuing the publication of the charts of the north Pacific ocean and Behring's Straits expedition, $8,760.

Here is an estimate and recommendation from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand this is merely to print the charts.

Mr. SEWARD. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not object to it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If it is to print charts, I will ask for the reading of it again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I think it is very well; and I suggest it to the Senator now, that before we make any more appropriations for printing and publishing charts, or manuscripts of any description, they should be presented before the Committee on Printing on a resolution that proposes to print them. It is not consistent, either, with a full knowledge of the transaction of business when Senators propose here to print books or charts without a reference to the proper committee. I suggest to gentlemen present that I shall object now, and forevermore, to everything that is proposed to be printed, unless the work or material to be printed shall have been referred to the committee on that subject, and been returned by them to the Senate after they have had an opportunity to examine it, with estimates of what it would cost, and of its true value. These forms are necessary, and no more printing should be done until they are entirely complied with.

Mr. SEWARD. I am willing to concur in that policy; but all these estimates and all these reports are exactly as the honorable Senator requires them.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Very well; let them be referred. I will say to the Senator, that during the last session there were passed through this body, and which were protested against at the time, propositions for printing which we had assurances would cost but little or nothing, and yet have amounted to very much; and, if we shall permit them to go on in the spirit in which they have gone on hitherto, from the favor or the friendship of members of this Senate towards those who ask that they shall be done, they will reach an amount of expenditure not one cent less than half a million dollars. I do not think that these propositions should be concurred in until they have conformed to those practical rules which declare that, before you order the printing of any document, you shall know distinctly what it will cost you to do it, and what is the objection to its being done, as well as its value, when printed, to the public itself, after you shall have paid for it.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to hear that amendment read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. PUGH. Is that reported from any committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. By the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD. There is an estimate and recommendation of the Department for exactly that amount, and it is reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PUGH. This is an old acquaintance. We had this subject under consideration at the last session. A gross amount was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was stated that it was a little affair, and would cost but a few hundred or few thousand dollars, and would never trouble us again. I recollect that the Senator from Arkansas and I were unfortunate enough to differ with the committee. We said it was the beginning of a work, and probably we should not see the end of it very soon. Here it comes again. The first appropriation was probably five or ten thousand dollars. Now it goes on to $6,000. It appears to me, Mr. President, that, under the rules of the Senate, every question of printing, whether it be an amendment or anything else, is by law referable to the Committee on Printing, and that it is no more in order to put to an appropriation bill an amendment providing for the printing of a book or chart than by private resolution. Under the rules, with a few special exceptions, in defining the duties of the Committee on Printing, the printing of nothing can be ordered unless submitted to that committee; and I submit to the Chair, under the rule defining the duties of the Committee on Printing, that this proposition must go to them.

Mr. CAMERON. I think, if the Senate deem it proper to pass the amendment, they had better dispense with the Committee on Printing at once. It would be impossible for them to attempt to regulate the printing, if the Senate choose to take the whole business of the committee out of their hands.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw the amendment. Let it go to the Committee on Printing. It is obvious that the amendment cannot pass, under such circumstances. The committee are entitled to it, and want to examine it.

Mr. SEWARD. I will withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The committee do not want to have anything to do with it, but really these things ought to stop somewhere.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the Senate will give me unanimous consent to refer it to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I hope not. I never want to see any more of these publications before the committee, but I cannot help myself if you choose to refer it.

It was so referred.

Mr. IVERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. MALLORY. A remark fell from my friend from Ohio, which it is necessary for the Committee on Naval Affairs to answer. He remarked that this amendment was an old friend of his—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. IVERSON. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator allow me to answer one remark of the Senator from Ohio? I will not occupy the floor a moment.

Mr. IVERSON. I will, as a personal favor.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Ohio says that this is an old acquaintance—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would inquire of the Chair if it is in order for the Senator to speak after the proposition has been referred to the Committee on Printing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MALLORY. Very well, sir.

Mr. IVERSON. I offer an amendment, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all the officers of the Navy who were put on the retired list, upon furlough pay, by the late retiring naval board, who have been advanced and put on the leave-pay list, by the late naval courts of inquiry, with the approval of the President, shall be entitled to receive leave pay, for and during the time they were on the furlough list aforesaid, deducting such sums as they might have received for furlough pay during the said time, and that such officers as were dropped from the Navy by the President, under the decision and recommendation of the said retiring board, and have been restored to the Navy by the said naval courts of inquiry and the President, and put upon the furlough or leave list, shall be entitled to pay according to their present position, during the time they were dropped out of the Navy, deducting any amount which they might have severally received under the act of January 16, 1857, entitled "An act to amend an act to promote the efficiency of the Navy."

Mr. HUNTER. This is to provide for a private claim. It is to give back pay, as I understand it. It is entirely a case of individuals.

Mr. IVERSON. I am aware of the point of order which the Senator has raised on this proposition. I desire to make an explanation of my amendment. This comes from the Committee on Claims, which might be considered rather an inappropriate committee to present an amendment of this sort to the naval appropriation bill, but for the fact that the memorial of one officer has been presented, and referred to the Committee on Claims; and the committee, taking into consideration that particular case, deem it advisable to introduce a general amendment, applying to all officers, instead of introducing a bill applicable to the individual who presented the claim. I will not go back to the act of 1855, which created the retiring board, by which many of those officers were retired and put on the furlough and other lists.

Mr. HUNTER. I have raised a point of order.

Mr. IVERSON. I am aware, in relation to the point of order, that this amendment may be strictly not in order; but as the Senator and the Chair will remember, a few days ago, when a similar question was under discussion, I referred to a number of precedents in which back pay, as the Senator from Virginia calls it, was put upon appropriation bills. I referred to the case during the last Congress of Mr. Pendleton, a chargé d'affaires at one of the Republics of South America, and the back pay of Mr. Schenck, and the back pay of Mr. Marsh, all put upon the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. That was for compensation for services already rendered. Also, in 1850, an amendment was made to the Indian appropriation bill, appropriating $20,000 to pay to the Central Bank of Georgia an amount due to the State of Georgia. That was an appropriation, the object of which had long since past. In that same bill an appropriation of $72,000 was inserted for the pay of the Texas volunteers, who had already served; and money was appropriated paying those volunteers. If I had time to search the records, I could find fifty cases in which precisely similar amendments have been inserted in a general appropriation bill. The point of order was made in all these cases. The Chair did not decide the point of order, but submitted the question to the Senate whether they would receive it or not. It is competent for the Chair to do that. He may put the question, "Will the Senate receive this amendment?" The Senate may overlook the 30th rule, or adhere to it, and oust an amendment which is not strictly within that rule. I shall ask the Chair, therefore, respectfully to put it to the Senate to know whether this amendment will be received. It is a very important amendment, and many individuals will be affected by it.

Those officers were put out of the Navy by the retiring board, in 1855. Some of them were dropped, and others were put upon the furlough list, and only drew furlough pay during the time they were out. Now, sir, these very officers, under the act of last session, have made their applications to the courts of inquiry, and have been advanced in their position. Some who have been dropped have been restored to the Navy, and put on furlough and leave lists; and more, ordinarily put on the furlough list, have been advanced by those courts to the leave of absence. It goes upon the presumption that these decisions of the recent courts are conclusive that the original finding of the board of fifteen was wrong; that they ought never to have been dropped or placed on the furlough list; and the committee, in fact, occupy the same position now, under the decision of the recent courts of inquiry. The same provision, Mr. President, was applied in the act of the last Congress, making provision for these courts of inquiry. The sixth section of that act declares:

"That all officers who may be restored to active service, under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to draw the same pay they were drawing at the time they were retired or dropped for and during the time of such retirement or suspension from the active service aforesaid."

All the officers who have been restored to the active service by the decisions of the recent courts of inquiry are, under the operation of this section, drawing full pay from the time they were originally retired by the old retiring board. Now, sir, by a parity of reasoning and of justice these officers who have not been restored to active service, but advanced from the positions in which they were placed by the retiring board to higher positions, are entitled to their present compensation, from the time they were thus retired.

Mr. HUNTER. I think there is a question of order pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was indulging the Senator from Georgia, no objection being made. Objection being made, he will decide the point of order.

Mr. HUNTER. I would not object; but it is nearly nine o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would be happy to gratify the Senator from Georgia by putting the question, "Shall the amendment be received?" (the proper question would be, "Is it in order?") but the Chair having no doubt on the point of order, thinks it his duty to decide it. He does not think the amendment is in order, under the rule.

Mr. IVERSON. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, and let the Senate decide.

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would suggest at this very late period of the day, after a prolonged and arduous session, and as there is no probability in the world of coming to a vote—

Mr. HUNTER. We shall finish in half an hour.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then I yield, and will not make the motion I intended to make to adjourn.

Mr. BELL. I want to send an amendment to the Chair that I offered to another bill by the authority of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is to insert at the end of the bill:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1856, the clerks, messengers, and watchmen, at the navy-yard and marine barracks at Washington shall be entitled to receive the compensation authorized by the acts of April 22, 1854, and August 5, 1854, for the payment of which such sum as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that out of order? Is it not for back pay, and a private claim?

Mr. BELL. I want to say a word on this subject. This amendment has passed the Senate twice heretofore. The other day I was authorized by the committee to present it to either of these bills, as it is appropriate enough to either the miscellaneous bill or this one. The honorable Senator took that exception then, and the Senate was of opinion that it was not in order; but it was not ruled out of order by the Chair.

I wish to say a word or two in relation to it. It is to carry out an existing law. Here are some four, five, seven, or eight clerks, messengers, and watchmen at the navy-yard, who, for the last four years, I believe, have been deprived of one fifth of their salaries as established by law. It was said the other day, in some remarks made upon the subject by the Senator from Virginia—he did not argue it, but asked me if it was not a private claim—that it was arrearages of pay; and it was suggested by a Senator near me that certainly it was a private claim, and a very fit case to go to the Court of Claims. Now, here are seven or eight men, poor clerks and messengers, who have been in that service twenty-five years. I have got a list of the service. If this case should be sent to the Court of Claims they will have to pay their lawyer, and there is not more than two hundred dollars a year coming to them. They are to be referred to the Court of Claims. For what reason? Because an officer of the Treasury arbitrarily chooses not to estimate for these clerks upon a reason of his own. For what reason? He thinks the clerks and messengers of this yard ought not to have more than the clerks and messengers in other yards, when Congress decided they should have more; and these poor fellows have been appealing to us for three or four years. It is due under an existing law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator be kind enough to refer to the provisions of law providing for it, that he may decide the point of order?

Mr. BELL. I shall have great pleasure in doing it. The first section of the act of the 22d of April, 1854, classifies all the clerks, and fixes their salaries; then it goes on, and the next section is in these words:

"That the stamp and blank agent for the Post Office Department receive the same salary as clerks of the second class, provided for in the first section of this act; and an addition of twenty per cent. is hereby added"— not an extra compensation for that time—

"to the pay now authorized by law to each of the messengers, packers, laborers, and watchmen, of the different Executive Departments of the Government in Washington; to the clerks employed at the navy-yard and marine barracks at Washington; to the clerk, messenger, and laborer, in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings," &c.

Again, by the second section of an act—the naval appropriation bill—passed at a subsequent period of the same session in 1854, it is provided:

"And be it further enacted, That the provisions contained in the act of the 22d April, 1854"— which I have just read—

"adding a percentage to the pay of the clerks employed at the navy-yard in Washington city, be construed so as to include the clerks and messengers in the office of the navy agent for said yard, and the messenger in the commandant's office."

That is a distinct item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the amendment read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. BELL. There ought to be added to the amendment this further act of August 5, 1854.

Mr. COLLAMER. I would suggest to the gentleman that it strikes me, from the reading of the amendment, it effects nothing. It provides that they shall receive the pay given to them by that act.

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COLLAMER. If it has been decided at the Department that that act does not give them anything, they will not get anything by this amendment.

Mr. BELL. They have not decided any such thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the ear of the Chair heard the amendment, he does not perceive that it is out of order. It seems to him to carry out an existing law.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Chair decide that amendment to be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; as the Chair could catch the reading of the amendment.

Mr. PUGH. It depends on no power on earth. Does it follow that an amendment to carry out any existing law is in order?

Mr. BELL. Undoubtedly it is.

Mr. PUGH. I understand that law requires an appropriation of public money on the subject. This may be all the law on the subject, but it is amazing to me, if that be the law, that the Executive Department should have refused to pay this money for two years past. I am strongly under the impression that there is something else in the case, and I do not think it is to carry out any law that I can perceive.

Mr. BELL. It is to pay standing salaries authorized by law.

Mr. PUGH. It does not say authorized. It says to carry out an existing law.

Mr. BELL. What do you mean by the law?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The best decision that the Chair can make is that the amendment is in order.

The question being put, The VICE PRESIDENT decided that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BELL. I ask for the yeas and nays. ["Oh, no."] I want to see whether this will not be agreed to. I do not want to be troublesome. It is a very plain case.

The question was again put, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask leave to present an amendment for the purpose of explaining and carrying out an amendment attached to the appropriation bill at the last session. It passed then. I am not going to make a speech about it. It was for the benefit of officers who were in the Texas navy at the time of annexation. It did not extend to the widows and legal heirs of those who deceased before the passage of the law, but to those who were in service at the time of annexation. This is intended to explain the object of that law, and carry it out more perfectly. The next portion of it will be to explain the fact that the Secretary has put a construction upon it to suit himself, different from what was intended, that midshipmen were not commissioned officers. With the leave of the Chair, I will read it:

And be it further enacted, That the widows and legal heirs of the officers of the late Texas navy, who were in service at the time of annexation, and have since deceased, be, and they are hereby placed on the same footing that the officers of the same tenure were placed, who were living on the 3d of March, 1837, and that the midshipmen of said navy shall be regarded as commissioned officers by the Secretary of the Navy, and be entitled to the benefits intended by this section.

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment is clearly out of order; it makes an additional appropriation not reported by any committee. Not only does it make an additional appropriation, but it is a private claim. It is to give salaries to those for whom the law provides no salary.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is explanatory of the law, and the whole intention of the law that has heretofore existed, and to enable the Secretary of the Navy to give such a construction as will meet the object of that law. It is not an original matter as I understand it; but one in furtherance of justice to whoever may be intended. It embraces the case of no one individual; but is general in its import, and explanatory of a portion of the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels obliged to decide that the amendment is not in order under the rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel a delicacy in doing so, but I feel bound to appeal from the decision of the Chair; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will ask leave to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn.

Mr. MALLORY. I object to it.

Several Senators. Oh, no.

Mr. MALLORY. We shall have no quorum; and I want to see whether there is a quorum present or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the question must be put, if any Senator insists upon it.

Mr. MALLORY. I insist upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being insisted upon, the Chair will direct the roll to be called.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Bigler, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Collamer, Fitch, Houston, Rice, and Seward—5.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. IVERSON. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote, and simply make this remark. Part of that amendment is clearly in order. The latter part of it, declaring that midshipmen of the Navy shall be considered as commissioned officers, is certainly in order, because it is legislation of a future character. If a part of an amendment is in order, although another portion may not be in order, the whole amendment is clearly in order. That has been repeatedly decided.

Mr. BAYARD. I rise to ask what the question before the Senate is?

Mr. IVERSON. A motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the motion of the Senator from Georgia to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. IVERSON. Which I had a right to make. I merely throw out the suggestion. If the Chair thinks I am wrong, I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was a unit. There was no motion made to withdraw it. By far the larger portion of it was out of order.

Mr. IVERSON. The Chair ruled it out on the point of order. I move to reconsider the vote, if it is in order. Injustice has been done, it seems to me, to the Senator from Texas. If the Chair decided wrong on the point of order, the Senate ought to do justice to the Senator from Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to reconsider the vote, the amendment can again be offered, and a decision had upon it.

Mr. IVERSON. The question was not taken on the amendment, but on the decision of the Chair. The question was, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate;" that has been just decided by the yeas and nays. Now I move to reconsider that vote. The point of order is, that I can still bring the point up again, and the Chair can then decide whether the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will not be reconsidered. If the amendment was an entire thing, and if any part of it was out of order, the whole was. The reason is just the reverse of what the Senator from Georgia says.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will get the Secretary to read it again, and then he thinks it will be clear to the Senate.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will explain in a word, Mr. President. The reason for it is simply this. The provision was drawn up in great haste by my recent colleague, General Rusk, at the close of the session on the 3d of March, and he had to draw it in great haste, and omitted to include the widows and legal representatives of officers who were in the service at the time of annexation. The intention was to extend it to the midshipmen, supposing that the Secretary of the Navy would put a construction on the law that they were commissioned officers. He declined to do so. They are notoriously so, and I refer to the chairman of the Naval Committee.

Mr. IVERSON. If the Chair is of the same opinion, I will withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the same opinion.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the bill will now be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to vote upon the amendments made as in committee, together? The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MALLORY. Is the bill still open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I offer the following amendment, to be inserted as a new section:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy cause to be constructed, as speedily as may be consistent with the public interests, five steam screw sloops-of-war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water shall not exceed fourteen feet, which ships shall combine the heaviest armament and greatest speed compatible with their character and tonnage; and one side-wheel war steamer, whose greatest draught shall not exceed eight feet, armed and provided for service in the China seas; and that there be, and is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose above specified, the sum of $1,200,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That is the bill which has been on our tables for a fortnight or three weeks. I am told there are Senators who will vote for five but not six.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken without debate.

Mr. MALLORY. I am willing that it shall be taken without debate.

Mr. MALLORY called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Bigler, Brown, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Fitch, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Mallory, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Sidel, and Wright—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Foot, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Seward, Stuart, Toombs, and Trumbull—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was out at the moment the vote was taken. I desire to record my vote in the affirmative, if there be no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will it change the result?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If it does not, I will not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator's name will be recorded.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. In 1818 or 1819, a rule was prescribed by resolution of Congress for the naming of our national vessels. The first class, by that rule, were to be called after the several States; the second class, after our rivers; and the third class, after particular towns and cities. That rule is becoming inapplicable, for I suppose we shall never build a man-of-war again, according to the old classification, entirely; I have, therefore, proposed a rule applicable to steamships, keeping free from the other. It is to be inserted as an additional section, and reads:

And be it further enacted, That all the steamships of the Navy of the United States now building, or hereafter to be built, shall be named by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, according to the following rule, namely: all those of forty guns or more shall be considered of the first class, and shall be called after the States of the Union; those of twenty guns, and under forty, shall be considered as of the second class, and be called after the rivers and principal towns or cities; and all those of less than twenty guns shall be the third class, and named by the Secretary of the Navy, as the President may direct, care being taken that no two vessels in the Navy shall bear the same name.

That is keeping up in substance the rule as it was before.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to hear the amendment read again by the Secretary. I only heard the latter part of it.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. MALLORY. I would ask if it refers to vessels now being built, and which have received their names. I ask the Senator to except vessels already named.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. No, sir; I never knew a vessel being named before she was launched. I thought she never was named until she was launched and committed to the water, and then received her name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida move that amendment?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir. I beg leave to say that vessels are almost always named before being built. Such has been the case in my recollection; and every vessel has been named previously by the President of the United States.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Army bill, meaning then to move to adjourn. I only wish to have it taken up, so that it may be the order for to-morrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I trust that will not be done. The other Senator from Virginia gave notice that he would call up his bill in regard to our foreign relations to-morrow; and, as he is not here, I think it is rather a snap judgment.

Mr. HUNTER. If by my superior diligence I get that advantage, I submit I am entitled to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I feel bound to protect them against the superior skill and diligence of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BAYARD. I think it is the practical business as against Buncombe; and I am in favor of the practical business.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. HUNTER was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 243) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate (at nine o'clock, p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 7, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SAVAGE. I wish to say to the House, that, as the friend of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES] in regard to the language that passed between him and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRIS] in the debate on the Minnesota election case, I met a distinguished citizen of my own State, Major William H. Polk, as the friend of the gentleman from Illinois, and that Major Polk and myself, after carefully considering the debate and its antecedents, determined that no hostile meeting ought to take place, and have settled the difficulty upon terms, in our opinion, alike honorable to both gentlemen.

SAMUEL PITTS'S REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Claims a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Pitts, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

FIVE DECEASED CLERKS.

Mr. MAYNARD also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES PHELAN.

Mr. MAYNARD also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of James Phelan; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES JAMES LANMAN.

Mr. MAYNARD also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Charles James Lanman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

L. F. TASISTRO.

Mr. MAYNARD also, from the same committee, presented an adverse report in the case of L. F. Tasistro; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS FOR INDIANS IN TEXAS.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, a bill for the acceptance by the United States of the jurisdiction and control of certain lands set apart by the State of Texas for the colonization of the Indians of that State, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and its further consideration postponed till the second Tuesday in December next.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill of the House (No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 226) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet O. Reid, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army;

An act (S. No. 318) for the relief of Keep, Bard & Co., J. Caulfield, and Joseph Landis & Co.; and

An act (S. No. 323) to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians; when the Speaker signed the same.

TIME OF HOLDING COURT IN TEXAS.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, by unanimous consent, a bill to change the time of holding the spring term of the district court of the United States for the western district of the State of Texas; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOUSTON. This bill simply proposes to change the time of holding one of the terms of the United States district courts in the State of Texas. It meets the approbation of the judge, the bar, and the people. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GOTTLIEB SCHRERER.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, from the same committee, reported, by unanimous consent, a bill for the relief of Gottlieb Schrerer; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. This bill does not take a penny out of the Treasury, but merely relieves this man from a penalty incurred by him. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPREDATIONS OF CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. SHORTER. There is a bill upon the Private Calendar to provide for the examination and payment of certain claims of citizens of Georgia and Alabama, on account of losses sustained by depredations of the Creek Indians. I do not ask the House to take up that bill and put it upon its passage, but I ask the House to assign some day next session when the parties may have a hearing. They have been here for the last ten years pressing their claims; the bill has frequently passed the Senate, but it never has been discussed in this House. I do not ask to have it discussed this session, but that the House will fix some time next session when the bill may be fully and fairly discussed on its merits, and a decision had thereon. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it be made the special order in Committee of the Whole House for the second Friday in December next.

Mr. COBB. Say the third Friday in December. I want time to look into the question.

Mr. SHORTER. I have no objection to that. No objection being made, the bill was made the special order, in Committee of the Whole House, for the third Friday in December next.

COSTS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, House bill (No. 294) to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed district attorneys of the United States, clerks, marshals, attorneys, and other officers in the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes; which was laid upon the table, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

COSTS IN COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. I ask the unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, House bill (No. 53) to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed marshals, district attorneys, clerks, jurors, and witnesses, in the State of California, and the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

The act of 1853 gave them one hundred per cent. on the fees allowed in the older States for two years, and fifty per cent. for two years longer. This bill merely proposes to continue the act of 1853 for two years longer.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

REPRESENTATIVES OF DANIEL HAY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill was read in extenso.

It provides that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall pay to the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased, a sum equal to two per centum on all moneys disbursed by him as agent for paying pensions from and after the 20th of April, 1836, with interest on the same from April 30, 1856.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. How did this bill come up?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I thought the bill was read for information only.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had it read first for information, and it was then read at length on its engrossment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This belongs to a class of cases, and if we are going to legislate upon them, we should pass a general bill. My own opinion is that the whole class is wrong.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. In a case exactly like this, a bill was passed for the benefit of a gentleman in the gentleman's own State during the last Congress, and I think this ought to pass now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say that the fact that there was a case passed for a gentleman in Tennessee is not conclusive that it is right. There are other cases of the same character in Tennessee; and my remark was, that if you intended to relieve these persons, you should pass a general law, and deal out equal justice to all of them, and not pass a separate bill for each individual case.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I did not cite the gentleman's case to show that it was conclusive proof that it was right. But we have waited twenty years for Congress to pass a general law, and they have failed to do so; and now we ask that justice shall be done to this applicant. The bill has passed the Senate; and has been reported on favorably by the committee of this House, and I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think there is any justice in the bill; and I move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. Had the gentleman the floor to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague called for the previous question, and it was perfectly competent for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to take the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I ask that the report of the committee be read, before the question is taken on the motion to lay upon the table. I think that there can be no objection to it. It has been reported on favorably at several sessions of Congress.

Mr. SAVAGE. Has the previous question been seconded?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CASE] who reported the bill can make any explanation that may be desired.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want to progress with the business in order. If debate be in order I do not object; otherwise, I do.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. QUITMAN. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel Hay, of Illinois, for compensation for services as pension agent, and also a bill (S. No. 233) for the relief of the legal representatives of David Hay, deceased, beg leave to report:

That they have had the same under consideration; and find that the said Daniel Hay was appointed pension agent for the State of Illinois in the year 1831; and that, from the time of his appointment up to the 20th of April, 1836, in accordance with the existing law at that time, he was allowed two per cent. on the amount of his disbursements, as a compensation for his services.

The act of the 20th of April, 1836, provided (see Statutes at Large, vol. 3, page 16), "that all such payments shall be hereafter made at such times and places, by such persons or corporations, and under such regulations, as the Secretary of War may direct; but no compensation or allowance shall be made to such persons or corporations for making such payments without authority of law."

Soon after the passage of this act, many of the pension agents tendered their resignations—and among them Mr. Hay himself—which, however, they were induced to withdraw, with the assurance that Congress would speedily compensate them for their services. Numerous efforts were made, from time to time, to fix the compensation of these officers; but nothing was done in the matter until the 20th of February, 1847, when an act was passed allowing pension agents a commission of two per cent. upon their disbursements, provided the same should not exceed, in any case, the sum of $1,000 per annum.

But this law had no retrospective effect, and, in consequence of this, Mr. Hay received none of its benefits, as he resigned the office in 1841 or 1842. He sets forth in his petition, which is dated January 29, 1843, that "since April, 1836, he had disbursed about one hundred and thirty thousand dollars in small sums, averaging about forty-five dollars each, without any compensation whatever, even for stationery, books, or other contingent expenses." It is not to be supposed that he would have continued to hold the office under these circumstances, unless he had been induced to do so by the promise and expectation of adequate compensation. This reasonable expectation was encouraged by the interest manifested in it by almost every Government officer under whose official notice the subject passed during the period of eleven years, and until the law of 1847 was finally passed. The Secretary of War and Commissioner of Pensions, in their annual reports to the first session of the Twenty-Sixth Congress, and in their reports before and since, have called the attention of Congress to the necessity and justice of making provision for the payment of these agents.

In the annual report of the Secretary of War, November 28, 1838, he says:

"I respectfully recommend that the early attention of Congress should be called to the compensation to be granted to the pension agents for discharging the duties of their offices. The performance of these duties is attended with much labor and expense, and very considerable responsibility; and it is unjust to exact it from any one without remuneration. The agents have been induced to continue to pay pensions in the expectation that an act would be passed for their relief."—Ex. Doc., Twenty-Fifth Congress, third session, vol. 1, page 109.

In the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions, November 10, 1839, he says:

"The great inconvenience resulting from the employment of individuals, at considerable expense and responsibility, without any compensation, to disburse and account for large amounts of public money, in small sums, renders it necessary to present it again to the consideration of Congress. Having no allowance by law, and furnished with funds limited by the estimated disbursements from month to month, it is believed that the hope of future remuneration by Congress has restrained most of them from resigning."—Ex. Doc., Twenty-Sixth Congress, first session, vol. 1, page 320.

So important did this subject appear, that Mr. Polk, in his annual message to the Twenty-Ninth Congress, second session, December 8, 1846, said:

"Embarrassment is likely to arise for want of legal provision authorizing compensation to be made to the agents employed in the several States and Territories to pay the revolutionary and other pensioners the amounts allowed them by law. Your attention is invited to the recommendations of the Secretary of War on this subject. These agents incur heavy responsibilities and perform important duties; and no reason exists why they should not be placed on the same footing, as to compensation, with other disbursing officers."—Ex. Doc. No. 4, second session Twenty-Ninth Congress.

Thus encouraged in the reasonable expectation that a law would be passed granting him a compensation at least as liberal as that which he had received prior to the passage of the act of 1836, Mr. Hay retained out of the public moneys, on going out of office, an amount equal to two per cent. upon the amount of his disbursements. This amount was suffered to remain in his hands some twelve or fourteen years, when suit was brought against the securities of Mr. Hay, and they were called upon to refund the amount thus retained, and his legal representatives, on the 30th April, 1856, paid the same into the Treasury of the United States. They now ask that this amount, together with interest upon the same from the time of such payment, be refunded to them.

A case precisely similar to this was brought before the last Congress. A suit having been brought against the securities of Robert King, deceased, on his official bond, as pension agent at Knoxville, Tennessee, a bill was passed and approved August 18, 1856, directing the district attorney to dismiss the suit, and providing "that the accounting officer of the Treasury shall first adjust the accounts of Robert King, as pension agent, allowing to the defendants for him two per cent. on the moneys paid out by him for all the time he acted as such agent, and for which he was never allowed," &c.—Private acts of first session Thirty-Fourth Congress, page 27.

The committee being fully impressed with the justice of the claim in the case under consideration, herewith report back Senate bill No. 230, without amendment, and recommending its passage, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, requesting the return to the Senate of the bill (H. R. No. 356) for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased.

The SPEAKER. This was a House bill sent to the Senate, and there it was amended by striking out the second section. When the clerks of that body returned it here they returned it without noting the amendment. It was returned as having passed the Senate as it went from the House. The bill was so enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officer of the House. The mistake was not detected until the Presiding Officer of the Senate was about signing it. The Chair is of the opinion that the House cannot grant the message of the Senate, because the bill has passed from the control of the House, inasmuch as the enrolled bill has already been signed.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I desire to say to the House that I took that bill and examined it thoroughly, and could find no memorandum of any amendment upon it. It was so enrolled, reported to the House, and signed by the Speaker. I do not see how the House can take any action on it. It has been signed by the Speaker, and is now in the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. The only way in which the mistake can now be corrected is by the passage of an explanatory joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is the opinion of the Chair.

REPORT OF DANIEL HAY—AGAIN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will ask that the Clerk now read the remarks of General Cass on the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. CASE said: I know something about this matter, and I can safely say that there is no more just provision in this bill [the civil and diplomatic bill] than that which the honorable Senator from Illinois seeks to insert in it. I occupied a station which brought the subject before me some twenty years ago. Previous to that time, the Bank of the United States was required, by the provisions of her charter, to pay pensions without compensation, the deposits being considered sufficient remuneration.

"In the States and Territories where the United States Bank had no branches, individuals were appointed, who, not having the benefits of the public deposits—the funds being furnished them as they were needed to be disbursed—were allowed a compensation for their services. When the deposits were removed to the State banks, the business of paying pensions was removed with them; and to prevent these institutions from receiving compensation for paying pensions when they were reaping the same benefits from the public deposits which the Bank of the United States had, a law was enacted in 1836 prohibiting any compensation being allowed for such services.

"This act cut off the compensation of the individuals who had been appointed in those few States and Territories where banks could not be obtained to do the business for the use of the deposits.

"When in the War Department, I assured these individuals that Congress would make an appropriation to pay them; and with this assurance they continued to discharge the duties of their offices.

"Congress, however, thus far has failed to fulfill this promise, although I believe there is not an individual who has occupied the War Department from that day to this, who has not recommended the measure.

"The provision has been passed by the Senate once or twice, and I do not know that it was ever objected to by any one who examined the subject. These officers rendered the service without a single cent of compensation, and the question is, whether you are willing now to pay them.

"The amendment was agreed to."—(See Daily Globe, 20th March, 1855.)

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw the demand for the previous question, to enable me to introduce an amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would be glad to accommodate my friend, but this is a Senate bill, and an amendment to the bill would hazard its passage. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not embarrass it.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under its operation the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of William Randolph, that it may be put on its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to report the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has not the floor for that purpose, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WINSLOW] is occupying the floor; and what has been done, has been done by unanimous consent.

The bill (H. R. No. 583) to provide for keeping and distributing the public documents, introduced on Saturday last, by unanimous consent was then reported to the House.

Mr. KELLY. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will allow me to take up a joint resolution for the relief of Harrison Morgan, for services rendered the Government in carrying mails from New Orleans to Texas. The fines which have been imposed upon them amount to more than they are entitled to receive from the Government. They are willing to be fined in accordance with the amount they have received. I think their claim a just and equitable one. The Postmaster General thinks so, and so does the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not propose to object to the proposition of the gentleman from New York, but I must say that it would be better to go to the business on the Speaker's table and take up all the Senate bills there, and act upon them in rotation.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to oblige the gentleman from New York; but though it is not in order for a gentleman to blow his own horn, I think I can say that I have acted with great liberality.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina to permit the gentleman from New Jersey to report his bill. The bill which he proposes to report is to put an old man, one of Wayne's old soldiers, on the pension roll, at the rate of four dollars a month. He is one of my constituents, and I am afraid he will die before this bill, giving him a pension, can pass.

Mr. CLEMENS. When does the pension commence?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. In 1858, from the passage of the bill. I hope the House will allow the bill to be reported, and that they will put it through.

Mr. WINSLOW. With the permission of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. KELLY,] who made an appeal to me, I will do so.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBBINS] was ahead of him in making a request.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Then you will not let an old soldier have a pension!

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, I must go on, and I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill under consideration

The amendment was read; and is to add as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That of the Statutes at Large published by Little & Brown, now deposited in the Library of Congress for the use of Senators and Representatives during the sessions of Congress, ten copies be retained by the Librarian for the use of the judges of the Supreme Court during the terms of the court, and that one third of the number then remaining in the library be transferred to the Senate and two thirds to the Library of the House of Representatives, for the use of the Senators and Representatives during the session of Congress.

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not disposed to take up much of the time of the House on any portion of this bill, for it has been printed, and I suppose generally read by the House. The amendment I have offered only changes the existing law in one particular, and that is, in requiring all the documents printed to be delivered by the printer and binder to the Secretary of the Interior. As the law now is, there are half a dozen persons whose duty it is to get those books from the printer and binder—the Clerk of this House, the Secretary of the Senate, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Interior, and other persons. It was found, in the investigations carried on by the Committee on the Library, that it was impossible to account for all the books sent from the printer and binder. The idea of the amendment is to place them all under the charge of the Secretary of the Interior, he giving his receipt to the printer and binder, and to require the other officers, such as the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate, to procure them from the Secretary of the Interior, giving their receipts for the same, so that hereafter we may know where the fault is, if any books are missing.

Now books are often found in the book-stores for sale, without our being able to trace the source from whence they came. There were found in the crypt of the Capitol thirty thousand volumes of books which were to be distributed according to a joint resolution of 1857, and an amendment thereto at the present session. This bill undertakes to distribute them according to the act of 1858, and adds to that amount some forty-eight thousand five hundred and fifty-three volumes in the State Department, and which they are anxious to get rid of. It consists in part of ten hundred and fifty sets, in forty-two volumes, of the Annals of Congress, and three thousand six hundred sets, in nine volumes of the History of Congress, published by Force. This bill proposes to add these forty-eight thousand to those on hand, and to distribute them according to the terms of the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York. They are to be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior, under the direction of the members from the several districts, as to what colleges, or libraries, or institutions they may be sent. I believe that that is the only alteration of the present law, except that it takes from the State Department the duty of distributing books to judges and all other persons of the Government entitled to them. That Department, however, will still have the duty of distribution to foreign officers.

Mr. BARKSDALE. It is utterly impossible to hear the gentleman from North Carolina. I am satisfied that the House does not understand this bill. I desire to ask the gentleman some questions in connection with it. I desire to know whether, under that bill, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to distribute all the public documents, or any of them, ordered to be published by Congress?

Mr. WINSLOW. Only as regards their distribution to judges of courts. Nothing else. The Secretary of the Interior is to be the depository, in the first instance, of all books received from the Printer, in order that there may be one Department where the number delivered can be ascertained. The Clerk of the House will then make a requisition on him for the documents that he is to furnish to members.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Under this law, who is to distribute the documents ordered by Congress?

Mr. WINSLOW. They are to be distributed as they now are. It does not alter the law, except that it makes the Secretary of the Interior the depository of these books, in the first instance.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I understand they are to be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior merely for safe-keeping?

Mr. WINSLOW. Merely for safe-keeping.

The sixth section may not be understood. It is a section repealing a section in the charter organizing the Smithsonian Institution. By that section it is made the duty of every person taking out a copyright to deposit a copy in the Library here, and one in the Smithsonian Institution. Both are desirous of getting rid of this; and even now the law is not complied with in half the number of instances.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to ask another question. Take, for instance, the Patent Office report: is that to be distributed as it is at present?

Mr. WINSLOW. Exactly. The bill does not alter that. All the documents that are now received by members of the House will be received under this bill, and from the same quarter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would suggest to the gentleman to have the bill read from the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. LETCHER. There is a proviso annexed to the fifth section which I would like to understand. It is this:

"And provided, That such distribution shall first be made at the instance of the Representatives in Congress from districts in which such public documents have not already been distributed, so that the quantity distributed to each congressional district and Territory shall be equal."

Now, as I understand it, under the distributions to the members of Congress, each congressional district has received these books for a good many years past.

Mr. WINSLOW. No, sir.

Mr. LETCHER. The members of Congress received them for themselves.

Mr. WINSLOW. No, sir.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. The gentleman from Virginia is mistaken. There has been no distribution made to each congressional district. The Secretary of State has hitherto had a list of public institutions scattered throughout the country, generally located along here on the sea-board, and we of the West have had no share in the distribution, because the system grew up before there were any institutions there.

Mr. WINSLOW. Some of the western States have received none of these books, and the idea is to make them equal with the other States. I would add that this bill does not interfere in any way with any books that go to members of Congress, such as the Patent Office reports. Unless some gentleman wishes further information, I move the previous question.

Mr. BRANCH. I desire to ask my colleague if the section just read by the gentleman from Virginia will require that, where a district has been receiving these documents heretofore, they shall be withdrawn from libraries in that district, and given to libraries in other districts?

Mr. WINSLOW. No, sir.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINSLOW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means the amendments of the Senate to House bill (No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending 30th June, 1859.

There being no objection, the report was received.

Mr. HATCH. Will the amendments of the Senate be printed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what disposition the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to make of the amendments.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the report be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order therein until disposed of. I do not propose to move to have the amendments printed, because I wish to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and have them acted on immediately.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am anxious that this bill shall be disposed of, but it would be a great convenience to the House to have the amendments printed. If, therefore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not propose to act on the amendments until to-morrow, I think, under a press, the amendments might be printed and laid upon the desks of members, which would expedite business and be very satisfactory.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I propose to take up the report immediately, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I ascertained, on inquiry, that there is no assurance that we can have these amendments printed for two or three days. I would have preferred to have had them printed, but I think, when the committee come to hear the small number that the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in, they will see that the necessity for printing is not as great as it might seem.

Mr. HOUSTON. As the gentleman proposes to act on the amendments to-day, of course I withdraw my suggestion.

The motion of Mr. J. GLANCY JONES was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now move that all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the amendments of the Senate, shall cease in two hours after they shall be taken up.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend that motion by striking out "two" and inserting "one."

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. I submit that it is not in order to move to close debate upon the amendments before they have been considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question of order is well taken.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the resolution to close debate, as the amendments have never been under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires that the bill, or amendments, shall first be taken up in the Committee of the Whole, before the debate can be closed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to submit the resolution to close debate.

The question was taken; and the rules were suspended, (two thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution to close debate was received.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the resolution by substituting one hour for two hours.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I now move the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the amendment will be withdrawn. Some of these amendments are of a great deal of importance, and ought to be discussed here.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. COBB's amendment; and it was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, asked to report a resolution from the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. LETCHER objected.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated the business in order to be the consideration of the Senate's amendments to the House bill appropriating money for sundry civil expenses.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Senate amendments are sixty-four in number, and I ask that they be read first for information.

Mr. GROW. Does the hour for debate commence now, or at the conclusion of the reading of the amendments?

Mr. SAVAGE. I call for the reading of the order of the House.

The order of the House, as just made, was read.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The limitation of the order is that one hour shall be devoted to general debate from the time the committee takes up the amendments. Let the amendments be read, and then let the debate go on for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. As the order of the House was not written out in extenso, the Chair will rule that the hour for debate will not commence until the amendments have been read.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I will not call for the reading of the amendments, then, until the hour of general debate has been exhausted.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire now particularly to address myself to the loan bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule, under the order of the House, that no debate is in order, unless upon the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then we had better have the amendments read first.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The amendments will be read, and then one hour will be devoted to general debate upon them.

The amendments were then all read through.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the amendments seriatim, for the purpose of acting upon them.

First amendment:

Add to the clause appropriating for the coast survey the following proviso:

Provided, That officers and men of the Army and Navy, when employed on coast-survey service which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, causes unusual expense, may receive such reasonable allowance, in addition to their regular compensation, as the Secretary may direct: And provided further, That the allowance for extra subsistence to the assistant in charge of the Coast Survey office shall not exceed the sum authorized by the regulation of the Treasury Department of the 14th of January, 1850; and that the allowance for extra subsistence to officers, when detached from the main party, shall not exceed the sum authorized by the Treasury regulation of May 11, 1844.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

From the following clause strike out "Holmes's," and insert "the best":

"For the purchase of 'Holmes's life-boat,' to be placed at each of the twenty-eight life-saving stations on the coast of New Jersey, $6,440."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means reported originally in favor of life-boats, in accordance with existing law. The gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. CLAWSON,] in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, moved the amendment to insert Holmes's life-boat, and the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union adopted that amendment. The Senate amendment is to strike out "Holmes's," and insert "the best," leaving it to the Secretary of the Treasury to select the best. The Committee of Ways and Means therefore recommend that we concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CLAWSON. I think this House is as capable as the Secretary of the Treasury to judge of life-boats. I propose, however, to compromise the matter, and therefore I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by inserting, after the word "best," the words "self-righting," so that it will read, "the best self-righting life-boat."

Mr. FLORENCE. I will state that that was the purpose of the House. The House knew just precisely what they were doing, and I am perfectly willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey, for that was the purpose the House had in view when that amendment was passed upon in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Senate seem not to have understood that. The old life-boat has failed to answer the purpose for which it was designed, and persons engaged on the coast of New Jersey—and I suppose upon the coast of Long Island, too—will not trust themselves in any boat which is not self-righting; and, as Francis's boats are not self-righting, they are perfectly useless. The object the House had in view was to get a self-righting life-boat. When the amendment was offered in the committee, the gentleman who offered it conceived that Holmes's boat was the best. There are several self-righting serf boats, so far as my knowledge goes. I suppose the gentleman from New Jersey is willing that Holmes should take his chance with others.

Mr. LETCHER. It would seem to follow, from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the Secretary of the Treasury is not to be trusted in procuring these life-boats for the purposes indicated in the amendment. Now, sir, I take it, when this particular name is stricken out, that he will be disposed to look for the best life-boat—one that will answer the purposes most satisfactorily—and that there is a propriety, therefore, in leaving the matter to him, to be judged of upon information which may be furnished to him in regard to the various sorts of life-boats. My friend from Pennsylvania is anxious that the amendment should designate a "self-righting" life-boat. In the progress of improvement, it may turn out in the course of six months that what he regards as the best will not be the best. Some other improvement may come up in the mean time; and if you are to confine the amendment to any particular species of life-boat, you will see at once that it may lead to embarrassment and difficulty in making the selection. I hope, therefore, that the House will agree with the Committee of Ways and Means in concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have the greatest confidence in the Secretary of the Treasury, and am perfectly willing that he should take the best life-boat. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Virginia, in the conclusion he arrives at, and that is the reason why I want the House to express precisely what they want. I want the best self-righting life-boat, and I am willing to leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that if any boat is presented which is better than Holmes's, I am willing he should select it. So the gentleman from Virginia and myself agree perfectly, and we occupy the same platform.

Mr. LETCHER. I know nothing about these boats. I have no knowledge upon the subject, and I take it for granted that nine tenths of the House are in my situation. I suppose that the only sort of boat we ever saw is a steamboat, a flatboat, or a keelboat. None of them answer this purpose. I am, therefore, willing to leave it with somebody whose business it will be to inquire into the matter, and then to decide upon it, whether that decision shall be in favor of a self-righting boat, or the patent of Holmes, or Francis, or of somebody else.

Mr. CLAWSON. The Senate say that the House is not capable of judging which is the best boat, but that the Secretary of the Treasury is. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury had the decision of which was the best boat when Francis's boat was put upon our coast; and, I venture to say, that not one in a dozen of them have ever been used since they were put upon the coast. They have proved perfectly useless.

Mr. LETCHER. Was that decision made by the present or the late Secretary?

Mr. CLAWSON. By the last Secretary.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well; then I am willing to trust this present one, and let him decide.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I wish to say in reply to the honorable gentleman from Virginia that when he says he is totally unacquainted with the character of life-boats he ought to be willing to leave it to those who are acquainted with them, and to indulge the gentleman from New Jersey, and myself, who have some acquaintance with these boats. We are on the coast. We know what is required for this service. We have seen these boats, and experimented with them; and I know that the Department is highly impressed, if not entirely so, with the superiority of Holmes's boat. We know that a self-righting boat is indispensable, and that all other boats have proved unavailing. We are representing people who are most interested in the matter; who see the disasters that occur on the coast; and who know what is best for the occasion; and I think the gentleman from Virginia ought to indulge us in the amendment requiring the Secretary to give us the boat which experience teaches us is the best—and that is the self-righting boat.

Mr. LETCHER. We propose to take exactly the position which the gentleman's own amendment assigns to this question. The proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CLAWSON] was for the purchase of Holmes's life-boat. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAYLOR] was for the purchase of the best life-boat. I desire to leave that matter to those who can be informed upon it, and who have no interest whatever in the decision; because, I take it, the Secretary, in the discharge of his duty, has only the interest of doing that which is best in the execution of the law; and when information comes to be presented to him and considered by him, he will then decide it with reference solely to the object which Congress had in view in making the appropriation.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. It is very true that in the amendment which I offered to the bill I used the language as quoted by the gentleman from Virginia. I did so because I had the most entire confidence in the present Secretary of the Treasury; and if I were called upon to decide now, I would be perfectly willing to let both amendments stand on the same basis. But the gentlemen from New Jersey have some feeling in the matter. Their constituents are anxious to have a certain class of life-boats; and I am perfectly willing to support them in their amendment. So far as my constituents are concerned, and those of the gentleman from the first congressional district of New York, we are entirely willing to be governed by what the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best for our coast, and best for the security of life and property. But I may say that while I preferred that language myself as being more respectful probably to the Department, and as being entirely sufficient to secure all that is necessary, I see no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken on Mr. CLAWSON's amendment to the Senate amendment; and it was adopted.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment as amended; and it was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Strike out the lines one hundred and twenty-five, one hundred and twenty-six, and one hundred and twenty-seven, in these words:

"For continuing the survey of the base, meridian, correction parallels, township and section lines, in the Territory of Utah, at augmented rates, $15,000."

Mr. REAGAN. What does that mean? I do not understand it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. In consequence of the disturbed state of the Territory, for which this appropriation was intended, the Senate deemed that the appropriation was unnecessary, particularly as there is a balance on hand from the appropriation of last year for this purpose. The Senate therefore struck it out; and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Strike out the following proviso:

"And provided also, That no salary or compensation to any person for services in collecting or distributing seeds, cuttings, &c., shall be paid out of this appropriation."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. WHITELEY. I wish to state to the House that if we concur in the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means these officers will be left without any salary at all. I am informed that there is no provision for their payment under any other law. The House inserted the proviso that the salaries should not be paid out of the $60,000. The Senate amendment strikes that out, and leaves them as all former appropriation bills left them, to get their salaries out of the $60,000. I think we ought either to break up the seed department or pay these officers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman from Delaware, by what authority these salaries are paid, and by whom they are fixed? If we appropriate $63,000 to buy seed, by what right does the chief clerk fix his salary or that of the other officers, employ as many clerks as he pleases at $2,000 apiece, and pay them out of the appropriation? It seems to me that that there should be some law regulating this whole thing, if it is to be carried on. I know of no law or resolution of Congress that has ever fixed or determined the compensation of these persons.

Mr. WHITELEY. I suppose that these salaries are paid by the Secretary of the Interior; and I say to the gentleman from Tennessee, that there is not a clerk in that office who gets $2,000 a year. The whole of the salaries only amount to $12,500.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Delaware whether the payment of these salaries out of the appropriation does not reduce the appropriation for seeds considerably?

Mr. WHITELEY. The salaries are about twelve thousand dollars, and thus the appropriation for seeds is reduced to $48,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is one fourth of the whole amount.

Mr. WHITELEY. They are not clerks; they are men sent out to collect seeds, &c.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I hope that the committee will concur in the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, and retain the bill as it went from the House. I regard it as a perfect anomaly in a country like ours that there should be a class of officers drawing upon the public Treasury for salaries without law. These men take an appropriation of $60,000 a year under the pretense that it is intended for the benefit of agriculture, and for the procurement and distribution of seeds and cuttings; and when we come to inquire what has been done for the benefit of agriculture, we find that they divide $12,000 of the appropriation among themselves for salaries. Now, I suggest that no economy could dictate such a provision as that, which would pay from twenty to twenty-five per cent. upon an annual appropriation in the shape of salaries; or, in other words, which would give $12,000 in the shape of salaries for the distribution of $48,000. The farmers of the country, who are the pet class for whose benefit the appropriation is made, will see, unless we adhere to this proviso, that this runs into an extravagance that is perfectly wasteful, and that could not obtain, in any other branch of the Government, independent of the fact that it allows a parcel of bureau or departmental officers to distribute salaries among their employes in direct violation of the Constitution, because the Constitution supposes that money is to go out of the Treasury upon appropriations made by law, and that the executive officers are to meet those things that are established by law.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Delaware to assert that there was no person employed in this business at a salary of $2,000, except, perhaps, the principal. I find, in the register commonly called the Blue Book, the following names of persons engaged in this work, and at the following salaries: D. J. Browne, $2,000; T. Glover, $2,000; H. C. Williams, $2,000; C. L. Alexander, $1,200; William H. Dietz, $1,000; and Thomas J. Donoho, Joseph Kilian, and C. Simmons, $3 per day each, which would be about one thousand dollars a year each.

That will make about twelve thousand dollars; and then, if I am not mistaken, there are other persons employed in packing up these seeds and in the distribution of them. Here is a statement showing the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $75,000, made for agricultural purposes on the 18th of August last:

To amount of appropriation.....	$75,000 00
By cash paid for the purchase of seeds, &c., as per detailed statement marked No. 1.....	$18,106 21
By cash paid freight, and other expenses.....	1,964 64
By cash paid salaries and wages of employes in the preparation of the annual report, and for the putting up and distribution of seeds.....	17,487 15

It costs nearly as much for the distribution of the seeds, and for the preparation of the report, as the seeds themselves cost; and that sum of $17,000 has been expended for this purpose under the discretion of some person in the Department of the Interior. There is no law of which I am aware, providing how many persons shall be employed, or how much any of these persons shall receive. But Congress makes the appropriation under the popular clamor in this Hall that it is for the benefit of agriculture, when it is to be taken from the agriculturists to be distributed to men who render no service for it.

Mr. WHITELEY. I wish to explain. I understood the former remark of the gentleman from Tennessee to be that there were clerks at $2,000 salaries, and I was under the impression that only Mr. Browne, the principal, received $2,000. There are no clerks at all in that department. These two other gentlemen, who get $2,000, are employed traveling over the country, procuring information upon this subject, which is submitted in the annual report. They get, I am told, $2,000 a year, and pay their own expenses; and I must be permitted to say that the salary is not exorbitant, when you compel these men to travel over the United States, and pay their own expenses.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the gentleman if one of these men has rendered any other service than going through Texas and Arkansas cutting wild grape vines, to be sent here for distribution?

Mr. WHITELEY. I do not know about that. The amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the general debate expires I desire to call up the thirty-eighth amendment, because I may not get the floor when it comes up. I ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read the thirty-eighth amendment, as follows:

For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California, the surveyor general is hereby authorized to pay such sum as he may deem reasonable, according to the circumstances connected with each case, not exceeding at the rate of twenty-five dollars for each mile of the boundary lines of any claim, and also for such lines as may necessarily be run and marked or measured, in order to connect the lines of such claim with those of the adjacent public surveys: Provided, That the surveyor or surveyors hereafter executing any such survey, of a private claim, shall accompany his or their return of such survey with his affidavit that no compensation has been received by him, directly or indirectly, or agreed to be paid to or received by him for the same, from any quarter other than the Government of the United States: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of California to award each contract to execute such surveys to the lowest responsible bidder, he being a practical surveyor, after reasonable notice, to be published in two newspapers of the largest circulation in the State of California.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say a word on that amendment now, because, when it comes up in its order, I may not have an opportunity of calling the attention of members to what it proposes. It is an amendment which deserves the attention of the House, and which ought not to be pressed through under a five-minutes' debate. It proposes to give twenty-five dollars per mile for the surveying which is indicated. In the course of my life I have served as a surveyor for three or four years, in a country where, perhaps, living is as expensive as it is in California, and the price I received was only three dollars a mile. I surveyed through thickets as well as through open woods, and did very well at it, as others had done. It strikes me now as something startling that the Congress of the United States should be asked to appropriate $100 a section for surveying land. I am told that living is as cheap in California as it is elsewhere; that provisions are as cheap there as elsewhere; labor may be a little higher there than it is in the Atlantic sea-board States, but not a great deal higher. Yet, sir, we are asked here to make an appropriation of $100 per square mile for surveying land in that State. I understand that in Louisiana, where private surveys are made, there was, and perhaps is now, a provision of law authorizing the paying of as much as six dollars a mile for making surveys where there are swamps and marshes to be gone through. The law as it exists, I understand, authorizes the giving for these private surveys sixteen dollars a mile; that is, sixty-four dollars a section; and it does seem to me that that is enough to satisfy the most extreme avarice. Why should we pay $100 a section for surveying land? We may be told that, under this amendment, advertisement is to be made in the newspapers for giving the surveying out by contract. Who is there here who does not know that when appropriations are made for works of this kind, through some process of management, the contracts are let out at the maximum price allowed by Congress? What is to be done here? Is the surveyor general to farm out the surveying in California? Is he to make his private fortune out of this class of surveying? Certainly, it cannot be necessary to pay that price for surveying. The price paid for surveying over the country generally is three dollars a mile. Five dollars a mile would be a good price for surveying anywhere.

The amendment provides that they shall not only be allowed twenty-five dollars a mile for surveying the lines of private surveys, but for surveying the connecting lines—the lines connecting these private surveys with some other existing surveys. There is no limitation that it shall be confined even to the nearest survey; and when you offer an inducement to avarice by an extraordinary compensation like this, certain it is that they will run the lines as far as possible.

The proposition, in its simple statement, is startling enough to cause members to reject it at once. I take occasion to call attention to it to exhibit the extent to which we are going in reckless and extravagant expenditure of the public money. What will the people say? What ought they to say when they learn that it is proposed to authorize the payment of twenty-five dollars a mile for running lines of survey? Would there not be a general feeling of alarm at such reckless extravagance? It does seem to me, then, that when a proposition of so startling a character as this is presented, Congress will pause until it can ascertain some necessity for such an extraordinary appropriation.

I have said before that, in my State, surveying costs as much, perhaps, as it does in California. Surveyors there do well at three dollars a mile. I know that it has been argued at the other end of the Capitol that these private surveys give increased trouble; but I cannot see why there should be any additional trouble in those cases.

It is also urged in favor of this amendment, that those desiring private surveys could not get surveyors to make them for sixteen dollars a mile. Is not sixty-four dollars enough for surveying a section? An active man will survey three or four sections of land a day; yet it is urged that sixteen dollars a mile will not pay for the surveying of these lines, and it is said that unless good pay is given to the surveyors, the owners of private claims will have to pay additional amounts, and that therefore the surveyor would be put in a position where he might be tempted to violate his duty. Who is there that will seriously advance such an argument? The surveyor goes there as the sworn officer of the law. Will he commit perjury, because he is not paid enough by the Government, and because private claimants may see proper to pay him an additional compensation?

Sir, I take it that neither bribery on the one hand nor perjury on the other, will take place. The surveyor general is directed to run certain lines. How can he affect the interests of the Government? How can he affect the interests of the claimants by an alteration of the survey? He has the metes and bounds of his survey by the order of the court or by the title under which he runs it. Will he dare to violate the order by running the lines contrary to what is called for, by changing the course or lengthening or shortening the distances? It is to be remembered that when surveying is done it carries in connection with adjoining surveys, the means of inevitable detection in case of fraud. One survey proves another, shows whether it is correct or incorrect. If the surveyor general then surveys more land than he ought to for a private claimant, that fraud will soon be detected and exposed. And it confers upon the claimant no title. There are other surveys to be made there, and if the frauds are not sooner exposed, they will be then exposed, and the land not included in the grant is liable to be taken up by any other locator or settler. And that, which I understand is the only material reason for the appropriation, is a baseless argument which will not stand the test of reason, and I hope the House will, when we come to act upon that amendment, strike it out.

[Mr. DAVIDSON here, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. C. C. No. 85) for the relief of Peter Parker; when the Speaker signed the same.]

Mr. SCOTT. Not knowing that this bill was to be taken up to-day, I did not anticipate that there would be objection made to this clause of the bill on to-day. Now, sir, I know it was stated in the other end of the Capitol that living was as cheap in the State of California as it was upon this side. I deny the truth of that assertion. I state here, upon information which I have in my possession, acquired by personal experience and observation, that the cost of living in California is now twice as great as it is upon this side. The matter which we have to deal with, is the matter of labor, and the price there paid for labor. Now, in that connection, I would state to the gentleman from Texas, that he cannot employ a laboring man in San Francisco, or in the mines of California, under fifty or sixty dollars a month. And I will state, too, that he cannot get deputy surveyors to take charge of those surveys for less than one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars per month; nor can he employ rodmen and chain-bearers under seventy-five or one hundred dollars a month. In order to separate these private land claims from the public domain, they have not only to employ laboring men to attend the engineer force, but it becomes necessary to have scientific men; and there is no place in the world where scientific qualifications command a better price than in California.

The gentleman says there is no difference in the price of labor in Texas and California. The gentleman is greatly mistaken. The simple reason that labor is so enhanced in price grows out of the mining interests of our State. If men cannot get employment in San Francisco, Sacramento, Marysville, Stockton, or any of our large places, they immediately go to the mines; and there is no man who, by care, attention to business, and industry, cannot make over two and a half or three dollars a day in the mines.

It is this state of affairs which renders it necessary that there should be a discrimination between the price paid in the State which I have the honor to represent and other States of the Union. We find that there are one hundred and thirty million acres of public land in California. We find there are no incumbrances on those public lands. We have no Indian treaties to be made in reference to them, as the reservation system is adopted in that State. Every acre belongs to the General Government. We find, however, that difficulties do arise from what are known as private land claims—claims held or claimed under Mexican grants, prior to our acquisition of that territory from Mexico—and we find that it becomes necessary to separate those private claims from the public domain.

The law, as it now stands, prohibits the surveyor general from receiving anything from these private claimants for surveying their lands. We find, further, that if the General Government wishes to enjoy the benefits of the public domain, it must, necessarily, separate that domain from that portion which belongs to private individuals; and the gentleman from Texas admits, in his remarks, that it is more difficult to make these private land claim surveys, than it is to run the lines through and around the public domain. As I said before, the law prevents the surveyor general from receiving any remuneration from these private land claimants. It then devolves upon Congress to pass some law by which he can make contracts with deputy surveyors to separate the private land claims from the public domain. The whole point of the controversy which the gentleman has raised, is, whether this is necessary? I have stated that the price of labor there is three times as great as it is elsewhere; that you cannot get a woman servant under thirty dollars a month, or an able-bodied man under sixty dollars a month, while in Texas they can be obtained for ten or fifteen. When we contrast the prices of labor and provisions, we find that the difference is not so great as stated by the gentleman from Texas.

The matter was fully canvassed in the other end of the Capitol, and one of the Senators from my State, who first raised objection to the price stated in this amendment, finally acknowledged that it was necessary that this appropriation should be made, or the surveyor's office in California would be closed; and for six or seven months we should have no surveys going on there. I feel no interest in this matter beyond the benefit of my State. I know the surveyor general; he is a man of undoubted integrity and honesty; he has been identified with the history of that country since 1849, and I know he will look after the Government interest, and that he will get these contracts taken by deputy surveyors at the lowest possible price. He will advertise for bids, and the contracts will be let out to the lowest responsible parties. If he can get it done for fifteen dollars, he will do it. There is a spirit of emulation and rivalry there in all branches of business, as there is here, and it will lead to competition in bidding, which will secure the work to be done at the lowest possible price, and, of course, that is as reasonable as the gentleman can ask. But if you were to limit the price to fifteen or twenty dollars, you may appropriate an amount entirely inadequate to the service, and the result will be, that you will have no surveys made, and the Government will be deprived of millions of acres now ordered to be sold, and the rights of the private land claimants, which have suffered already from litigation, will be trampled upon, because, forsooth, the gentleman from Texas thinks that this appropriation is too large. Now I say, that, in justice to these parties, and also to the numerous settlers, whose rights are as much involved as these land claimants, and also in justice to the Federal Government, I do not believe that the appropriation here made is too much; if it was, I would be the first man to oppose it.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to reply to one portion of the gentleman's argument. It is insisted that the great difference in the price of labor in California over other States, requires this largely-increased price to be given for surveying. My friend from California says that while labor is worth sixty dollars a month in California, it is, perhaps, worth about twenty dollars a month in Texas. I shall not inquire into the accuracy of that statement. Take it to be correct, however. By the laws now in existence, surveying costs five times as much in California as in Texas. What costs but three dollars in Texas costs sixteen dollars in California. I take it there is no good reason why that great difference should exist. And yet, by this appropriation, it is proposed to make it eight times as much as the ordinary price of surveying in the southern States—in Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, &c.—where labor is confessedly very high, and where the means of living are usually high. I cannot understand why this is so. My observation in life has led me to the conclusion that whenever a Government presents an inducement to the cupidity of men, they will avail themselves of it.

It seems to me that such extraordinary legislation as this has the most demoralizing effect on any community; and it is to that I object more than I do to the amount of money that may be paid out under this amendment. If the evil would end with the people of the country paying to a few officials in California $100 a section for surveying land, I would not complain so much, even though it would take one or two hundred thousand dollars out of the Treasury. We can stand that; but when you taint the body-politic; when you hold out an inducement to venality and corruption by that sort of legislation—I say it with all respect to those who introduced the amendment and advocated it—it leads people to extravagance, and leads them to look to the Government, instead of going to work themselves and living by their honest toil, and by the sweat of their brow, as the God of nature intended they should live. The duties of the Government should be discharged with honesty and fidelity, and with a view as well to public morality as to the public Treasury. My great objection to this whole system is that we are creating so many offices, and paying such extravagant salaries, that men are inducing the people to stretch their consciences in the desire to get Government patronage. It is corrupting in its tendency, and dangerous in its character; and if the Government goes on as it is now going on, making offices that tempt the cupidity of men, I fear that in ten years more our Government will be as venal and corrupt as the Government of Mexico. These reasons apply to all such measures, but to this, it seems to me, in an eminent degree.

Fifth amendment:

Insert the following:

For the salaries and incidental expenses of the institution for the instruction of the Deaf and Dumb and Blind, in the District of Columbia, authorized by the act approved May 29, 1853, $3,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment increases the appropriation $3,000 for the instruction of the deaf and dumb and blind in the District of Columbia. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Insert the following:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to fit up the shelves in two rooms at the south end of the Library of Congress, for the use of the Library, and for putting up a partition in the passage to them, $600.

The amendment was concurred in.

Seventh amendment:

Insert the following:

For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, $3,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Eighth amendment:

Insert the following:

And for painting the hand rails and iron work of said bridge, $400; and the bridge is hereby placed under the protection of Georgetown, with power to regulate the speed of travel, and the passage of droves of cattle over the same, but no tolls shall be charged.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee here informally rose; and Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled:

An act (S. No. 198) for the relief of Joseph Hardy and Alton Long; and

An act (S. No. 230) for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased;

When the Speaker signed the same.

The committee then resumed its session.

Ninth amendment:

Insert the following:

For continuation of the filling up of ravine, and grading Judiciary Square, $7,000.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Tenth amendment:

For continuing the grading and planting with trees the unimproved portion of the Mall, $10,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Eleventh amendment:

Strike out the following:

"Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until contracts shall be entered into with responsible parties for the completion of the work, which, in the aggregate, shall not exceed the amount hereby appropriated."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Twelfth amendment:

Page 11, after line twenty-one, insert as follows:

For United States Capitol extension, $750,000.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the hour had arrived at which the debate was closed by the order of the House, and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. J. GLANCY JONES] was entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I propose to go on and debate the amendments as they come up. I presume the committee understand this amendment of the Senate. The House struck out the appropriation for the Capitol extension, the amount originally being $1,000,000. The Senate have inserted $750,000. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended for painting or decorating the interior of the Capitol, unless the same be made under the direction of three American artists, to be appointed by the President of the United States; nor shall any contract be made for such painting or decoration except by the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. LETCHER. I raise a question of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$750,000." I hope the House will not concur in the amendment of the Senate. Congress has refused to appropriate money, even in small amounts, for various necessary improvements throughout the country which are recommended by the Departments and the Committee of Ways and Means. At present the Capitol is secure, so that it is not necessary to make any further improvements in order to protect it from the weather. The money must, therefore, be expended chiefly on the internal decoration of the Capitol, with the exception, probably, of the completion of the Senate Chamber. The money is not immediately necessary for any external work. The appropriation, therefore, can be very well postponed.

So far as decoration is concerned, the less money we expend upon the Capitol in decorating it in the manner in which it has been decorated under the present management, the better for us, the better for the Treasury, the better for the artistic taste of the country. We have expended already thousands of dollars on this contemptible decoration, which is disgraceful to the age and to the taste of the country; and we ought, if we cannot reach it in any other way, to refuse to appropriate one dollar more towards it. I hold that the decoration is not only improper, but that it is absolutely disgraceful. Go through this Capitol and see the insignificant tinsel work that has been prepared here to stand for ages as a representation of the taste and skill of this age. Have we no artist to illustrate the history of our country? Can we not write some portion of our country's history on these walls that will perpetuate the character of the present generation? Have we no commerce to illustrate—no history to perpetuate? Have we made no mechanical, no scientific discoveries worthy of record here, that we are compelled to employ the poorest Italian painters to collect scraps from antiquity to place upon these walls, as a lasting disgrace to the age—mere tinsel, a libel upon the taste and intelligence of the people?

While I am not opposed to an appropriation to complete the Capitol, or any other necessary work in course of construction, I think we ought to cut off the supplies and refuse an appropriation to be expended for painting and illustration under the present management. We ought at least to have some man of artistic taste at the head of this great national work. We have now at the head of it a captain of the engineer corps of the Army, who is not a judge of such work, but he is "sole monarch of all he surveys." He, sir, is responsible for the great expense incurred in the decoration of this Capitol; the purchase of these desks and chairs; all this tinsel work, and those coats of arms on the ceiling, which cost hundreds of dollars each. They ought not to have cost more than thirty to forty dollars each. One man was employed eighteen months, at ten dollars a day, to illustrate the coats of arms of the States and Territories. Make the calculation, and it will be seen that this single item amounts to thousands, when the expense should not have been more than thirty or forty dollars for each illustration. So on through all the items of expenditure. There is no economy, no taste; and we pay this enormous amount absolutely to disgrace the country—to have here a perpetual libel upon the artists and artistic taste of the American people. I hope the committee will strike it out, and that we will make no further appropriation until we have a change in the management of the artistic work of this Capitol.

Against the architecture I have nothing to say. I believe that the architect is perfectly competent and worthy of the greatest trust, and I desire no remark I have made to apply to him. But I say that Captain Meigs is unfit to direct the decoration of this Capitol. He has neither taste nor skill, and I hold that this committee would do a wrong to the Treasury, to the artists, and to the country, if they furnished him with further funds to daub the Capitol with such illustrations.

Mr. QUITMAN. I understand the amendment is to strike out the whole appropriation. Now, sir, while I concur in much of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. TAYLOR] has said on the subject of the general character of the decorations of this Capitol, my principal object in rising is to avail myself of this opportunity to say that when the proposition was originally made to appropriate $1,000,000, I voted against it. I will vote against extravagant appropriations at all times, and would have opposed the appropriation originally had I been here. I would have for the Capitol of a republic, Mr. Chairman, a structure either in the Ionic or Doric style—in a plain style, without the vast number of decorations with which this Capitol is loaded. But since this work has gone on, it is due to the country and to ourselves that we should finish it properly. As to the style of finish, why that is another matter. This amendment proposes to put a stop to all further appropriations for the Capitol. I take this occasion to say that, as a citizen of the United States, I should be ashamed to look upon this Capitol remaining in its present unfinished condition for years. It must be finished.

Shall we plead before the world that we have not the means to complete it? When a stranger inquires, why this unfinished Capitol; why these masses of material which burden the ground and obstruct the avenues to these Halls? must we tell him that we have undertaken what we could not finish—the work has been suspended because means are wanted to carry it out? No, sir; I would rather borrow the money that the work might go on to its completion.

If the appropriation were an original one, I would be inclined to lay down strict rules to prescribe the style of the structure, and the extent of the expenditure. But as this is declared the last appropriation required to finish the Capitol, I will change my vote, and support the appropriation proposed by the Senate. If we refuse to make this last appropriation now, this costly structure will retain its present ragged appearance, the streets and public grounds will remain obstructed with valuable material, which now lies strewed around; and it should be recollected that it will cost something to preserve exposed portions of the building, and to protect the marble and valuable materials.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by J. B. HENRY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed sundry bills.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The original appropriation was for $1,000,000; and there was a belief that that sum would complete the building, inclusive of the decorations. The Senate have put in an appropriation for $750,000; and I am now told that every dollar of that sum will be required, not regarding the interior of the building at all. Therefore the gentleman's object will be accomplished by this Senate amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Very well, then, the following amendment will not be objected to:

Add as a proviso, the following:

Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended on the interior painting and decoration of the Capitol.

Mr. SICKLES. Is that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I take an appeal from that decision.

Mr. GARTRELL. I would like to hear some reason for the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. It changes existing law.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would like to know how it changes existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the universal practice of the committee to rule out all amendments which propose changing existing laws.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there any existing law in relation to this appropriation? I say there is none at all.

Mr. SICKLES. The manner in which the money is to be expended is provided for by existing law.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" it was put, and decided in the negative.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled, and the amendment was received.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I deem it to be my duty to say, as I said before, that I have no objection to this appropriation, or to any other appropriation necessary to finish this or any other building of this Government; but I do think it necessary to stop this decoration, and we ought to make appropriations only to finish the building. Let us have some time for reflection, that we may ascertain how we may best decorate the Capitol, and imprint some portion of our history upon it that may go down to future ages. We can do that at some future time, and I hope the House will sustain the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to propose an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Another amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. SICKLES. I understand that the money appropriated by the Senate amendment is to be chiefly expended on the other wing of the Capitol—for the completion of that portion of the Capitol to be occupied by the coordinate branch of Congress. Now, sir, if at that end of the Capitol they have no wish to impose a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation, as to interior decoration or otherwise, I think it is officious in us, and it is going further than we ought to go, to impose here a limitation upon the manner in which their rooms—either the Senate Chamber or the Senate committee-rooms—should be decorated.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I would like to know where the gentleman gets his information that this appropriation is to be expended in any one particular portion of this Capitol.

Mr. SICKLES. It is for the Capitol extension, and it must be obvious to my colleague that it is not to be expended in the interior decoration of this Hall, for we are occupying it, and the interior decoration of the Hall is completed, or nearly so. It is not to be expended in the interior decoration of rooms pertinent to this Hall, for they are completed, or nearly so, and it is too late to impose such a limitation upon the interior decoration of this wing of the building, for they are in such a state of forwardness that to stop them would be a waste of the public money. In the other end of the Capitol these decorations are scarcely begun, especially so far as the Senate Chamber is concerned. The Senate have passed this amendment without any limitation or restriction, and I think it is not our business to put in such limitations here.

The question now being upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York,

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. TAYLOR, of New York, and BOYCE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 67.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I offer the following amendment to the Senate amendment:

Provided, That no part of the same shall be expended for paintings or statuary.

Mr. LETCHER. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. MAYNARD. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is the same question of order that was raised before. The committee has decided it on another amendment of the same general character, overruling the decision of the Chair that it was not in order. It seems to me that this comes within the category, although it is an amendment of an entirely different character, so far as relates to the limitation sought to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would rule the amendment to be not in order but for the committee reversing the decision of the Chair before. Yielding to that decision, the Chair entertains it.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that this Capitol is eventually to become a vast museum of art, in which paintings and statuary will be the two prominent features. Already has a small commencement been made. My object in proposing this amendment is that the art decorations of this building shall not be provided for till the building itself shall be completed; and that then they shall be the work of American skill and American genius, illustrating not only American history and American scenery, but also the progress of American art. Now, if we simply wanted to fill up this building with fine painting and fine statuary, we would at once send a commission to Europe, and buy up all the best pictures and finest statues we could get. But that is not the object or purpose which, as it seems to me, we ought to aim at.

To illustrate. It has been proposed, and that, too, in high quarters, that we should submit one of the panels of the new Capitol to the pencil of a distinguished French battle painter, Horace Vermet, because it is said that he excels all other battle painters in the world; and it is suggested that he shall be allowed to take as a subject some of the fields of the Revolution, where American and French valor combined was superior to the prowess of Great Britain. I would like to inquire of gentlemen what sort of a picture that would probably be? A French painter—painting what? Why, painting, of course, French valor and French chivalry. Where do you suppose, in such a picture as that, would French soldiers stand, and where would stand the poor American, with his rough accoutrements and his rough arms, and his awkward want of discipline, and his deficiency in all those trappings that go to make up the glitter of war? Why, you would have a painting which, regarded as a matter of history, would tell all coming time that the victories of the Revolution were gained by French soldiers and French valor. When man paints the picture, the lion is apt to appear second best in the fight. And when men come here in after days, and admire one of the paintings—for possibly it might be the most beautiful—our children would be obliged to confess that it was not an American work, but the work of a French master. I would save them this mortification.

It may be that American artists are not equal to the artists of the Old World; but at least they are such as we have. They are the best we have; and we will preserve, or we ought to preserve, their works, the creations of their skill and genius, so that, in after times, the state of art in the various stages of our history may be known. I should be sorry to think that this building was to be filled with works of art within the next fifty years. I would have these niches kept empty till subjects and masters were found worthy to fill them. There is time enough; no need of haste. We are still, I hope, in the early stages of our national history. At any rate, I will act upon the presumption and the belief that it is to run on for centuries to come. I would go on spending money in completing the architecture of the building, and leave its decorations to time. Art is a thing which must grow. It results from the demands of the public taste, and can be created in no other way. It is not a commercial commodity. It is the combined product of individual genius and general cultivation. To send out an order for a beautiful statue or beautiful picture would be, to my mind, almost as unreasonable as to give an order for an epic poem, or an eloquent speech. In this view, I have offered the amendment, that we may have the building completed before we proceed to decorate it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There can be no possible use in the adoption of the amendment by the House. The amount originally asked for this work, and which was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, was $1,000,000. The Senate, in the outset, inserted a provision similar to that proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee. Subsequently they reduced the amount of the appropriation to $750,000, for the very express purpose of avoiding any difficulty that might arise in regard to the decoration. There can, therefore, be no necessity for the amendment, as the $750,000 will necessarily be applied to the completion of the structure, and not to ornamenting the walls. I concur with the gentleman from Tennessee that we are not in a condition at this particular time to decorate these Halls. The condition of the public Treasury, the commerce and condition of the country, and many other reasons, might be assigned why it would be proper to limit the appropriation, and to direct, by legislative authority, that no part of it shall be used for the purpose to which the gentleman has referred, if there were any danger of its being done. But there is no earthly danger of it, because the whole amount of the appropriation will be needed for the building itself, and no part of it will be used for the paintings descriptive of our revolutionary history, to which the gentleman has alluded. I hope, therefore, that we shall dispose of this question, and that gentlemen will be satisfied that the money will be used as I have indicated, and applied entirely to the structure itself. The whole question has been considered by the Senate, and the Senate was satisfied that the $750,000 would be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I have no doubt that the $750,000 will be required to finish the building; but if that be true, what objection is there to the amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The only objection to it is, that it clogs and embarrasses the passage of the bill, and only affords opportunity for gentlemen to get off speeches here in opposition to Captain Meigs. Gentlemen who are opposed to Captain Meigs, and wish him supplanted, take occasion, in reference to this appropriation, to express their disapprobation in regard to the conduct of that officer—a faithful one, in my judgment, and one who has been attacked by various individuals, and from various quarters, for the reason that he has taken care of the public funds, and has not permitted these individuals who assail him to fasten themselves upon the public Treasury, and be supported out of the people's money. The $750,000 will be applied, as I have said, to the completion of the building. I have no doubt that it will be properly applied; and therefore I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. With the permission of the gentleman, I wish to disclaim any unkind feeling, personal or otherwise, towards Captain Meigs, for I have none. I believe that he is a good officer, and prompt and attentive in the discharge of his duties. I have not one word to say against him; and my amendment was not offered with a view of animadverting upon him.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am very glad to hear it, for he is justly entitled to your good opinion. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SICKLES. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee to modify his amendment by adding to it the words: "except in payment for work already ordered and now being performed." The manifest justice of that will be apparent to the gentleman.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am unwilling to accept that modification, simply because I do not know what has been ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is there an amendment to the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is the Senate amendment, and there is an amendment to that pending.

Mr. SICKLES. I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee that all the sculpture now being done is being done by American artists, and the result of his amendment will be that they will get no pay.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the Senate amendment being the original text, an amendment to an amendment is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided in conformity with the decision made by the committee, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] was in the chair, when the question arose, and was decided by the committee after discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to have the decision reversed, as it is not in accordance with the judgment of the present occupant of the Chair.

Mr. STANTON. I know the practice has been frequently otherwise in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. That is so, and the other practice would conform to the opinion of the present occupant of the Chair; but the decision of the gentleman from Indiana, when in the chair some days since, was sustained by a very full vote of the House, and the Chair, therefore, conformed its decision to that ruling of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I withdraw the appeal, but I desire to place myself correctly on the record with regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, and I ask one moment's indulgence for that purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to any debate.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. The gentleman always objects to information, because he has got none.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to gentlemen who are always disturbing the House.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I call for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were not ordered.

The committee divided; and the Chairman reported—ayes twenty-four, a further count not being demanded.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRANCH. I move to reduce the appropriation from $750,000 to $200,000.

Mr. Chairman, my reason for making the motion is this: while Congress declares to the country that it cannot carry on public works in any section of the country—that works under contract, even, must be suspended—$200,000 is enough to expend in one year upon this structure. I submit whether we can justify ourselves to our constituents or to the country, in appropriating such large sums for this Capitol and the Washington aqueduct, while we are suspending public works of great importance in the North and South, the East and West? I am not opposed to their completion. I want to see them finished, and in a manner creditable to the country, and justified by its wealth and power. It is not my object to stint appropriations for the Capitol, but I do think, sir, that under existing circumstances $200,000 is enough to be expended on it in one year, and I will not vote for any bill that contains an appropriation of $750,000 for it. My vote may be unnecessary. These bills may pass without it. I may be wrong in my judgment, for I am fallible like other men; nevertheless, sir, it is my conviction that unless other works are to have something out of the Treasury—unless works gone on with for years are completed—I cannot vote for this appropriation for the Capitol.

Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to engage in a discussion as to the decorations of this structure. I am no judge of them. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] says that this is to be a great museum of art. Not so do I care to look at it altogether. I desire that it may be a great temple of American patriotism, American eloquence, and American wisdom. Instead of battle scenes of the past emblazoned upon these panels, I care more to see these seats occupied by men of wisdom and sound statesmanship. Instead of illustrations of American and French achievements in the past painted upon the walls, let us seek rather to illustrate the future history of our country by the magnitude of the deeds originated here, and by the prosperity that shall flow from the acts of those who shall fill these Halls. If we shall do our duty, and those who come after us shall do their duty, neither the brush nor the chisel will be needed to perpetuate the glories of the Republic. Let them rather follow than precede the great events that are to originate here.

The amount proposed by my amendment will be sufficient to finish the portions of this building which are needed for practical use. We are in possession of the Representatives Hall; and it will be seen, by going into the other wing, that the Senate Chamber is nearly ready for occupancy. For $200,000, then, every portion of this building needed for the purposes of legislation can be completed. What need is there for pressing the building forward with such haste? Are there not other works which demand our attention? Are there not works which need our help in every section of the Union? Why, then, take all the money from the Treasury to hurry on this building? Is there any absolute necessity for its completion this year, or next year? I see none. And it is usually regarded as most judicious not to erect so massive a structure with so much rapidity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. I concur in the views which have been presented by my friend from North Carolina, and I would cheerfully go with him to accomplish the purpose which he so much desires, if it were possible for me to do so in view of the obligations which we are under by virtue of public contracts which have been made with certain parties in reference to the completion of this Capitol. I am aware that the gentleman would not be willing to repudiate a single debt which we have contracted in reference to this or any other national work. Contracts have been entered into for supplying materials to carry on this work; and while it has not been my purpose to increase the expenditures of this Government under the present revulsion in our commercial affairs; yet I would tax the utmost credit of this country rather than repudiate a single dollar which our public officers, under authority of law, have contracted to pay. Ships have been built, I will inform my friend, for the purpose of delivering here materials for this work. It would require more than two hundred thousand dollars to pay the damages which these contractors would insist that the United States should pay for the failure of the Government to comply with its contract.

I would be as much delighted as any man to see both Halls of Congress occupied by men of the most wisdom and talent that this country can command. I would rejoice to see here once more, upon these honored seats, such men as Calhoun, Clay, and Webster. With such men as these, we ought to have a Government both pure and powerful, a statesmanship of the highest order, and all that makes a nation great and renowned. While I would be glad of all this, yet that is not the question now before us. Shall we comply with our contracts? It is to that we must address ourselves. The extension of the nation's Capitol has been commenced; whether wisely or unwisely, is not now for us to judge. Were it an original question, I would exert my influence to prevent such an enormous expenditure of money; but, sir, it is now too late; we cannot, if we would, retrace our steps; we must complete the work, let the cost be what it may; and when done, it will do honor both to the architect and to our country.

I, for one, am willing to vote not only $750,000, but $1,000,000 for the purpose of meeting our engagements if so much shall be necessary. But, sir, the Senate amendment has been well considered in the other branch of Congress, and they are satisfied that to complete these structures will require this whole amount, without any reference to decoration. If we shall therefore refuse to appropriate, we shall be violating existing contracts which have been entered into; and in that view of the question I hope the committee will refuse to strike out the $750,000. If they do that, we shall have claims presented here, year after year, for damages arising from breach of contracts made by public officers.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BRANCH; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GARNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$150,000." I concur entirely with what has been said by my friend from North Carolina, but my special object is to protest against the doctrine avowed by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. CRAWFORD.] He takes the position that contracts have been made, and therefore we are bound to comply with them. I desire to ask him whether a single reform has been attempted, or a reduction of expenses proposed this session, but some existing contracts have been urged to defeat it? I have not yet heard a single reduction proposed, where there has not been a contract lurking in ambush to defeat it. Now, sir, there is no law authorizing these contracts. There was a definite sum appropriated to continue the Capitol, and Mr. Meigs, or his subordinates, had no right to go beyond that sum. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to what appeared in the newspapers some time ago. It was a notice from Captain Meigs to the workmen upon the Capitol extension that they could no longer be employed, because the appropriation was exhausted, and that he had no right to incur liabilities beyond the appropriation. And yet the gentleman from Georgia talks about contracts. A number of the workmen were dismissed upon that occasion, and I commend Captain Meigs for the notice, because it was one of the few symptoms of a desire upon the part of the officers of the Government to comply with the laws regulating expenditures under their charge.

I wish to say, further, that I consider the whole extension an extravagant failure. Take this Hall, for instance. Here is a room for business; a Hall for practical legislation. And what is it? An exhausted receiver; a sarcophagus for the living; a place shut out from the open air of heaven. Here we are inclosed in a vault, breathing a poisonous atmosphere, and suffering the close heat of an oven. What is it all for? Do you know that after all this extravagant extension of the Capitol, our committees and our clerks and other officers say there is not room enough to accommodate them? Why? Because this Hall has been made too large; its size was not calculated for the benefit of members in doing business, but to accommodate five thousand spectators in the galleries. In other words, the vulgar idea of modern improvement, as exemplified in this Capitol, is to erect a circus where five thousand spectators can be brought together.

Again, what is the style of the adornment of this Hall? It is gingerbread and tinsel work. The attempt to defend it by talking of the harmony of colors and the polychromic style, is absurd. It is unjust to that style, which it does not illustrate, but caricatures. Congress ought to cut down the appropriation to a sum merely sufficient to keep the work alive until we have time to revise the whole plan.

And then there is the ventilation of this House.

This plan of ventilation without windows was tried, as I am told, in the new palace at Westminster, and the result was they had to change the plan and knock windows in the sides.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that the advertisement to which he has alluded has reference entirely to the laborers employed about the Capitol; and I apprehend the gentleman has never taken the trouble to read the contracts which had been entered into between Mr. Guthrie and certain other parties, to deliver materials out of which this Capitol and other public works have to be completed. I announce to this House that there is a contract entered into between Mr. Guthrie and certain other parties for delivering, in this city, certain materials, to be paid for upon delivery; and any less sum than that proposed in the Senate amendment will be insufficient to meet those contracts. Upon this statement, I leave the matter with the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Under what law, or color of law, was this contract made by Secretary Guthrie?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not remember. There have been three contracts made—two, at least—by the Secretary of the Treasury, under some authority—perhaps a resolution of Congress. That is my impression.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Such contracts are in existence now, but there is no law authorizing them.

The amendment offered by Mr. GARNETT was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move to increase the amount $100,000, merely for the purpose of making an observation. Gentlemen upon both sides of the House have spoken about the public works here and elsewhere being carried on by contract, of the appropriations being exhausted, and of the necessity of making an additional appropriation to relieve the Government from damages. The Secretary of the Treasury, as you, sir, are aware, sent to the Committee of Ways and Means an application for appropriations for public works beyond the amount asked by his annual estimates. The only ground suggested for such application was that the works had been progressing with uncommon rapidity, on account of the low price of materials and labor, and that the Department had made contracts which they were bound to fulfill under penalties for damages.

Now, sir, with the exception of but one or two cases, I believe, all the laws authorizing the building of post offices, custom-houses, and even this Capitol extension, resolve themselves into mere appropriations of so much money to accomplish the purpose. I wish now to ask gentlemen who have spoken about contracts, where they find a law for making a contract beyond the limit of the amount of money appropriated? There is no law, which I know of, on the statute-books, which anywhere authorizes it; and there is the law of 1820 which distinctly, and in terms, forbids it. The law to which I call attention, is the act of 1st May, 1820, which directs that "no contract shall hereafter be made by the Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or of the Department of War, or of the Navy, except under a law authorizing the same"—that is, a law authorizing the head of the Department to make the particular contract referred to—"or under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment." When, therefore, any Department comes before us, and speaks about the existence of a contract and the necessity of an additional appropriation to meet it, in the absence of a specific law authorizing it to make that particular contract, I say it is a confession on its part of its own violation of the law. I suppose there is scarcely one instance where there has been anything like an authority vested in either Department to make a contract, or to carry on any one of these public works beyond the extent of the money appropriated from year to year for that purpose. There is, therefore, no pressure upon us because of contracts unfulfilled; but, if the contract exist, and there be no law to authorize it, and the money is expended, the contract itself is illegal and void as to the residue.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I rise to oppose the amendment, and to explain the remark which I made in regard to Captain Meigs. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRAWFORD] seems to think that gentlemen here have moved amendments for the purpose of getting off speeches against Captain Meigs. I do not know whether the gentleman referred to me: but I was the only gentleman who mentioned the captain's name in debate. If he referred to me, I take this opportunity to assure the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. I moved the amendment in good faith, and am responsible to my constituents, not the gentleman. I have no unkind feeling to Captain Meigs. I believe him to be a highly honorable man, and I would not utter a word reflecting on his character or integrity. I believe him to be perfectly competent for every branch of his business as an engineer. But I do think—and I refer the country to the illustration we have in this Capitol—that he is totally unfit to direct the decorations of the Capitol. That, however, is not intended as a reflection on his character as a gentleman or an officer. I esteem him as much as any gentleman; but I do not admire his appreciation of the fine arts. If it could be provided, that no portion of this $750,000 is to be expended in such work, I would not object to the appropriation; but I do not believe that such would be the case. I agree with the gentleman that we should fulfill our contracts. I think that $250,000, or perhaps $500,000, will be sufficient for this. For the decorations of the Capitol, we ought to postpone till some other time.

The question was taken on Mr. DAVIS's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move to increase the appropriation one dollar. I do it for the purpose of making a very short reply to my friend from Maryland. The only law on which these Government buildings are constructed, is a law of 1793, which located the seat of Government in the city of Washington. There is no specific act for any of these buildings. The law is a sort of organic law; and, by virtue of it, we might continue to add to the Capitol till it would be five miles long. It has been the practice of Congress, when it makes an appropriation for the extension or continuation of a public building, to do so on the submission of a general plan; and that plan is generally of a character that compels the Secretary to make his contracts for materials. For instance: if an appropriation of $100,000 be made to keep men in employment, and if the Secretary could only make a contract with those who supply the marble to furnish materials to that extent, there would be a loss of one half. But he makes his contract on the plans submitted to and approved by Congress, on the supposition that the appropriation is to be a continuous one. If he did not do so, the whole plan might be a failure.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the act of the 31st of August, 1852, which provides specifically for the mode by which contracts shall be made for work and materials in the extension of the Capitol. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Maryland were both mistaken in saying that there was no law in existence authorizing the extension of the Capitol.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. That law did not authorize it.

Mr. CLEMENS. It prescribes the mode of making appropriations. It points out specifically the mode of advertisement, and provides the mode and manner in which the contracts shall be made, and the parties with whom the contracts shall be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania amounts very much to this: that when a law is passed which cannot be executed without violating it, the Secretary of the Treasury is at liberty to violate it. Suppose the plan for the extension of the Capitol, or the construction of any great work, were not a thing made at the Department, but incorporated in the law—

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Will the gentleman permit me to state what I did mean to say? I meant to say, not that the Secretary could violate the contract, but that the plan itself was part of the contract, and there was a continuous appropriation to carry out the contract.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. That is all very true; but still it does not affect this one question, whether there is any authority in the Department to make a contract beyond the limits of the appropriation? When Congress, for instance, appropriated $100,000 to build an extension of the Capitol, on such plan as the President might direct, that justified the President in accepting the plan in accordance with the extent and magnificence of the existing work. But when he had determined on the plan, there would have been authority for him to make that building according to that plan, in one contract, beyond the amount of $100,000, then appropriated. He had a right to make the plan. He had a right to make contracts for the carrying out of that plan as far as he could to the extent of the $100,000 appropriated. If it was an improvident mode of appropriation, if a greater amount ought to have been appropriated, then it was the fault of Congress in not making it, and at their door lay the responsibility.

The fact that the work could not be done as cheaply by separate contracts as by one continuous contract—by a contract covering $100,000 as by one covering $3,000,000—was a matter not submitted to his discretion. It rested in the discretion of Congress; and if Congress saw fit, whether from carelessness or perversity, to waste the people's money, it was no part of the President's business to make them be economical, according to his ideas of propriety. If there was a law authorizing the President to make a contract to construct the whole building, then, whether Congress appropriated the money for it or not, that contract would be binding; but when we merely direct that the building shall be constructed, and appropriate $100,000, then, from year to year, the contracts must, under penalty of violating the law of 1820, stop at the limits of the appropriations. The contracts may be as large as the plan, but they must contain a provision that they shall not be obligatory beyond the amount of the existing appropriations, or they are illegal and void. I specify the Capitol, merely by way of example. In other words, in the absence of a law authorizing a specific contract, there can be no such thing as a contract on the part of the Government which could bind the Government beyond the appropriation to the extent of a single cent. The act of 1798, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred, has, and can have, no relation to the subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be expended in the embellishment of any part of the Capitol extension with sculpture and painting, unless the designs for the same shall have undergone the examination of a committee of distinguished artists, not to exceed three in number, to be selected by the President; and that the designs which said committee shall accept, shall also receive the subsequent approval of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress.

The committee will recognize this as the same amendment the committee adopted at my instance before this bill was sent to the Senate. I came into the Hall just as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRAWFORD] was saying that the investigation by the Senate had established the fact that the whole $750,000 would be wanted for the architectural part of the extension. For one, I am willing to give $750,000, if it is required, to execute the architectural design of this building; but I am not willing to give a cent for the embellishment of this building by paintings or sculpture, unless it shall be covered by this condition. If there be no design except that which the gentleman from Georgia intimates, then my amendment will not be in his way, or in the way of the architect of this building.

I have no desire, sir, to attack the engineer who has charge of this work. Although I do not consider him a Phidias, or a Michael Angelo, I do not want to attack him. But I do not want to see the work of embellishment progress as it has gone on. The House has already raised a committee for the purpose of considering a memorial which I presented in regard to the propriety of encouraging the native artists of this country, by giving them an opportunity to exhibit their genius upon the Capitol. I trust there will be no opposition to the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. We have had considerable debate upon this item, and as I have already stated that not one dollar of this appropriation will be used for the purpose of embellishment, I hope the amendment will be adopted by the committee. It can do no possible harm.

The question was taken on Mr. MARSHALL's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to propose an amendment before the question is taken on the Senate amendment. It is as follows:

For whitewashing the interior of the Hall of the House of Representatives, $10,000.

I have no speech to make in favor of it. I think that gentlemen have the evidence before them that it requires some alteration and some whitewashing. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee, but I think the amount is too large.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman had better refer the whitewashing business to one of the select committees. [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Thirteenth amendment:

On page 11, line twenty-three, strike out lines twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven; and also lines one, two, three, four, and five, on page 12, as follows: "For the purchase of fifty copies of the Diplomatic Correspondence of the United States from 1776 to 1783, in six volumes, at five dollars per volume, to supply such States and Territories as have not been furnished with them, and such of our missions abroad as have not been heretofore furnished with them, the sum of $1,500."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourteenth amendment:

After line two hundred and fifty-eight insert: "For defraying the expenses of a certain party of Omaha Indians who visited the city of Washington during the months of February and March, 1852, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior—being the balance of a former appropriation, which was carried to the surplus fund on the 30th June, 1851—$335."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifteenth amendment:

Before line one of section two insert: "For payment to the Secretary of the Senate of the sums paid by him to the representatives of Senators Bell, Butler, and Rusk, under the resolution of the Senate of the 10th of March, 1858, directing the payment of the same, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to the representatives of the said Senators respectively, $2,589 04."

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend by adding the following:

For payment to the widows of the Hon. John G. Montgomery, the Hon. Samuel Brenton, and the Hon. James Lockhart, members elected to the House of Representatives for the present Congress, but now deceased, a salary compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, to the widows of the two first-named members elect, three months each, and to the widow of the last-named member, six months, $3,000.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. This amendment is a violation of an existing law, and is certainly not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order, and rules the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The amendment of the Senate is also a violation of existing law.

Mr. NIBLACK. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw his question of order, and allow this amendment to go with that of the Senate to the committee of conference, which, I suppose, will be appointed on this bill.

Mr. LETCHER. No, sir; I think this bill is bad enough as it stands, with the Senate amendments, and I do not want to make it any worse.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate, on the ground that it is a violation of the compensation act. The fourth section of the compensation act, approved August 16, 1856, is as follows:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in the event of the death of a Senator or Representative or Delegate, prior to the commencement of the first session of the Congress, he shall be neither entitled to mileage or compensation; and in the event of death after the commencement of any session, his representatives shall be entitled to receive so much of his compensation, computed at the rate of $3,000 per annum, as he may not have received, and any mileage that may have actually accrued and be due and unpaid."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania submit an amendment?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I believe I have the right to discuss the amendment in the hour to which I am entitled to close debate. Now, sir, if this amendment had originated in the House, it would not have been in order under our rules; but the Constitution gives the Senate the right to amend the appropriation bills, and they have not the same stringent rules in force there. This amendment, therefore, comes to us in order.

It seems that during the present session of Congress, the Senate passed a resolution authorizing this money to be paid to reimburse the Secretary of the Senate for the amount paid by him to the legal representatives of three deceased Senators. The Committee of Ways and Means thought the payment was a violation of the existing law, and therefore recommended a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate. The true construction of the compensation law is, that the widow or heirs of a member of Congress, who may die one month before the meeting of the first session of Congress, shall be cut off from receiving any compensation whatever. It may be an unjust provision. I think the law is defective in that respect. But the law is clear and distinct upon this point. This appropriation is directly in conflict with that law; and the Committee of Ways and Means are of the opinion that we had better live up to the law. They do not think this is the proper place to change that law, and they, therefore, recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate. I will add, that if this amendment of the Senate be concurred in, the motion of the gentleman from Indiana will be precisely in point. It makes provision in the case of deceased Senators, and if payment is to be made in favor of Senators who died previous to the first session of Congress, the same should be the case as regards deceased members.

Mr. NIBLACK. It may, perhaps, be not inappropriate that I should say that there is now a resolution before the Committee on Mileage, which they will report upon soon, meeting all these cases.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I think the reform would be a good one, but inasmuch as it is not now the law, I object to the amendment.

Mr. KEITT. I have only a word to say on this matter. I was as much opposed to changing the compensation act as the gentleman from Pennsylvania or anybody else, but I think he assumes in his argument the question in issue. The first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress was the first session held after the expiration of the Thirty-Fourth Congress—the first session held after the 4th of last March. The President of the United States did call the Senate in extra session. Those whose terms expired on the 4th of March went out at that time, and the incoming members came in at that time and were sworn in. Was that a continuation of the old session? If so, how did you get rid of the old Senators and put new ones in?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The phraseology of the act is "the first session of Congress." A session of the Senate alone is not a session of Congress, but a session of the Senate.

The question was taken upon concurring in the Senate amendment, and it was not concurred in.

Sixteenth amendment:

For continuing the extension of the Treasury building, $500,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to say that the Senate amendments, sixteen to twenty-two inclusive, embrace the custom-houses, which we had formerly before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, if it is the pleasure of the committee, they may as well be considered together.

Mr. BRANCH. I ask for a vote, severally, upon the amendments.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is there any other provision for the Treasury building?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. There is none. I will repeat, once for all, that the estimates for these matters were not sent in to us by the Secretary of the Treasury until towards the close of the session. They were sent to the Committee of Ways and Means. We had already passed over the bill to which they properly belonged. The Committee of Ways and Means rejected them as amendments to their own bill. They were presented when this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The committee did not sustain them, or, if they did, the House did not, and they were rejected. The bill then went to the Senate, and the Senate adopted them as an amendment to the bill. The amendment is precisely what the House voted down before.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I propose to amend the Senate amendment by striking out "$500,000," and inserting "$250,000."

I offer the amendment in the hope that the House will concur to the extent of my amendment in the amendment of the Senate. I understand, from official sources, that there are contracts now existing for the supply of materials, founded upon the expectation that some appropriation would be made. I presume that the sum I have indicated will cover that, and keep a moderate force at work upon the building. It is with that view that I offered the amendment; and I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. STANTON. It will be observed, according to the statement of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that this is one of a series of appropriations amounting to $1,700,000, as I understand, including various custom-houses, light-houses, and things of that sort. I desire to say, and hope the committee will understand, that it is not absolutely necessary, if this amendment is adopted or rejected, that all the other amendments which are proposed should follow it. There is no gentleman here who doubts that the Treasury building is to be completed. There are various propositions in this amendment which will require, in all, $1,700,000 for useless custom-houses, and things of that sort, which I hope never will be completed. It seems to me that it would be wise for the House to adopt such of them as are indispensable.

I therefore hope and desire that the committee will adopt the amendment now under consideration, and not suffer it, by going to a committee of conference, to carry after it an appropriation of $1,700,000; for that will be the result if this amendment is rejected.

Mr. EUSTIS. I think the gentleman from Ohio labors under a misapprehension. This amendment, as I understand, is separate from the other amendments and provisions of the bill which I had the honor to offer some time since. The only amendment now before the committee is the amendment of the Senate making appropriations for the Treasury-building extension.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH. I have an amendment, which I desire to have read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That the sums hereby appropriated for public buildings shall be expended after the sums heretofore appropriated for public buildings have been expended, and not before.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Does not that change the existing law? I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina is not in order here.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment, and it was concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

For continuing the work on the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana, $300,000.

Mr. STANTON. I would inquire what is the state of the civil war down there?

Mr. EUSTIS. That is a matter on which we are not perfectly informed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the question of civil war in New Orleans is not in order.

Mr. EUSTIS. It has not much to do with the question. I hope the committee will give us the money for the custom-house, and we can settle the war afterwards. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. JOHN COCHRANE and BUFFINGTON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 40.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Eighteenth amendment:

For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charleston, South Carolina, $300,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I suggest that the vote be taken on all these amendments in gross. They rest on the same basis.

Mr. MILES. I hope the vote on this amendment will be taken separately, as was the case with the New Orleans custom-house.

The question was taken; and the amendment concurred in.

Nineteenth amendment:

For the completion of custom-houses at the following places, namely: at Ellsworth, Maine, $2,000; at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, $30,000; at Bristol, Rhode Island, including fencing and grading, $5,000; at New Haven, Connecticut, $60,000; at Oswego, New York, $10,000; at Plattsburg, New York, $10,000; at Newark, New Jersey, $10,000; at Norfolk, Virginia, $30,000; at Pensacola, Florida, $5,000; at St. Louis, Missouri, $20,000; at Mobile, Alabama, including fencing and paving, $30,000; at Galena, Illinois, $10,000; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $10,000; and for annual repairs at custom-houses, $15,000.

Mr. HATCH. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, if, in his judgment, the public service should require it, to purchase a suitable site, and erect thereon a fire-proof building, in the city of Buffalo, State of New York, for the uses of a custom-house and its Federal offices: Provided, That the cost of said site and construction of said buildings shall not, in their aggregate, in any event exceed the amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriations heretofore made for the enlargement of the public building in Buffalo erected for custom-house, post office, United States courts, and steamboat inspectors' board.

I ask the Clerk to read the passage which I have marked in the report on finances, which explains the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order on that amendment. It is entirely new matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to hear the explanation of the amendment. If the Chair understands the matter correctly, money has been appropriated for the erection of certain buildings at Buffalo, and this is a proposition to amend or change that law—I do not know to what extent.

Mr. HATCH. The money has been already appropriated.

The Clerk read the extract from the report on finances, as follows:

Buffalo, New York.

The building designed to be used as a custom-house, post office, and United States court is rapidly drawing to a close, and it is hoped that it will be completed this year. This building is of the same material as the one at Cleveland, and shows remarkably well.

Congress at its last session, after this building was far advanced, made an additional appropriation for enlarging it by the addition of an L. This addition could be made only in one direction, and the price asked for the required land was deemed extortionate, and nothing has yet been done to carry out the wishes of Congress. The original purchased corner lot, one hundred and forty feet by one hundred and twenty-five feet, cost $40,000; the lot offered for the enlargement is not a corner lot, and is thirty-six feet by one hundred and thirty-two feet, and the price asked ($25,000) being more than double the price per superficial foot of the original corner lot. As this enlargement is designed for the custom-house, and as the business of that office can be more conveniently done near to the harbor, (the present site being nearly in the center of the city,) and as a suitable lot can be procured for less than half the sum asked for that adjoining the present site, and a building better suited for the purpose can be put up for less money, I respectfully suggest the propriety of requesting Congress to authorize the change.

Total amount of appropriation.....	$20,800 00
Amount expended to September 30, 1857.....	139,737 11

Balance available for the completion of the work	$151,062 89
--	--------------

Mr. HATCH. I asked that the statement from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury should be read, as it would explain fully the object of the amendment. The last Congress has decided the question of the enlargement in the view I take of this question, and the imperative duty of the Secretary is to carry out that law until Congress shall release him from its obligations or invest him with a further discretion. The commercial men of Buffalo have unanimously asked that the money appropriated for the enlargement should be expended in the purchase of a new site, and one convenient to their business. All there is, then, of this question, is whether this money shall be expended in a manner in conformity to their wishes and commercial convenience, or expended against their wishes and at a point inconvenient for their business. I will not detain the committee by adding statistics to show the necessity for enlarged commercial convenience in Buffalo. No inland city surpasses it in the value of her imports and exports, and but few cities on the sea-board surpass her in the arrival and departures of a lake marine. The registered and enrolled tonnage is something over one hundred and thirty thousand, about one third of all the tonnage of the northern and northwestern lakes. I hope the amendment will pass, as it appropriates no more money; it only proposes to have a past appropriation expended in a manner most advantageous to secure the objects for which the original appropriation was made, and that was to promote the public interests by promoting the convenience of our commercial men.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. The law now in existence provides for the erection of this building at a particular spot. This amendment proposes to transfer the building to another spot. I take this occasion to say, in order to show the rigid economy that the Secretary of the Treasury is now carrying into practice, that we have a little custom-office down at Alexandria.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Do I understand the amendment to have been received as in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet decided upon the amendment. The Chair sustains the question of order, and decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I submit the following amendment:

For the erection of a building suitable for a post office and custom-house at Quincy, Illinois, $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I submit the question of order, that this amendment is to provide for the construction of a new building not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I then submit the following amendment:

For completing the court-house and post office at Springfield, Illinois, $30,000.

I offer this amendment in behalf of my colleague, [Mr. HARRIS,] who is not now present. Fifty thousand dollars have already been appropriated for the purpose of erecting that building; but, from the bids which have been received, at the Department, it has been determined that that sum is not sufficient, and a further appropriation of $50,000 is recommended. The Treasury Department is waiting for a further appropriation before they enter into a contract for the construction of the building.

Mr. LETCHER. I see there has been appropriated $61,000 for a court-house and post office in Springfield. They have expended $6,000 for a site, leaving $55,000 to construct the building with. Well, sir, I think that is enough to build a very respectable court-house and post office.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. There is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which it is stated that the amount appropriated is not sufficient to construct the building, and a further appropriation is recommended. This is a matter in which my colleague feels considerable interest, and I hope it will be allowed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move to strike out "$50,000," and insert "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is, at this time, in order.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Twentieth amendment:

For the completion of marine hospitals at the following places, namely: at Portland, Maine, $3,000; at St. Mark's, Florida, $2,500; at New Orleans, including filling up site, grading, introducing gas and water pipes and fixtures, and fencing, $55,000; at Cincinnati, Ohio, $30,000; at Galena, Illinois, $5,000; and for annual repairs at marine hospitals, $15,000.

Mr. BRANCH. I move to amend that amendment. It provides for public buildings, and I suppose that an amendment regulating the ap-propositions for public buildings is in order. I move to amend by adding the following:

Provided, That the sums hereby appropriated for public buildings shall not be used until sums heretofore appropriated for similar purposes have been expended.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I submit whether that amendment is in order?

Mr. BRANCH. It is to carry out an existing law.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It is extending the existing law.

Mr. BRANCH. It is only extending the appropriations in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair gives it a different construction, and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. BRANCH. I take an appeal from that decision, and I wish to submit a remark or two upon that appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Mr. STANTON. I presume the Chair bases his decision upon the use of the word "similar." If the gentleman should change it to "same," I do not see how the amendment could be out of order.

Mr. BRANCH. That would not answer my purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order; from which decision the gentleman takes an appeal.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" the question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the amendment ruled out of order.

The Senate amendment was then agreed to.

Twenty-first amendment:

Insert:

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the custom-houses at the following places, namely: at Ellsworth, Maine, $3,000; at Bath, Maine, (for furniture alone,) $1,100; at Burlington, Vermont, $4,600; at New Haven, Connecticut, $8,500; at Oswego, New York, $7,300; at Plattsburg, New York, $9,900; at Newark, New Jersey, $5,200; at Alexandria, Virginia, $3,700; at Norfolk, Virginia, $12,000; at Mobile, Alabama, (for furniture alone,) $2,600; at Pensacola, Florida, $2,500; at St. Louis, Missouri, $14,600; at Louisville, Kentucky, $3,900; at Cleveland, Ohio, $7,100; at Galena, Illinois, $3,700; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $7,700.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if any estimates have been made for these various improvements?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. There have been estimates made for every item in this amendment. They were submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means at a very late day of the session. It was owing to a misapprehension that they were not sent in at an earlier day.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I was not aware of the existence of the estimates, and that was the reason that I made the inquiry. I was seeking information with a view of shaping my course.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following amendment:

After the following: "Plattsburg, New York, $9,900," add:

Three thousand dollars of which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for purchasing adjoining land for the custom house site at Plattsburg, which land is particularly described in the memorial of the trustees and citizens of said town.

Mr. LETCHER. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend, by striking out the words, "fencing, grading, paving, and," so that it will read:

For furnishing the custom-houses, &c.

It seems that these custom-houses can be used very well as they now are, if furnished, without entailing upon the country the expense at this time of grading and inclosing the grounds. I think that expense can be well dispensed with until better times. If we put them in a condition that they can be used, that ought to be satisfactory for the present.

Mr. ARNOLD. The appropriation is for fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing; and the whole amount appropriated is only about one hundred thousand dollars for all. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not be agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment:

Insert:

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the marine hospitals at the following places, namely: at Burlington, Vermont, $3,400; at Chelsea, Massachusetts, (out buildings, grading, and fencing,) $19,700; at St. Mark's, Florida, $1,900; at Detroit, Michigan, $7,500; at Galena, Illinois, $3,800; at Burlington, Iowa, $4,100.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose an amendment, to come in at the end of the twenty-second amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the said sums for public buildings, enumerated in the Senate's amendment, from sixteen to twenty-two inclusive, shall be raised by a loan, to be negotiated by the Secretary of the Treasury, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent., and redeemable at any time within ten years.

It seems to me that, inasmuch as we have gone on and appropriated nearly eighteen hundred thousand dollars for these improvements, and for the completion of public buildings, it is but right and proper that the House should take upon itself the burden of raising the means necessary to accomplish these objects. Now, sir, we have heard a good deal of complaint about the $15,000,000 loan, which was not estimated for with reference to the appropriations embraced in these Senate amendments.

Mr. HOWARD. Was not the $15,000,000 loan estimated for with reference to those amendments of which the gentleman is now speaking? They were recommended by the same Secretary.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not imagine that it was so estimated for.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia in order?

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman is too late with his question of order.

Mr. BLAIR. It is soon enough, however, to save the gentleman a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LETCHER. How did the gentleman get the floor to raise a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to raise the point of order, and the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. LETCHER. Do I understand that the gentleman does not wish to provide the means for paying this appropriation?

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

Insert the following:

To enable the Library Committee to complete the payment for a series of portraits of the Presidents of the United States, contracted for under authority of Congress, and for framing the same, $5,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This is an installment due under a law of Congress providing for the painting the portraits of the Presidents of the United States, and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

Insert:

For paying the expenses of the commissioners appointed, in pursuance of the joint resolution of the 23d of February, 1857, to inquire into and test the processes of J. T. Barclay for preventing the counterfeiting of the coins of the United States, in addition to the sum appropriated by said resolution, $800.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in this amendment. It was for services rendered to the Government in reference to detecting the counterfeiting of coin.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-fifth amendment:

For printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty Third and Thirty Fourth Congresses, and paper for the same, $80,000.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives during the Thirty Third and Thirty Fourth Congresses; and for engraving, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, $123,000.

Twenty-seventh amendment:

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the Thirty Third and Thirty Fourth Congresses; and for engraving, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, $113,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I have a short explanation to make of these amendments. Early in the session the Committee of Ways and Means recommended, through the gentleman who now occupies the chair in this committee, a deficiency bill, and the House disagreed to it. Subsequently a bill was reported to the House omitting everything in relation to books, and subjecting that to the examination of the Committee on Printing. The Joint Committee on Printing, after a careful examination as to how many books could be dispensed with, reported unanimously a resolution requiring the amount of work to be done for which these appropriations are made. In the House, the resolution was sustained by a large majority. Every dollar, therefore, that is appropriated here is to fulfill contracts. The books ordered were reduced to the very lowest point that could possibly be got along with. Both the House and the Senate have concurred in the report of the Joint Committee on Printing, and the Senate have put in these amendments to carry out that report. Unless you wish to repeal the act which was passed the other day, the money must be appropriated.

Mr. NICHOLS. I propose to amend by reducing the amount one dollar. I do it for the purpose of saying to the committee that it makes no difference whether this money is appropriated now or at another time. It must be appropriated, for almost the entire work has been done, and the money is due for it; and I do not suppose that anybody in the House wants to go into practical repudiation. I submitted a report some time ago which cut off every dollar of this work that could be cut off with use or propriety; and the simple question now presented is—will you pay, or not pay, your debts?

The question was taken on the Senate amendments; and they were severally concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the digest of the statistics of manufactures, according to the returns of the seventh census, $35,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

But the work is not to be undertaken except the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that the sum hereinbefore mentioned will complete the work.

Mr. GARNETT. It fell accidentally in my way, Mr. Chairman, to make some inquiry in relation to this subject; and from what I have learned, I think the committee ought to strike out the whole amendment of the Senate. It is but two years till the taking of the next decennial census. These statistics will be published very little in advance of that census, and will be of very little use, except as a standard of comparison with that census. In fact, if it were now published, they would give a very inadequate idea of the present condition of manufactures, being published eight years after the statistics were taken. If instead of publishing this digest now, you delayed the publication until the next decennial census is taken, and then direct them to be published, along with the results of that census, in tabular form, they will show at one glance the comparative condition of manufactures in 1850 and 1860; and the publication will cost nothing, or next to nothing; while, if published now, it will cost from three to five thousand dollars, and will be almost worthless. I therefore submit whether it would not be better to strike out the whole amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH. Is this appropriation to print them, or only to prepare them?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment merely provides for completing the compilation.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was agreed to.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

For making the necessary repairs to the jail in Washington city, and putting venetian blinds to the windows of the same, $240.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The appropriation for the venetian blind is necessary, because the windows of the jail look out upon the public streets, and citizens passing by are insulted by the prisoners, not only in language, but by indecent exposure of the prisoners.

Mr. PEYTON. I move to reduce the appropriation to one dollar, and I will say that I think it is entirely useless to appropriate a solitary dollar to fixing up that old jail. The only thing that can, or ought to be done with it, is to tear it down and build a new one. I went and examined it in company with one of my colleagues on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building is really not fit for a jail. I think it is useless to spend money in fixing it up when you will be compelled to build a new one in a very short time. But for the condition of the Treasury, we should have recommended the building of a new jail at once, and I hope the committee will not appropriate a dollar for this old building.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask for the reading of the letters which I send to the Clerk's desk, which explains the necessity for this appropriation.

The Clerk read the letters, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS,
April 24, 1858.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate's Committee on the District of Columbia of the 21st instant, requesting me to furnish estimates "for making necessary repairs to the jail in Washington city, and for putting venetian blinds before the windows of the same," so as to obstruct the view from the inside of the prison, without excluding the light or ventilation, I respectfully transmit to you herewith an estimate prepared by Edward Clark, Esq., the architect superintending the erection of the Patent Office building.

Mr. Clark accompanied me to the jail, and we made a thorough examination of it, and agreed upon such repairs as in our judgment were necessary to carry out the purposes of the resolution.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. BLAKE, Commissioner.

Hon. A. G. BROWN, Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, April 23, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following as the estimated cost of the outside blinds, and other necessary repairs at the jail in this city.

Blinds to thirty-two windows..... $640
Brickwork, &c. to windows, floors, chimneys, &c.... 200

$840

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

EDWARD CLARK, Architect.

J. B. BLAKE, Esq., Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. PEYTON. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to reduce the appropriation $500. I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that it is proposed here to make an appropriation to repair a prison in the city of Washington, and of propounding the question to the committee, whether we are to appropriate money out of the national Treasury to take care of the criminals of the city of Washington? What connection has it with the administration of the affairs of this Government? What right have we to legislate upon such a subject?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I would remind the gentleman from Texas that Congress is the Legislature of the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that very well.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The county of Washington is the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that also.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. And we appropriated the money to build the jail.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that too; and that is what I am objecting to. We legislate for the city of Washington; but the mistake which runs through all our legislation in regard to it is the supposition that the power of legislating for the city involves the power and necessity of appropriating money. We improve their streets; we construct their water-works; we not only erect the buildings necessary for the public convenience in the city of Washington, but we legislate for the benefit of the people here. We appropriate money for purposes which have no connection whatever with the Government. We should give this city a charter; we should invest them with power to deal with their criminals and punish them as they see proper at their own expense. If they need a prison, let them build a prison; give them authority to do it, but do not call upon the Federal Treasury to defray expenses of this character.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. That jail does not contain a single prisoner except those sent there by the United States, convicted and condemned by judges appointed by the General Government.

Mr. REAGAN. Is there a separate prison for their own convicts?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. No, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. Well, that does not make the case any better.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The gentleman from Texas is aware that the people of this District have no voice at all in this Government. The Congress of the United States legislates for them without their control or consent, and they have to submit to our legislation.

Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to legislate for them in everything that we ought to do; but I protest against this plan of appropriating money for every conceivable object. If they cannot take care of their prisoners, let them turn them loose. It is not our business to take care of them. If a prison is necessary for members of Congress or other officers of the Government, let us build a jail for their benefit; but if the people of Washington want to convict and punish their criminals, let them build a prison for themselves. We can give them the necessary power to do it; but I see no reason why we should build a prison, and take care of convicts for the city of Washington.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The city of Washington have a prison of their own, called the work-house, where they send their prisoners. This jail contains none but prisoners of the United States. The judges are appointed by the authority of the United States; the prisoners are tried by the United States; the jail was built by the United States. This appropriation of $840 is necessary for repairs, and for putting blinds to the windows, not for the convenience of the prisoners, but to keep them from exposing themselves in an unseemly manner to persons passing in the streets. This building was built and is owned by the United States, and is occupied by prisoners of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. Are they held to be prisoners of the United States because they are convicts in the District of Columbia?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Under the laws of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. Precisely; because they are in the District of Columbia, they are convicts of the United States. That is a strange argument. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. NIBLACK. I offer the following amendment:

For the protection of the marine hospital at Evansville, Indiana, from the encroachments of the Ohio river, $7,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Is that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not germane to the amendment of the Senate under consideration, and decides that it is not in order.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

For the extension of the court-house portion of the City Hall so as to provide necessary and suitable accommodations for the several courts of the District of Columbia, including furniture, heating apparatus, inclosure, and other necessary improvements, $30,000: Provided, That no obligation shall be incurred, or contract entered into, which looks to any increased appropriation by the United States for said purpose.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Thirty-first amendment:

To pay the draughtsman employed by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, for drawings and calculations furnished, and incidental expenses defrayed by him during the last and present sessions of Congress, $528.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. I will state that this is an appropriation for a draughtsman employed by the Senate in relation to the public grounds around this Capitol. The Committee of Ways and Means thought this work was not necessary and expedient at this time, and they therefore recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that this gentleman has already made these drawings and plans. The work was ordered by the Senate committee, and he has already performed it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I believe that is the fact; but if the work has been done, it has been done without authority of law.

Mr. MORGAN. It has been done by the authority of the Senate committee who have employed him, and I think it no more than just that he should be paid.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if this work has been useful to the committee? I believe he is a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly; they could not have done anything whatever without it. I think it is a very just claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will merely state that I know this work has been done. I know the gentleman who has been engaged in the work. He was, as has been said, employed by the Senate committee. I see no impropriety whatever in paying this man for the work which has been done.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

For satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts, under the stipulation of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the 9th day of August, in the year 1842, a sum not exceeding $1,493 81 in satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine; and $9,215 13 in satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts; to be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment, made by the Senate, grows out of the treaty relative to the northeastern boundary between the United States and Great Britain. It provides for expenses arising out of what is familiarly known as the Aroostook war. The difficulty arose some years ago. I presume the House is familiar with the facts. The people of Maine and Massachusetts took issue with the people of Canada and the British provinces, and finally involved the Governments of the United States and Great Britain. An invasion followed. A considerable amount of expense was incurred. Subsequently a treaty was negotiated and ratified by the two Governments. In that treaty provision was made that the United States should reimburse to these States the amount of money that they have expended. There is another amendment which will come up presently, growing out of the same war and same issues. Now, the difficulty is to get precisely at the merits of the case in this form. The States of Massachusetts and Maine preferred their claims to the United States; they were recognized, settled, adjusted, and paid. After a number of years the State of Massachusetts presented a balance of an unsettled claim. It may be meritorious, but instead of its being presented to Congress through the regular channels, so that we could examine it, turn to the treaties and laws, and have a report from the Department showing the basis of a settlement, it is put upon the miscellaneous bill as a Senate amendment. We have no facts, no statistics, so that we are at a loss to get at the merits of the case. I am not prepared to say there is no merit in it; but the prima facie evidence is against it; for where these accounts are once settled and adjusted they ought not to be reopened. The Committee of Ways and Means therefore recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that this matter has never been settled. What is reported in this amendment is simply paying in full, claims which have been recognized by Congress heretofore, and paid in part. A letter was communicated to the Senate, as I have been informed, from the Department of State, showing that the items which make up this amount are of the character I have described—that is, are parts of a claim which Congress has already recognized, and of which the proofs had not before been presented. The Government is under a treaty obligation to pay these very expenses, and this appropriation covers them. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not deny that if they are due the Government is bound to pay them. The Department had the facts and reported them to the Senate, and the Senate unanimously, I think, made this appropriation. And, besides, let me state that the States of Maine and Massachusetts did come here early in the session with their claim, and that it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, and they reported unanimously in favor of it; and I have the bill and report in favor of it in my hand. It has passed through a committee in each branch of Congress, and I understood that it was agreed to by the Committee of Ways and Means on Saturday last.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Why did not the Committee on Foreign Affairs report it before?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. They did report some time ago, and their report was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I desire to inquire whether the States of Maine and Massachusetts did not at some former period settle and adjust these claims with the Government of the United States?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Those States were to be indemnified for their expenses and losses, and as fast as they could ascertain and pay them, they have come to Congress, and Congress has uniformly reimbursed them.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Why were they not at that time included in the settlement?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I have already stated. They have been presented at various times, some two, some four, some eight, and some ten years, after the treaty was made. As soon as they were investigated, ascertained, and paid by the State authorities, they have been presented here.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Will there be another claim then, the next year, or at some future time?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I understand that this appropriation embraces all the balances which the States have paid up to this time. Whether there are any other claims for which the States will be liable, and which will be presented here, I do not know, and I do not care. If there have been other expenses and losses which the States are liable to pay, and for which the Government has agreed to indemnify and reimburse them, why then let the Government do it.

The State Department, as I have said, have examined these vouchers; they have stated that they are of the same character that the Government has recognized before, and which have been paid without objection.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to inquire whether this sum mentioned is to reimburse expenses incurred in carrying on this Aroostook war? or whether it is interest on the sum which the State of Maine lost?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It is not for interest. It is for money expended in or on account of the war. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House state in their report, that—

"Part of the money now claimed by the said States is for expenses incurred in the fulfillment of the said fourth article of said treaty, and as the obligation in the article was incumbent on the United States, the committee are of opinion that the United States are bound to pay to the said States the amount expended by them as aforesaid."

"By the fifth article of said treaty, the United States agreed to pay to Maine and Massachusetts all claims for expenses incurred by them theretofore in protecting the disputed territory. The remaining claims of those now presented by Maine and Massachusetts arise under this fifth article, and, in the opinion of the committee, they ought to be paid by the United States."

"Appropriations to the said States, for claims similar to those now presented, and arising under the said treaty, have heretofore been made by Congress, and the validity of the claims has been uniformly recognized by the United States."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to reduce the amount $2,000. I want to make some inquiries about this matter. I understood the gentleman from Maine to state in his remarks, that this sum covered some controversies growing out of land titles.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I stated that Maine and Massachusetts were obliged, under the treaty, to set apart certain lands to the settlers, and that they run through a number of years; and this is intended, in part, to pay the commissioners appointed by the States in virtue of the treaty to carry out that provision.

Mr. LETCHER. As I understand it, these commissioners have been in session for a considerable time. Will the gentleman from Maine inform us how long this commission has been sitting?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. There have been two sittings; I do not know how long they were; I presume the commissioners have not been in session for more than a year, or perhaps not more than six months in all. The gentleman, if he desires, can find the items in a statement from the Department to the committee of the Senate.

Mr. LETCHER. I have been looking there, but do not see the items. I have never seen the items at all, and have been perfectly in the dark in regard to them. I have seen nothing but the general statement made in the Senate, in the progress of the debate, that this claim was "all right." That is about all the information we can get in relation to it. It is some considerable time since this war ended and since this claim sprung up, and if one part of these claims was adjusted, it seems to me that all might have been adjusted on that score, settled long since, and the Government relieved from all liability on that account.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire if this is not the same case that was before the House, and was referred to the Committee of Claims, and on which that committee reported a bill? I know that one member of the committee [Mr. MOORE] was instructed to make such a report.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not know that this is the same claim; but, if it be, so much the stronger reason why we should not put it into this appropriation bill, for it is nothing more or less than a private claim, and should be examined as all other claims are, referred to a committee, thoroughly examined, and fully reported upon. I am obliged to my friend from Tennessee for his suggestion. I think that that suggestion is entitled to some weight in the decision of the question.

Mr. GROESBECK. This is a claim which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and by that committee the items making up this claim were examined. We were advised by the Department of what these items consisted. We examined the validity of the claim under the treaty, and we allowed it; allowing interest from the time the payment was made by the States. I have no doubt the claim is entirely just.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I stated in my opening remarks that the claim might be a meritorious one; but what we object to is this mode of legislation. Committees of Congress take up business, and, having arrived at certain conclusions, they make a report, and drop all further proceedings in the matter; and then there is a general effort made to get them into the appropriation bills, and we are brought to act upon them in the shape of an amendment to an appropriation, without examination, and without the documents. No matter how meritorious the claim may be, this system of legislation ought to be frowned upon by the House.

Mr. GROW. I would suggest to the committee that if this is a claim arising under a treaty, then it becomes part of the expenses of carrying on the Government, and does not belong to the class of private claims for services rendered.

Mr. LETCHER. I withdraw my amendment, with the consent of the committee, and propose to reduce the appropriation $1,500. Both these claims amount in the aggregate to $20,000. Now, the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in connection with this matter, fixed the sum at $19,803 33, so that there is a difference of almost one thousand dollars between the amount set in in this amendment to the appropriation bill, and the amount reported as due by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That bill does not go into particulars. It does not state what items make up this sum of $19,803. We are furnished with nothing except a general statement that there is that much money due. Now it seems to me that that discrepancy of itself shows the necessity of looking into this matter a little more carefully than it has been examined into as yet. We ought to ascertain the facts by the action of the committee, and by the simple process of debating the matter in the Committee of the Whole House, where the items can be examined one by one, and where the justice or injustice of the claim can be shown. We cannot examine them here. Until the present time I did not even know that this matter had been referred to two committees of this House. The gentleman from Tennessee tells us that the Committee of Claims of this House had the subject in charge, had examined it, and had directed the report to be made.

Mr. MAYNARD. I beg to set the gentleman from Virginia right. My statement was, that the Committee of Claims had had a case before them arising out of the Ashburton treaty, and my inquiry was to know whether it was the same that was embraced in this amendment?

Mr. LETCHER. The thing is just exactly this: Here is my friend from Tennessee who is in doubt himself whether the subject-matter now before this committee was a matter investigated by his or by some other committee. All he knows is, that his committee had the investigation of some matter growing out of the treaty, and that a member of the committee was directed to report the facts to the House, together with a bill for the relief of the States. But here, again, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROESBECK] arises and calls attention to the fact that the committee on Foreign Affairs, of this House, has had charge of this subject, and has directed a bill to be reported; and when we come to compare the amount of money embraced in that bill with the amount of money embraced in the proposition now before the committee, we find a discrepancy of about one thousand dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I have but a single word to say in reply to the gentleman from Virginia. Here is a treaty obligation which he does not deny; and which the House does not deny. The amount has been ascertained by a committee of the Senate, and by a committee of the House; and now the question is, whether the Government desires to repudiate the claim or not?

Mr. LETCHER. No, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman will pardon me. There is no such question before the House at all. The difficulty arises out of the fact that you do not know the amount, that the committees differ in relation to it, and that neither of the committees agree with the action of the Senate in the amount stated in this amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire simply to ask the gentleman whether he would have the State of Maine, after she has paid this money in good faith, come here and present her claim, and run her chance of having it passed year after year, when it can be finished in five minutes?

Mr. LETCHER. If the State of Maine has paid the bill, she knows what she has paid, and exactly the sum to which she is entitled.

Mr. GROESBECK. I would simply remark that the discrepancy grows out of the difference of the rules regulating interest. I remember that the Committee on Foreign Affairs was very particular, and cut down the claim as much as possible.

Mr. LETCHER withdrew his amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$9,000."

Mr. Chairman, my understanding about these claims of Maine and Massachusetts is this: the Government paid Massachusetts $150,000, and Maine $150,000, for agreeing to the stipulations and provisions of the treaty of 1842; and this Government has heretofore settled and paid the claims of Maine for the troops she called out to defend the boundary when it was in dispute. The claim referred to by my colleague, [Mr. MAYNARD,] and reported, I believe, by him, is to pay certain individuals for lands which they held under Massachusetts, or claim to have held. The treaty provided that lands in that disputed territory, upon whichever side of the line they might happen to fall, should be held by the occupants in possession, provided the possession had been held for six years. Then, sir, there are some of the lands on this side the line that are now in the State of Maine.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would say to the gentleman that this claim has nothing whatever to do with lands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. But that is the claim which I understand my colleague reported here from the Committee of Claims; and I cannot see why it is that, after this Government has paid Maine and Massachusetts $300,000, fifteen or sixteen years after we are to pay for all the lands which have vested under the treaty in those who were holding them under the titles they had from their respective Governments while they were in this disputed territory. Nor can I conceive why it is that this Government should again be required to settle the claims of Maine for her troops, called out to defend what she supposed to be her boundary while it was in dispute.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, obtained the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me, I will say that the claim which was referred to the Committee of Claims and reported on, was an individual claim, and one with which neither Maine nor Massachusetts had anything to do, and is entirely aside and apart from the matter now under consideration. I have not time now to explain it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I supposed it was different from this one.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. In reply to what the gentleman from Tennessee has said in reference to the $300,000 paid to Maine and Massachusetts, I will observe that about three million acres of land belonging to those States were ceded to Great Britain by the treaty of Washington. The States of Maine and Massachusetts were very reluctant to yield their assent to that treaty, but it was represented to their commissioners here that great public considerations demanded its ratification; that the advantage of the country would be largely promoted by it; that the line on our whole boundary was to be traced and fixed; that Rouse's Point, which was in dispute, was to be given to the United States, and a considerable strip gained along the whole line west of Maine; that other important disturbing questions were to be settled and peace secured; and Maine and Massachusetts were asked and intreated not to interpose and defeat a treaty which all the country else were in favor of. In a spirit of true patriotism she yielded to these urgent solicitations, and consented to give up a territory half as large as the State of Massachusetts, to which Congress had resolved again and again that her title was "clear and indisputable;" and for yielding it, she was to be paid—what? What the land was worth? No, not one dollar in ten—$300,000 for what was worth more than $3,000,000, and the Government agreed besides to pay her expenses for defending the territory, of which this amendment provides for a part. And now the gentleman from Tennessee is giggling about it! Sir, if this is the way Maine is to be now treated, there are, perhaps, not a few of her citizens who would be disposed to ask whether it would not have been better if the whole State of Maine had been given over to Great Britain, or some country not unwilling to act upon the plainest principles of common honesty and justice? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I just wish to state that every man of those troops called out by Maine to defend that territory, which they said was in dispute, has received one hundred and sixty acres of bounty land from this Government.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The question recurred on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr PEYTON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NICHOLS and BUFFINTON were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 56.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-third amendment:

For defraying the expense of carrying into execution the joint resolution, approved May 11, 1858, "authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities, at Jamaica, for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever," $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-fourth amendment:

For the payment of three companies of volunteers called into the service of the United States, in Kansas, in 1856, by the order of the Governor of that Territory, $3,638 14.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment, for the reason that the facts were presented to us at so late a period in the session we were unable to examine them with much care; and, not having sufficient vouchers to show the authority for calling out these volunteers, we have thought the amendment had better be non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-fifth amendment:

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to wit: For miscellaneous items, $5,500.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment, for the reason that we do not know what these miscellaneous items are made up of. There were no estimates before us, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-sixth amendment:

To John B. Mitty, for compensation as acting secretary of the Territory of Nebraska during the vacancy created by the death of T. B. Cummings, $316 35.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in this amendment. The acting Governor of Nebraska died, and this is for compensation to the Secretary, who acted during the interim until another Governor was appointed.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-seventh amendment:

For contingent expenses of the Territory of Kansas, $9,003 75, to be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of State, upon the production of satisfactory vouchers.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment. The items making up this appropriation have never been presented to the Committee of Ways and Means. What the Senate based the appropriation upon we do not know. It reaches us at a very late hour; it is a pretty large sum of money; Kansas has been in a very disturbed state; and they recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in. ✓

Thirty-eighth amendment:

For making the surveys of the confirmed private land claims in California, the surveyor general is hereby authorized to pay such sum as he may deem reasonable, according to the circumstances connected with each case, not exceeding at the rate of twenty-five dollars for each mile of the boundary lines of any claim, and also for such lines as may necessarily be run and marked or measured in order to connect the lines of each claim with those of the adjacent public surveys: Provided, That the surveyor or surveyors hereafter executing any such survey of a private claim, shall accompany his or their return of such survey with his affidavit that no compensation has been received by him, directly or indirectly, or agreed to be paid to or received by him for the same from any quarter other than the Government of the United States: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of California to award each contract to execute such surveys to the lowest responsible bidder, he being a practical surveyor, after reasonable notice, to be published in two newspapers of the largest circulation in the State of California.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in this amendment. There is a law providing for the surveys of the public lands in California, at sixteen dollars per mile. This amendment provides that these lands shall be surveyed at a sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars per mile. The Committee of Ways and Means do not think, in the first place, that this is a proper mode of altering the law. They believe it to be wrong; and, as no reason has been presented to satisfy us that this amendment ought to prevail, we recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to amend by inserting twenty-six instead of twenty-five dollars per mile. This, sir, is the matter which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] very unexpectedly called up during the general discussion on this bill. I then briefly and hastily replied to his remarks against the amendment of the Senate. The gentleman seemed to take time by the forelock. He did not wait until the amendment was reported to the committee, for fear, I suppose, that he might not have sufficient time under the five-minutes debate to express his views. During these remarks it pleased him to state that if the amendment was adopted by the House it would be productive of fraud, corruption, and venality. I did not know, and I am still at a loss to know, on what ground the gentleman has arrived at that conclusion. Now, sir, that amendment has been read; and as it has become familiar to the House I will say that it is a special law under which there is no liberty, no range given for corruption. And, sir, while I advocate the adoption of that amendment—which I shall do in as brief a manner as possible—I will state, as a reason why the price of these surveys should be fixed at twenty-five dollars a mile, that it is twice as difficult, twice as laborious, and will consume twice as much time to survey the private land claims of California as it will to survey the public domain. Under the law of 1853—the law to which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means referred—the price of surveying the public domain in California is fixed at sixteen dollars per mile. Now, sir, you will find there is an increase of only one third instead of double the increase which we should have had, in consideration of more than double the labor and more than double the time being consumed in surveying private lands.

But, sir, I wish to call attention to the fact that this is not merely an appropriation which is temporary and evanescent in its character, only lasting for a year or eighteen months; but that it is one in which interests great and vital are involved. There is no State in the Confederacy which presents the spectacle that California does, so far as her private land claims are concerned. Our litigations are expensive and ruinous, passing through all the courts of California—first, the land commission; second, the United States circuit and district courts; and then, by appeal here, through the Supreme Court of the United States—and still the claimant gets no title until the patent is issued by the Government. Now, this is an effort to get these claims surveyed, and patents issued; and in doing that, you do not only justice to the land claimants, but you benefit fifteen or twenty thousand honest settlers, who have gone to that State and settled down. I apprehend that if you refuse this appropriation, and put in another sum totally inadequate, you will throw all these matters in regard to the land claims in my State into confusion, and increase this litigation, which is the curse and evil of my State, because the boundaries of these claims are not defined, so that parties litigant do not and cannot know their respective rights.

You cannot charge corruption, because of the simple fact that the surveyor general gives the work out to the lowest responsible bidder. The appropriation is made for certain specific purposes, and he has no more control over the distribution of it than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has. Then there is nothing in this charge of corruption, fraud, and venality, which the gentleman from Texas makes. If the surveyor general can get his work done cheaper than the amount contemplated in this amendment, it is his duty to do so; but it only puts it within his power to do justice to twenty thousand honest men, by settling claims long in litigation, by enabling them to purchase from these land claimants when their titles are clearly established and their boundaries fully defined. Not only that, but it enables the Government to bring its lands into market, free from all incumbrances, which must necessarily be done before the Government can realize from them.

Mr. KELSEY. I understand the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to say that one reason why the committee recommends a disagreement is, that the law already fixes the price of these surveys at fifteen dollars a mile.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. For the public lands.

Mr. KELSEY. It seems to me that if we make the appropriation bill conform to the law, it is all we can desire. I therefore move to strike out "twenty-five dollars," and insert "fifteen dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment pending.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to reduce the amount to sixteen dollars per mile. In the other States of the Union where land titles are litigated, it is usual for persons litigating the title to pay the cost of ascertaining their boundaries; but I understand that where there are litigations of private land claims in California, the Government has undertaken to have them surveyed at the Government's expense. But that matter I will not discuss now. What I want to say is, that I do not see how an increased price paid for surveying the land is to influence the title of those claiming under private grants. I should suppose that sixteen dollars per mile would at least be sufficient to secure a survey. That, I understand, they are entitled to under the law as it now stands, and therefore all that is necessary, is to vote down this Senate amendment, and then they will be left to the operation of existing law. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I move to increase the amount one dollar. I desire to remark that there is a manifest difference in surveying public lands and private land claims. The public lands are first surveyed, and in their survey they are bounded by straight lines, and the subdivisions are made in the same manner. It frequently occurs that in surveying private land claims, you have six, eight, or ten corners, made in conformity to one grants made by the Mexican Government before the lands became the property of the United States. In doing that it becomes necessary that all the corners should be traced and defined; that there should be two separate plats and surveys of every private survey made and furnished by the deputy surveyors to the surveyor general, and by him certified to the office here, that the patent may issue.

Hence there is a manifest propriety in making a difference in the price of surveying and dividing these private land claims from the public domain, and that paid for surveying the public lands. I have seen those private land claims run out into almost every imaginable irregular form. It is, therefore, exceedingly difficult to have the lines properly run, and with that accuracy which will enable the Government to issue patents properly.

In view of all these facts I think the limit of twenty-five dollars per mile is not too great. I think the Government would have done well in making this a matter of consideration long ago. I know instances where the returns were made to the Government thirty years ago, and now they have to be surveyed over again, on account of the inaccuracy of the original surveys. I hope the amendment of the Senate will be agreed to.

I think if the House would take up the subject, and examine the statistics, they would see that there is a manifest difference between the character of the surveys of public lands, and the required subdivision of private land claims from the public lands; and the House would not hesitate for a single moment to make this appropriation. I withdraw my amendment.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

For lithographing and engraving ordered by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $45,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment, for the reason that we have no details of the work; and besides, we have just passed an appropriation for a large amount of lithographing and engraving.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not concurred in.

Fortieth amendment:

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session, the sum of $40,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not concurred in.

Forty-first amendment:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the legislative and contingent expenses of Washington Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1857, the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend that that amendment be stricken out, and that the following be inserted as a substitute:

And the register of the land office, and receiver of public moneys, in the Territory of New Mexico, shall receive the same compensation now allowed by law to the same class of officers in Washington Territory, provided they shall receive no fees or commissions.

The Senate amendment, recommended to be stricken out, seems to have been for expenses created in the Territory of Washington for extra printing; and instead of its being reported here when the deficiency bill was pending, and when we might have had an opportunity to examine its details, it is put in as an amendment by the Senate, without any explanation. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend the striking out of this amendment; and, as the only place where the substitute would be germane, they recommend an amendment to equalize the salaries of the register and receiver in the Territory of New Mexico, and put them on the same footing with the like officers in the Territory of Washington. The object is, to prevent the increase of salaries, in some cases, from fees and commissions, over and above that which the law contemplates, and, at the same time, to put the salary of the same officers at other places at a proper amount; in other words, it is to equalize salaries. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I trust that the amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means will not prevail. The Senate amendment proposes to appropriate $7,500 for deficiencies in the contingent fund of Washington Territory. It is recommended by the First Comptroller, and is also recommended, in distinct and emphatic terms, by the Secretary of the Treasury. I find, on looking over the appropriation bills of the last six sessions, that $20,000 is the usual amount appropriated for the contingent expenses of the several Territories. There are, however, some exceptions to that. Minnesota, one year, got $30,000, and, two other years, got $26,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The $20,000 appropriated is to pay the salaries of the members of the Council.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. Including printing.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to ask my friend from Washington why, if an estimate has been made out by the Comptroller or Secretary of the Treasury, it has not been communicated officially to the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I understood that the whole matter was an omission on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means, and that the information was communicated from the Department.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The gentleman is mistaken in that. It never was sent to the Committee of Ways and Means to my knowledge.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I find that, in the cases of Kansas and Nebraska, a special appropriation was made for the taking of the census; and also, that in the case of Kansas an appropriation was made specially for the expenses of the territorial Delegates. In Washington Territory, the expenses of the first election were paid out of this contingent fund. Moreover, at the first session of the Territorial Legislature, a code of laws was passed, the excellence of which is shown by the fact that little or no alterations have been made in it—the principal alterations having grown out of an act of Congress.

The session before last, we had an extraordinary expenditure in the way of printing. All the official correspondence growing out of the condition of war was called for by the Legislature, and was ordered to be published. This census, this code of laws, and these extraordinary expenditures exceeded, by double, the amount now called for. The reason of the requisition coming in late is, that the work has been only recently settled up and audited at the Department.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. On what authority was that code made?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. It was sanctioned by Congress in the payment of the commissioners.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Is that to be paid for out of this appropriation?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. That has been paid for.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Would not a large portion of this appropriation go to printing correspondence that arose out of the controversy between General Wool and the Governor of Washington Territory?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. Not at all. There is some, perhaps one fiftieth part of the whole correspondence, that consists of letters between General Wool and myself. The Legislature called on the Executive for it; and deeming it necessary to be published, ordered its publication. This account has been audited and approved by the First Comptroller, and the Secretary of the Treasury has transmitted the facts to the Senate Committee on Finance, and, as I understood, to the Committee of Ways and Means of this House. I trust the amendment of the Senate will be concurred in.

The amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate, as amended, was then agreed to.

Forty-second amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following section:
Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That section six of the act passed August 18, 1855, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1857," shall apply to the subsistence of the commissioner therein named from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, and the same shall be paid out of the appropriation already made.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. A commissioner was provided for under the reciprocity treaty. He has been paid his full salary. This amendment is to be retroactive, and is to give increased pay by antedating the time. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. The amendment was disagreed to.

Forty-third amendment:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to those now authorized by law, there be employed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the office of the Register of the Treasury, one additional clerk of the third class, and, in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, one additional clerk of the third class; and such sum as may be necessary to carry into effect the provision of this section, to the 30th of June, 1859, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in that amendment, with an amendment to strike out the words "such sum as may be necessary," and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,200."

The passage of the Treasury-note bill has so increased the duties of the Treasury Department, and the creation of the proposed loan will, if it be authorized, so further increase them, that it is absolutely necessary to have two additional clerks in that Department. When the loan bill comes up, the Committee of Ways and Means propose to make a large reduction in the sum appropriated in that bill for the performance of the clerical duties necessary to the issuing of the bonds. Instead, however, of appropriating so much money as may be necessary, the committee propose to fix the salaries at the amount allowed to clerks of a similar class.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood the gentleman to say that these clerks were necessary, because of the loan bill. I would like to know if that bill has passed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I only gave the committee the information that, when that bill comes up, we propose to reduce the appropriation for clerical services. I hope the gentleman does not object to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to know of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if the clerks provided for in this amendment are to be permanent or temporary?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The provision is temporary in its nature. The occasion which calls for them is of a temporary character. They are not created by law. Provision is only made for their salaries for one year; and at the expiration of that time their services will be discontinued, unless we make an appropriation to retain them.

Mr. BURNETT. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is certainly mistaken. If I understand the language of this amendment, it creates two permanent clerkships, and appropriates $3,200, which, I presume, is for the salaries of these clerks for one year. In my judgment, the committee ought to vote down the amendment, because these additional clerks are not needed, nor has the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means given us any reason why they should be appointed, except the mere fact that, in his opinion, they are necessary.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I gave a reason that should have some weight with him; and that was, that, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the Committee of Ways and Means, and of the Senate of the United States, the additional labor created in that Department makes this addition to the clerical force indispensably necessary.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman did not state that in his remarks before; but he said that it was necessary in his judgment. I grant that the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury is entitled to some weight; but I have a right to differ with the Secretary of the Treasury; and I say that, if you will go to the Treasury Department, and examine the character of the labor performed by the employes of the Government, you will find that there are twice as many clerks there now as there ought to be.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Secretary of the Treasury informs me that these clerks are necessary in consequence of the additional labors imposed on the Department by the passage of the Treasury-note bill; and, if the loan now asked for shall be granted, it will make the service of these clerks still more necessary. The Secretary of the Treasury says it is utterly impossible for the present clerical force in the Department to perform the duties that will be incumbent on that Department in the event the loan bill should pass.

Mr. BURNETT. I will say to gentlemen that while I have as high respect for the Secretary of the Treasury as any gentleman upon this floor, it does seem to me that when he is compelled to send to Congress twice during one session for a loan, one of $20,000,000 and another of $15,000,000, the time has come when a little economy should be exercised; and where can that be better exercised than in transferring useless clerks from one Department to others where they are needed? There is not a gentleman upon this floor, who has had occasion to go to the Departments, but knows that there are supernumerary clerks in almost every Department of the Government in this city. I shall vote against the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The Senate amendment was not concurred in.

Forty-fourth amendment:

Sec. 5. And he it further enacted, That so much of the act of the 3d of March, 1845, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1846, as provides that no part of the appropriation for the contingent expenses of either House of Congress shall be applied as payment or compensation to any clerk, messenger, or other attendant, employed by a resolution of one of said Houses, be, and the same is hereby, repeated, and that such payments as have been heretofore made to persons so employed, after being approved and certified by the proper committee of either House, shall be allowed at the Treasury.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment of the Senate has arisen from a misconception or a misunderstanding of the matter which occasioned considerable controversy and debate in this House. I desire to offer, from the Committee of Ways and Means, a substitute for the Senate amendment, as follows:

That it is hereby declared to have been the true intent and meaning of the third section of the act entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1853," approved May 4, 1853, to legalize and make appropriations for the allowances of the last House of Representatives, whether by resolution of said House, or by the Committee of Accounts.

An amendment was offered to the deficiency bill to provide for the payment of the extra allowances of the last House of Representatives. It led to considerable and lengthy debate. A construction was placed upon the act by the present Secretary of the Treasury, different from that of his predecessors. Where allowances have been made heretofore by the Committee of Accounts to the employes, messengers, and clerks, under a simple resolution of the House of Representatives, such allowances have been recognized and passed at the Treasury Department. But the present Secretary of the Treasury deeming that an improper construction of the law, directed that no expenses, except the ordinary and usual expenses—the word "ordinary" being used in contradistinction from "extraordinary"—paid out of the contingent fund of the House would be allowed at the Treasury Department; that extra allowances made to employes by the Committee of Accounts, and extra allowances made by the House, without specific appropriations to pay them, would not be allowed at the Treasury Department. In consequence of that construction of the act, it became necessary to have further legislation, and the proposition came up on the deficiency bill. That matter was debated at great length, and every member is familiar with the subject. The clause placed in that bill was intended to pay the extra allowances of the last session of Congress, and then to fall back to the construction of the former law, made by the present Secretary of the Treasury; in other words, that we should pay such allowances in the past, but not in the future. The reason alleged for this was that such allowances have been usual and customary for a number of years; that clerks, relying upon those allowances, had made engagements based upon them, and had created debts upon the faith of it, and that it had become a sort of vested right. The question came up in that way, and the provision passed in the deficiency bill. Subsequently to that, the Comptroller of the Treasury has placed a construction upon that act different from what was intended by the House of Representatives in its passage. In consequence of that construction the Senate have put an amendment upon this bill to provide for that class of expenses which by that decision were to be cut off. They send it to us. The Committee of Ways and Means propose a substitute for it, the effect of which will be to pay the extra allowances of the last session of Congress, and then to cease to pay them hereafter. It proposes to make no alteration in the act of 1845, but rather to maintain the construction put upon it by the present Secretary of the Treasury. It saves us from future inconvenience, and protects us from all future extra allowances, unless there is a specific appropriation made to pay them.

Mr. BURNETT. In my judgment, the language of this amendment is too broad. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in giving his reason why the committee recommend the adoption of this amendment, says that the Comptroller has given a construction to that act different from the one intended by the deficiency bill to have been given to it. This provision not only covers the amount voted by resolution to the employes of this House, but it covers every account that may have been paid by the Clerk of the House. The language is broad enough to cover it. It legalizes and adopts all the appropriations that may have been made by the last Congress. Now, I suggest to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if he wants to make an appropriation for the purpose of covering the advances that have been voted to the employes of the House, that he should use language to that effect, and say, "to pay the employes." Why does he cover it up in language so obscure that it admits of a different construction from the one he says is intended to be placed upon it?

Now, I voted against the deficiency bill in which this appropriation was made; and I must confess that I was surprised that the Washington Union, a paper usually dignified, discreet, and correct, should have thought proper to assail those of us of the Democratic party who felt constrained by a high sense of public duty to vote against that bill on account of some of its extravagances. I would say to the Committee of Ways and Means that when they come in here with a deficiency bill, or appropriation of any sort, which is, in my judgment, wrong, I will take the responsibility of voting against it; and I have no doubt that the Washington Union, appreciating the errors of its course, will give due credit to those of us who feel that we have the capacity to discharge our public duties with a due regard to the public interest, without the fear of unjust criticism, come from whatever quarter it may.

Now to this amendment. Why is it worded in obscure language? Why not tell us in plain terms that it is intended to cover gratuities to the employes of the House, and that when they are paid we are done? That is what is meant by it, but not what is said. Now, I propose to amend it, so as to meet the views of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, by inserting a proviso that this clause is not to apply to this or any future Congress. If the Committee of Ways and Means intend to stop there, and do not intend this to apply to any future Congress, let them adopt that amendment and so fix it.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was adopted.

Mr. BURNETT. I propose to amend the section by adding as follows:

Provided, That this section is not to apply to this or any future Congress.

Now, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means says that the Comptroller, under the act to which he has referred, has decided that he would not pay money under a simple resolution of this House; but he did not go far enough in that statement. The decision of the Comptroller is this: that he will not pay money under a simple resolution of this House, where that resolution is in conflict with a law or joint resolution; and in that decision he was right, because if this House makes an appropriation of money under a simple resolution, which is in conflict with the statute or joint resolution, it would be wrong, and must necessarily lead to abuses of the very worst description. Now, it has been stated that the Comptroller has refused to pay the employes under a resolution of this House. He has made no such decision, nor has he refused at any time to pay the money that was due and owing to the employes of the House, whether they were appointed under a resolution of this House, or a joint resolution, or a law; but his decision only went to the extent I have stated. He refused to pay it where the simple resolution of the House was in conflict with the law or a joint resolution. That is my understanding of it.

The reason why I propose to add this proviso to the amendment is, that the language of the amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means is, in my judgment, obscure. It would admit of a construction that would apply to the future as well as to the past.

I have this also to say to the Committee of Ways and Means—and I say it with all due respect—they brought in a bill which they called a deficiency bill, and put in it a provision which they themselves admitted here in the discussion was wrong. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] who had that bill especially in charge, would not defend the appropriation for the employes of this House running back for ten years. He will admit himself that no man who voted for the resolutions under which these payments were claimed ever contemplated that they were to go back ten years, and give its beneficiaries back pay in the shape of extra compensation. But in face of that resolution passed here, in language admitting of that construction, instead of requiring these men to make out their claims, so as to let us know the amount, and be able to vote intelligently, they brought in an indefinite provision here, and there was not a member of the Committee of Ways and Means who could tell, during that discussion, how much money was covered by the provision, or who were to be the beneficiaries under it. They cannot tell to-day who they are. They cannot tell to-day the aggregate amount of money voted. And yet, when their friends here, who are desirous of promoting the interests of the Government, and of aiding in getting through the appropriation bills, acting upon their own responsibility and their own convictions of what is right, dare to assert their independence by voting against such legislation, their Democracy is subjected to obnoxious imputations. I wish to say that I was actuated by no hostile feeling towards the employes of this House. I am for paying them, and paying them well; but I am for fixing their salaries by law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I am sorry to see my friend from Kentucky so much excited by the little difficulty between him and the Union. That is a war in which I do not mean to take any part. I imagine that each is entirely capable of taking care of himself. But, sir, the gentleman has stated that no member of the Committee of Ways and Means knew how much money was embraced in the third section of the deficiency bill. Now, I stated to several of those who opposed that section that I had procured from the Clerk of the last House of Representatives a list showing the precise amount which was embraced in that section, and a second list showing exactly how much of it had been paid, and that I procured it for the purpose of placing it at the disposal of those gentlemen who undertook to assail that appropriation, in order that they might investigate it to their heart's content, and satisfy themselves as to its propriety or impropriety. That list amounts, in round numbers, to $66,000; and the amount paid amounted, in round numbers, to $18,000. The object of the provision in the deficiency bill was to protect that officer of the House who, by the action of the House, had been rendered liable for that amount, and who demanded, and with right demanded, that the body which had subjected him to the liability should protect him in the execution of its order.

Now, sir, I think that there can be no two opinions in regard to the construction of that section of the act. The gentleman says that it paid money to employes of this House running back for eight or ten years; and, sir, your Comptroller decides that those claims are allowable under the third section of the deficiency bill. But the items which he objects to are items which have been certified by the Committee of Accounts as proper claims, in discharge of their duty to the House by which they were created. I understand the opinion of the Comptroller, given in writing to the Clerk of this House, to be this: that, when one House of Congress passes a resolution, he will not allow money under that resolution, unless Congress shall subsequently pass an appropriation that will cover the allowances specified in the resolution.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman if he does not approve of that?

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, I approve of that; but it is not exactly what the gentleman from Kentucky thought it was.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes it is, exactly.

Mr. LETCHER. No; the gentleman said he would not pay the money where it came in conflict with a law or joint resolution.

Mr. BURNETT. And I state that now.

Mr. LETCHER. It is in conflict with law.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman says that, during the discussion of the deficiency bill, he had that list here. I do not question that at all; but he will remember that, when it was stated here that the late Clerk had paid $18,000, it was flatly denied.

Mr. LETCHER. I know it was. Let me complete your sentence for you: and I then told your colleague [Mr. Mason] that he should have the list to establish his denial.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, sir; we were required to take that list, made out by the former Clerk, without any evidence that the money had been paid, and I was unwilling to do that.

Mr. LETCHER. That does not alter the fact at all. I have shown that, as the representative of the Committee of Ways and Means, I was willing to give them the underhold in the scuffle. I was willing to give them the exact ground upon which the Clerk of the last House rested, so that if there had been anything improper or illegal in his conduct, or if he had never made the payments which he alleged he had, they would be able to satisfy themselves by taking his list as a guide, and seeing whether the payments had been made or not. Now, so far as I am concerned, I say here very frankly that that was my understanding, and I considered it the understanding of the House; for it will be recollected that when attention was called to these resolutions, and the allowances made by the Committee of Accounts, it was stated here, in reply to me, that the allowances by the Committee of Accounts had been made after Congress adjourned, and that, therefore, they ought not to be paid. I say now that the interpretation of that law is precisely as I understood it then, and as I imagined five sixths of this House understood it at the time they voted on the deficiency bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to know whether the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means will still be open to amendment if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky should be adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The section will still be open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The body of the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The question was taken upon Mr. BURNETT's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I propose to strike out of the amendment the words, "or by the Committee of Accounts."

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair made the reply to the question of the gentleman from Virginia, a short time since, he did not understand the nature of the amendment he proposed to offer.

It would not be in order to strike out that which has already been inserted by the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It has not been inserted. That amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means has not been acted on, because the gentleman from Kentucky offered his amendment to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been acted on.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Well, be it so. I presume when there is a clear mistake, the business of the country will not be permitted to be affected by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question on the amendment was put clearly and distinctly, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Then I ask general consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object to anything out of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What question is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise, for the purpose of suspending the rules allowing this five minutes' debate. We shall not get through this bill to-night, or to-morrow, if this debate is to be continued in this way.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How does the gentleman get the floor to make that motion? I understand the Chair to rule my amendment out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that it is not in order to move to strike out what the committee have already inserted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is upon the floor on a question of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to debate.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am not debating; I am stating a question of order. Did not the gentleman from Kentucky offer his amendment to the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means?

The CHAIRMAN. After the amendment had been adopted by the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky moved to amend by adding to it; and the question now is, "Will the committee concur in the Senate amendment as amended?"

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now renew my motion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I withdraw the appeal.

The committee refused to rise.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Would it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the committee agreed to the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order in committee.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I desired to explain, in a few words, in what difficulties the action of the committee, in adopting that amendment, will involve the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. BURNETT. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question was then taken; and the Senate amendment as amended was concurred in.

Forty-fifth amendment:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the extra compensation paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to clerks of committees, under a resolution of the 14th of March, 1857, be allowed at the Treasury.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Senate amendment provides for the payment of services rendered some sixty days after the expiration of the session of the Senate. The Committee of Ways and Means are not able to see the necessity for that service, and recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Forty-sixth amendment:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to cause obstructions of every kind to be removed from such of the streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the city of Washington, as have been or may be hereafter improved, in whole or in part, by the United States; and to keep the same at all times free from obstructions; and for this purpose he shall have power to institute suits in any court having competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney for said district to prosecute the same, and whenever any person shall desire to move the paving stones, or to displace any other work done by the authority of the United States, for the purpose of laying down gas pipes, or for any other purpose, it shall be the duty of such person to obtain a written permit from the said commissioner, and such persons shall oblige themselves to replace the said work to the satisfaction of said Commissioner, and within such time as he may prescribe.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not concurred in.

Forty-seventh amendment:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall place obstruction in the streets, avenues, or sidewalks aforesaid, such person shall pay the costs of removing the same, and shall, moreover, be subject to a penalty of ten dollars, to be recovered as other debts are recovered in the District of Columbia, for each and every day the said obstruction may remain after the Commissioner shall have given notice for its removal. And if any person or persons removing the paving stones or other work done by the authority of the United States shall fail to replace the same to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, within the time prescribed by him, he or they shall be subject to a penalty of twenty-five dollars for each and every failure, and shall, moreover, pay the costs of replacing the same, the whole to be recovered before any court in the District of Columbia having competent jurisdiction; and that this and the preceding section shall continue in force until repealed by Congress.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Forty-eighth amendment:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to examine the accounts between the United States and the several States which have been, or may be, allowed in interest upon claims against the United States, which have accrued during or since the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply in such examination the provisions and principles of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1857, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858;" and that any money found upon such re-examination to be due any State, shall be paid to such State out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend an amendment to this amendment, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to Congress at its next regular session, all applications made by the constituted authorities of the States and cities, for the reopening and re-examination of the settlements heretofore made with such States and cities, and report the principles of readjustment on which such claim is based, and the amount thereof; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further instructed to report to Congress, at its next session, the gross amount which will be required to pay such claims to the States and cities of the United States.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means amounts to this. In 1857 Congress passed a law relative to the subject of interest on claims growing out of the war of 1812, and paid it to the State of Maryland. That was a claim based upon the same principles, and its payment has of course led to the application of every State in the Union that has a similar claim. This amendment comes over to us, as one of sixty-four amendments made by the Senate without there being time even to print them; and we are called upon to legislate on great principles, involving, perhaps, the rights of States, in this hurried manner. The Committee of Ways and Means do not feel disposed to act precipitately in the matter; hence they offer a substitute to this effect, that before any action shall be taken upon it, the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress all the facts relating to it, and that no legislation shall take effect until after that report. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BOYCE. I hope the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will not be adopted. This is nothing more than allowing the proper officers to settle the accounts for advances made by the different States, on the same ground as the advances made by the State of Maryland were settled. The accounting officers, some years ago, insisted upon making the calculations of interest according to merchants' accounts; in other words, they deducted from the total amount of principal and interest the payments made by the Government, and deducted it not from the interest account, but from the principal. In this way the States that had made advances to the General Government lost considerable sums, because, although they advanced this money, and ought to have been entitled to get it back with interest, they got nothing back but the principal without any account of the interest.

The whole amount of it is simply this: the Treasury, as I understand, has adopted the rule that where a certain amount of debt is owing to a State, and a certain amount of interest has accumulated on that debt, and where the principal thus owing bears interest, and the interest thus owing does not, if the claim is paid in part, they apply that part payment to the principal which bears interest, instead of to the interest which does not, thus reversing the rule which exists in every State in the Union, operating most unjustly towards the States themselves.

Now, all that is asked to be done, is to make the same allowances as were made in the cases of Maryland, Virginia, and Alabama, and to apply to the settlement of the interest account, the principles of law laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. What harm can possibly accrue to the States named by waiting a year longer, till we can have all the facts, and the law, and the treaty, and everything connected with it, reported to Congress, so that we can act advisedly?

Mr. BOYCE. The facts are all before us. The only question is the amount of interest, and if the thing be right, the amount does not make any difference. In second Johnson's Chancery Reports, the principles are laid down by which interest is to be computed; and those are the principles on which the Maryland case, and the Alabama case were settled. They furnished an exception to the general rule, because the advances made by those States were from funds paying interest. In the case of South Carolina, her advances were made out of State funds in the bank of the State of South Carolina, which were then realizing twelve per cent. interest.

Mr. MAYNARD. The act of 1832 expressly recites that.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes; in 1832 an act passed Congress stating the principles on which this calculation should be made. It is in these words:

"That in ascertaining the amount due by the United States to any State, for advances made by States for the United States during the late war, interest shall be allowed and paid on the whole amount of the principal sums which have been or may be refunded by the United States from the time the same was advanced by the States respectively, until the same shall have been refunded as aforesaid; the sums refunded from time to time being first applied to the extinguishment of the interest accrued at the time such sum was refunded, and the balance, after satisfying the interest due, shall be applied to the extinguishment of the principal; and that, for interest actually paid by the States for money borrowed by them and applied to the service of the United States, the same rate of interest shall be paid to each of the States as such State shall have paid."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to amend the Senate amendment which is proposed to be stricken out, so as to provide that the whole amount shall not exceed $100,000.

I understand that it is proposed to settle this claim upon the basis on which the Maryland claim was settled. The Maryland claim was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means of the Thirty-Third Congress, as you, sir, will remember, and the committee unanimously reported adversely upon it. But, in the last hours of the last session of Congress, that claim was brought in here from the Senate, with sixty other amendments to a bill corresponding to the one now before us, and was passed in the report of a committee of conference, under the previous question, without being read or printed, and when not five members in the House knew that there was such a claim provided for in the report of the committee of conference. The amount paid to the State of Maryland under that provision was $276,000, upon a claim which had been settled and closed, and the amount found due paid in 1826, if I mistake not. This is a proposition to provide for all the States and cities in the country that advanced money during the war, if I understand the amendment; what amount it may cover I cannot even guess; but, judging from the case of Maryland, it may amount to millions on the principle laid down there. In my opinion, sir, when claims of this description have been settled and adjusted and paid, they should be permitted to remain closed, and should not be reopened at this late day. And, sir, if you provide for the States and cities, why not put in the counties and towns and villages, and also the individuals throughout the Union who made liberal advances to your troops when they were prepared to leave the country for the war with Mexico? If you are to pay the States and cities, why not pay the counties, and small towns, and the individuals who contributed to the comforts of those who were called into the service of the country?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the principle upon which the Government of the United States settled with the State of Maryland for her advances for the common defense, I suppose, is perfectly equitable, and only the ordinary principle upon which every judgment at law, every account between business men, every executorial account, and every trustee's account in the country is settled. The law under which the settlement was originally made was, if I remember aright, in substance, the law which was passed last session, and it was because of the perversity or stupidity of the accounting officers of the Treasury that it was found necessary to reenact it, and force them to reopen and settle an account which they had settled wrongly under the first act. It was no old claim, as the gentleman from Tennessee seems to suppose, raked up in these latter days. It had been continuously pressed for many years before, and pressed upon the ground that the accounting officers of the Treasury had misconstrued the act of Congress, and had not paid Maryland what she was entitled to. And the act passed at the last session, was only intended to quicken the accounting officers of the Treasury, and compel them to do what, under the law of 1826, it was their duty years ago to have done.

Well, what was that principle? I do not know how far it may be embodied in the Senate amendment, but it was this: it was confined to those advances of the State of Maryland which she had made, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Boyce] has appropriately stated, of interest-bearing funds. It was not where Maryland had taxed her citizens and drawn money directly from them to pay the troops she was obliged to raise to defend her own territory, when the United States failed to defend it for her; but only where she had sold her interest-bearing fund, or borrowed money and paid interest for it. I will most cheerfully vote for an amendment embodying the principle of indemnifying all States that have been compelled to sell interest-bearing funds, or to borrow money and pay interest on it, because of the default of the United States in failing to defend them. At the same time, I thought the amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means was a very appropriate one—to inquire, in the first instance, which of the States do claim to put themselves on that particular ground—in order that we may know what we are doing.

The amendment to the amendment, proposed by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, was rejected.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend by inserting after the words "United States," where they occur the second time in the Senate amendment, the words, "by any act of Congress." I state frankly that my object in offering the amendment is to make an explanation, which I hope the gentlemen of the committee will think proper to pay attention to. The origin of this amendment is this: in 1832, Congress passed an act in the following language:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to liquidate and settle the claim of the State of South Carolina against the United States for interest upon money actually expended by her for military stores, for the use and benefit of the United States, and on account of her militia whilst in the service of the United States during the late war with Great Britain; the money so expended having been drawn by the State from a fund upon which she was then receiving interest."

Congress allowed the payment of the fund, and directed the payment of interest upon it. The question then before the Treasury Department was that of the principle upon which interest should be computed. They took this mode: they computed the interest upon the sum which South Carolina had advanced, and the interest upon the sums paid back by the United States, and then offset the one against the other, in the same manner as you would between merchants who had mutual demands against each other, mutual debts, each properly drawing interest. But in this case the United States was the only debtor; the indebtedness was all on her side. She had, from time to time, made partial payments; but such payments did not become debts to draw interest. It is simply a case of a debt upon which partial payments have been made, and of course the principle of cross demand does not apply at all. The principle was totally misapplied by the accounting officer in settling with South Carolina, under the act of 1832.

The interest should have been computed in this case as it was in the Maryland case, a mode which obtains everywhere in the United States, and has been adopted by repeated judicial decisions, and which was claimed here by South Carolina in a memorial presented, during this session, to both Houses of Congress. That memorial was referred to the Committee of Claims in the House and in the Senate. The Committee on Claims in the Senate examined it, and saw that it was only just that there should be a general act of legislation declaratory of the true mode of computing interest in adjusting the accounts of each of the States, and hence this amendment of the Senate.

It simply is declaring upon the statute-books of the United States what is the true mode of computing interest where partial payments have been made, and that is to compute the interest when the first payment was made, apply the payment to the extinguishment of the interest, as far as is necessary, and the balance apply in discharge of the principal, and so on from payment to payment. That was the principle adopted in the Maryland case, and is the principle sought to be incorporated here, by the Senate amendment, as the true mode of computing interest in all cases where interest is directed to be paid.

Mr. TRIPPE. Suppose the payment does not amount to a sum equal to the interest?

Mr. MAYNARD. Then the interest is calculated until such a time as the payments are sufficient to equal the interest.

Now, there is no more necessity of waiting upon the facts, than there is in waiting this time twelve months to know when the moon will rise to-morrow night, or to ascertain upon what day of the week the 4th of July, 1859, will occur. It is simply a question of law as to the mode of computing interest. It is clearly right as applicable to the State of South Carolina. She has been kept out, for nearly thirty years, of a large amount due to her. Here is the legislation upon the statute-book, acknowledging the liability of the United States to South Carolina for a debt due, with interest thereon, and directing the payment to be made. This amendment simply declares what is the true mode of computing the interest. If that mode is applicable to Maryland, if it is applicable to Alabama, it is equally applicable to every other State which has an interest account against the Government of the United States. It is not a question whether it is proper or not that interest should be paid in any given case; that, so far as South Carolina is concerned, was settled a quarter of a century ago. As I have said, it is purely a legal question; and it can give us no sort of assistance in its decision to know what or how many States will be affected by it, or how much money will be needed to pay the balances found due upon the debts. Hence, I am opposed to the dilatory amendment proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STANTON. I do not know but what this amendment of the Senate is perfectly right, but I do know that it would not be in order to an appropriation bill, if it were offered as an amendment in this House. I know that an appropriation bill, at this stage of the session, is no proper place for considering such a question. This is no proper time for considering such questions. There is a good reason why they should not be introduced here. We have, therefore, a rule to exclude them, and I trust the committee will not concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to amend the Senate amendment by adding the following words:

"And that the amount so found due shall be credited to the respective States upon the public revenue deposited in such State, under the act of 1836."

Mr. CHAFFEE demanded tellers

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARNETT, and WASHBURN of Maine, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 62.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, as a substitute for the Senate amendment,

Mr. GARNETT demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHAFFEE, and TAYLOR of New York, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was then concurred in.

Forty-ninth amendment:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act of Congress approved September 4, 1841, entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights," be so amended that appeals from the district officer, in case of contest between different settlers for the right of preemption, shall hereafter be decided by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose decision shall be final, unless appeal therefrom shall be taken to the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fiftieth amendment:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be directed to ascertain, as among the expenditures of the State of Maine in defending the territory heretofore in dispute with Great Britain, the amounts paid in borrowing money for those expenditures beyond the rate of six per centum per annum, whether in the form of discounts, or otherwise, in all cases in which the principal of such expenditures, and interest upon them at the rate of six per centum, have heretofore been refunded by said State to the United States; and that the Secretary be directed to pay the amount so ascertained out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to any properly authorized officer of said State. In making the ascertainment herein directed, the accounting officers shall compute the principal and interest of the difference between the cash received by Maine in negotiating stocks and notes, and the nominal amount of such stocks and notes, and the interest accrued thereon, and in cases where Maine was obliged, in negotiating for moneys, to increase the rate of interest on previous loans, the amount of such increase shall be computed and allowed, but not so as to reckon interest upon interest.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The fiftieth amendment falls under the same class as the forty-eighth amendment; and the Committee of Ways and Means has recommended an amendment similar to that which has just been adopted to the forty-eighth—a proviso that the Secretary of the Treasury shall report the facts and law to Congress at its next session. This amendment applies to the Aroostook war on the northern boundary. But the principle of our opposition is this: that this is not the proper mode of legislation for such a question; and the Committee of Ways and Means not being able at this late hour to get at a full statement of facts, recommend an amendment requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to report all the facts of the case at the opening of the next session, when we can act advisedly on the subject.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I think this amendment comes in appropriately here. There is an existing law for it, to wit, a treaty of the United States; and there is no place so fitting and appropriate for it as in an appropriation bill. In the next place, this amendment has no resemblance whatever to the amendment on which we have been just acting. It provides specifically for the State of Maine, and for no other State, and provides for paying a sum certain, or which can be ascertained and made certain in ten minutes.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Can the gentleman tell me the amount due under that law?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I have not computed it, but my information is that it will be in the neighborhood of forty thousand dollars.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Would my friend from Maine be willing to give the General Government credit for the amount of its deposits in Maine under the act of 1836?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this amendment was to carry out the provisions of a treaty?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It is to refund what has been agreed to be refunded under a treaty stipulation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then, by the express rules of the House, no appropriation to carry out a treaty stipulation can be put in any other bill. It must be put in a bill by itself.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. There is no law or rule to prevent an amendment of this kind, which is to give a construction to an act of Congress made necessary by the treaty of Washington, by which Maine was to receive the amount agreed to be refunded to her under that treaty. The facts are these: Maine issued her six per cent. bonds, and was obliged to sell them in the market for five per cent. The treaty provided that she should be refunded the expense of defending her territory, and a part of this expense was this difference of one per cent. That is the whole case. The treaty provided that she should be reimbursed and paid every dollar that she had expended out of her treasury. Her six per cent. bonds she was obliged to sell at five per cent., and she now simply asks that the difference be made up to her. A similar case occurred in Virginia where she advanced $300,000 at seven per cent., for which she only received six per cent. The committee of the Senate was unanimous; the Senate was unanimous, or nearly so; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs in this House was unanimous, and the Committee of Claims was unanimous in recommending an appropriation for this purpose; and I do submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is no necessity or occasion whatever for sending to the other end of the avenue to obtain information. We have all the information that we require. The language of the treaty is plain and explicit that the expenses shall be refunded to the State. Now, inasmuch as she paid one per cent. on a certain amount of bonds more than she received, and paid it in good faith, she asks that she be reimbursed that loss. I desire to have read by the Clerk a report made in the Senate by Mr. POLK, of Missouri.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to add the following to the amendment:

And the amount so found due to the State of Maine shall be credited to said State on the amount due by that State to the United States on the surplus revenue deposited with the State of Maine.

The amendment of the Senate concedes the fact that this Government has paid Maine all the principal and six per cent. interest on the amount she advanced in defending that disputed territory between the State of Maine and the British Provinces; and this amendment is to pay for all the losses of Maine in shavering her bonds, no matter at what discount, or at what interest she paid or promised to pay. I do not think it is right to pay her the excess of exchange and discount which she paid for the money which she raised for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The gentleman is wrong in stating that she shaved her bonds; she did not; and this amendment only provides for paying to Maine the difference between the five per cent. which she actually received, and the six per cent. which she paid on her bonds. This amendment is to reimburse her that difference, and the interest on the amount; that is to say, just to make her whole, as you have agreed to do. Now, will you do it?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Here is the act passed on the 3d of March, 1851:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to liquidate and settle the claim of the State of Maine against the United States for interest upon money borrowed and actually expended by her for the protection of the northeastern frontier of said State during the years 1839, 1840, and 1841; and the sum so found to be due to said State shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in ascertaining the amount of interest, as aforesaid, due to the State of Maine, the following rules shall govern: 1st. That interest shall not be computed on any sum which Maine has not expended for the use and benefit of the United States, as evidenced by the amount refunded or repaid to the State of Maine by the United States. 2d. That no interest shall be paid on any sum on which said State of Maine did not either pay or lose interest as aforesaid."

Now, it does seem to me that this law covered the entire case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know whether I can now submit an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at the present time.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I merely give notice that I desire to submit an amendment at the proper time, that the State of Maine shall receive in current coin of the United States the sum so provided for, unless the States of Maryland and South Carolina shall first refund the sums paid to those States.

Mr. STANTON. I have a single remark to make in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee; and it is this: I voted with the gentleman from Tennessee to apply his principle of making an offset to all the States. The committee voted that down. I cannot go with him now, to discriminate and to apply to one State what the House refused to apply to all.

The question was taken on Mr. JONES's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to add a proviso, that the sum appropriated shall not exceed $10,000. Now, in addition to the law read by the gentleman from Tennessee, which shows the settlement in regard to that matter, I desire to call attention to the act of 3d March, 1843, which contains, among other things, these two sections:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid in equal moieties to the States of Maine and Massachusetts, in conformity with the provisions of the fifth article of the said treaty."

"SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the Treasury to audit and pay the accounts of the States of Maine and Massachusetts for all claims for expenses incurred by them in protecting the heretofore disputed territory on the northeastern frontier of the United States, and making a survey thereof, as provided by the fifth article of said treaty; and the sum of not exceeding $10,792.95 for Massachusetts, and $206,934.79 for Maine, is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, in satisfaction of said accounts."

Now, sir, it appears that, shortly after this controversy was adjusted, Congress passed an act to fulfill the obligation as to the $300,000 for each of those States; and further provided that a certain sum should be paid to Massachusetts for protecting herself in that war, and that a certain other much larger sum should be paid to Maine for the purpose of covering her expenditures in that connection. Subsequently, on the 3d of March, 1851, another act was passed on this subject, for the purpose of adjusting the question in connection with the interest due in this case. That act was passed by Congress, and became a law. The matter was settled under that act, as between the States of Maine and Massachusetts and the United States. Now, it does seem to me that, after the passage of those acts, and the settlements under them, after an interval of eight years, it ought to be regarded as a concluded, settled, and closed transaction. If this thing is to go on, there is no telling where it is to end; and there is no sort of propriety in Congress undertaking to adjust any matter in controversy between the Federal Government and a State; because it is apparent that you will legislate year after year to reopen the transactions and readjust them, and continue to make appropriations, until no settlement made by the United States can be regarded as a final settlement with a State.

Now, it seems to me singular that when this act of 1851 was passed, all matters for which the United States were liable in connection with the defense of this northeastern boundary should not have been embraced in that settlement, that any items should have been omitted or passed by, and should have remained unadjusted for a period of seven years thereafter without action of Congress at the instance of the State of Maine or any of the parties interested. I think that we ought to regard these things as at an end some time; and that when we have paid the principal in 1843 and adjusted the interest in 1851, and when an interval of seven years has elapsed from that time to the present and no claim has been made on us, we ought at least to look into the matter a little more carefully than we are doing. It is nothing more than a claim against the Government at best. It is one which, if presented here, ought to be referred to a committee, and there considered; or which, perhaps, might, with more propriety, be referred to that tribunal which we have organized here for the adjustment of questions of this sort, which has judicial powers, the means of taking testimony, and a fair opportunity of arriving at a correct conclusion.

Mr. MORSE, of Maine. I desire to address a few remarks to the committee in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, of the Ways and Means.

I am at a loss—a great loss—to understand why that gentleman, especially, should contest this claim with such pertinacity, when his own State has received over three hundred thousand dollars on precisely the same principle. He does not contest it on the ground of its injustice. He has not, in the specious argument which he has just made, denied the justice of the claim. He raises other and unsubstantial objections. The simple question to be considered is, is this claim a just one? If it be just, why will you repudiate it, especially after the principle has been so fully recognized in the Virginia case, and upon precisely the same ground? The accounting officers of the Treasury did not do us justice to reject this claim after they were directed by law to adjust and settle the claims held by Maine against this Government. They denied us the payment of this one per cent. extra interest paid by our State for its defense. Now, will Congress turn us away empty with a claim so equitable and in such exact conformity with the law and practice of all the States in the Union? Maine has paid this money, and this Government is under treaty obligations to refund it. Gentlemen talk about our bonds being shaved. Let gentlemen look at the question as it is. We had three thousand men under arms and away on the frontier, in the wilderness, over one hundred miles from the frontier settlements. We had to raise money suddenly and without delay to support those men in this extraordinary emergency. But you cannot always raise money under such a state of things, without making some sacrifice. State bonds will not always sell at par, when forced into the money market. We thought we did exceedingly well, under circumstances so unusual, to obtain money on our bonds at seven per cent. We lost one per cent., six per cent. being the legal interest in Maine.

Now the simple question is, not whether the accounting officers have settled the claim, and settled it, as we believe, under a misapprehension of the law, but, do you owe the money? That is the only point in the case. Will you treat us as you have treated Virginia and Maryland? or will you repudiate the debt and deny us our rights? I think the General Government has had quite enough out of Maine. She has lopped off nearly one eighth of our territory, and we reluctantly yielded it as a sacrifice for the common benefit of the whole country, to secure its peace and to avoid a war. We were opposed to it. We knew that every inch of that territory was ours, and so Congress and our State had resolved, over and over again. We did not say, "54° 40' or fight." We went to the frontier to defend and fight for our soil if necessary, and said nothing about it. No boasting—no proclamation in advance of what we would do—but every man's mind was made up to free our territory from foreign aggression. If the General Government had not interposed we would have held every inch of that territory. We were ready to do it. Our troops marched on to the ground in the dead of winter, through a hundred miles of wilderness, with the snow three feet deep, sleeping on the ground, and were ready to take that territory into our own hands. And now you will not pay us what you agreed by solemn treaty stipulation to pay us. All sorts of excuses are got up to put us off and delay payment. Sir, I am sick of it, and hope we shall hear no more of it.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out from the word "pay," in the eleventh line, to the word "State," in the fourteenth line, and insert, in lieu thereof, "and to report to the next Congress the amount so found due, together with all the particulars relating to the same, and."

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there can be no such hurry for this money as to impose upon this House the necessity of making the appropriation without any investigation whatever. We are precluded by our rules from legislating upon an appropriation bill. Our bills go to the Senate; and they come back here loaded down with legislation, which we have no opportunity to examine. In this case, with no creditor who has been kept out of his money, suffering, with no one making a demand here, with no petition here that has been neglected, this House is asked to vote away the authority of the House to an executive officer to ascertain the amount due upon a claim, which

I shall presently notice, and to pay that amount without any other authority than that contained in this amendment.

Now, why should this be done? The State of Maine has been paid once, if not twice. If she has not been fully paid, let her come here, as any other creditor. Let her petition be presented to this House; let it be referred to the Committee of Claims; or let it go to the Court of Claims. Let it, at least, come before the House with some recommendation, or in such a shape that we may know what we are voting on.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Allow me to say that Maine has come here and presented her petition to two committees—the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee of Claims—and those committees have unanimously reported in favor of it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then let us act on those reports, and not ex parte.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Why should we do that, when we can pass the claim here in five minutes?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Because it has not been considered here, and we know nothing about it. It has been the practice of gentlemen upon the other side of the House, during this session, to read us homilies on extravagance; and every expenditure made under authority of this House will be charged against what is called the dominant party here. Let us see who it is who votes for such claims. I do not mean nor desire to prejudge this claim; I will not permit myself to be unjust towards any one; all I ask is that I may have an opportunity of examining it. But when the Senate, in hot haste, in this manner, put into an appropriation bill that which we could not put in ourselves, let us at least say to them that we are in no such haste to pass it. The State of Maine seems to have been paid the principal and interest calculated in a manner that satisfied her at the time; and if, because Virginia, or Maryland, or any other State, has been paid in a manner which obtained for them more in proportion than the State of Maine was paid, why Maine will not suffer by waiting until the House of Representatives can, at its next session, examine her claim.

The vigilance of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] might have been better exerted at an earlier period of the session. Why did he not earlier call attention to this claim? Why was it not pressed on the attention of the House at the time when we could examine it? We are told that it is rank injustice to Maine; that Maine suffered much from the action of the Government. I do not think she has lost much; but if this is justly due to her, let us ascertain it, just as we ascertain the claims of other creditors. I have not a word to say about the propriety of her selling her bonds either above or below par. I do not care for that. If she honestly expended the money for the use and service of the Government, let us give her the principal and interest to the utmost farthing; but I, for one, protest against being called upon in the last hours of the session, on an amendment proposing legislation in a mere appropriation bill, to vote away the public money for a matter the propriety of which I have not time to inquire into.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I have but a word to say. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asked us why we did not come here and have this question presented to the House, so that gentlemen might have an opportunity—

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to say that I have been here for fourteen hours without leaving the Hall, and as we cannot finish the bill to-night, I wish to move that the committee rise.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I have no desire to occupy my five minutes. I simply wish to say that this claim has been favorably reported on, and the bill and report have been in the gentleman's desk, and he might have examined them long ago.

Maine has never yielded this claim. She pressed it before the Treasury Department years ago, and the accounting officers of the Treasury decided, under their construction of the law, that they were authorized to pay the principal and interest, but not discount and losses. Maine immediately came to Congress, and the bill passed the Senate, but failed to pass the House for want of time. The claim is appropriately in an appropriation bill, because the money is due to Maine under existing law, as has been satisfactorily shown to the Committee of Claims. She has been kept out of this money for years, and I think it time that she was paid.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SCALES demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FOSTER and FOLEY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 55.

So the committee refused to rise.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring upon the Senate amendment,

Mr. PHILLIPS demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that the committee rise; and upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FOLEY and CLEMENS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 64; no quorum voting.

The roll of the committee was then called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bennett, Bishop, Blair, Bliss, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Burns, Burroughs, Caruthers, Cavanaugh, Horace F. Clark, Corning, Covode, Burton, Craig, Curtis, Damrell, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dean, Dewart, Dick, Dodd, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, English, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Gartrell, Giddings, Gillis, Gilman, Goode, Greenwood, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hawkins, Hickman, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Hughes, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kellogg, Kilgore, John C. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Miles, Miller, Montgomery, Moore, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Nichols, Olin, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Pike, Powell, Purviance, Quinan, Reilly, Ritchie, Sandidge, Savage, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, William Stewart, Talbot, Thompson, Tripp, Walton, Ward, Warren, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Watkins, White, Winslow, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcofer.

Mr. CURRY stated, pending the call of the roll, that Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, was detained from the House by sickness.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Senate amendments to House bill (No. 200) making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859, and had made some progress in the consideration of said amendments; but finding itself without a quorum had directed the roll to be called, and had instructed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

A quorum having answered to their names, the committee again resumed its session.

Mr. CLEMENS moved that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly Senate amendments to the bill of the House No. 200, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. SAVAGE. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to know whether my name was recorded upon the call of the committee? I was present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a question of privilege.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE WATROUS.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I am directed by a portion of the Committee on the Judiciary to make a report upon the memorials of Eliphas Spencer and Jacob Mussina, in which they pray for the impeachment of John C. Watrous, district judge of the United States court for the district of Texas. I move that the report be printed, and that its further consideration be postponed until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. READY. I am also directed by another branch of the Judiciary Committee to make a report on the same subject. I ask that it also may beprinted, and its further consideration postponed until twelve o'clock on Wednesday next.

It was so ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say to the members of the House that the evidence in the case upon which my friend from Tennessee has just made a report, is printed, and is in the document room.

PURCHASE OF WILKINS'S POINT.

Mr. HASKIN. I rise to a question of privilege. I am authorized to state, on behalf of the select committee to investigate matters connected with the purchase of Wilkins's Point by the Government, that they met this morning, and were unable to agree upon a majority report; that there will be four different statements from members of that committee. I was directed by the committee to offer a resolution.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would suggest to my colleague upon the committee that he had better defer the matter until to-morrow morning, for manifest reasons.

Mr. HASKIN. My object is only to facilitate the printing of the reports.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no objection. My colleague knows the reason why I made the suggestion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee this difficulty; there is still, as he is aware, a collateral inquiry pending before that committee. Under the parliamentary law, if the report is presented now, the committee is dissolved, and we should be arrested in the progress of that inquiry. I interpose no objections to the presentation of the report now, if the committee can be continued.

Mr. HASKIN. I have no objection to making this a partial report, so far as to facilitate the printing of the report, as the session is drawing near to a close.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, then, that the report is a report in part only.

Mr. HASKIN. Only in part.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no objection to that. The gentleman from Virginia has stated the fact that we have yet witnesses to examine, and I desire that we should have an opportunity to do that by authority of the House. If that authority can be granted to the committee, I have no objection to the course proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HASKIN. The committee directed me to submit this resolution as a report, in part. The evidence has been closed, but there is a collateral issue which comes up to-morrow.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the testimony taken before the special committee appointed to investigate the facts and circumstances connected with the purchase and sale of property at Wilkins's Point, New York, in 1857, for fortification purposes, with accompanying documents, and the several reports of the members of the committee, be printed, and the consideration of the subject postponed till the 10th day of June, 1858, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would inquire what is the propriety of making a partial report now? Why not wait till to-morrow?

Mr. HASKIN. The reports are all ready now for printing. The object is to get the testimony and the reports printed before the adjournment, so that members may have them before them next Thursday, when the consideration is to be continued. I call the previous question.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I desire to inquire whether any report is submitted?

Mr. HASKIN. That is the only report.

Mr. BOCK. Will the gentleman add to his resolution:

And that the committee have leave to prosecute and complete the inquiry now before them.

Mr. HASKIN. I consent to that amendment, and I call the previous question.

Mr. FLORENCE. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to say that the committee agreed to the resolution fixing the time of hearing the case?

Mr. HASKIN. A majority of the committee have done so.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not so understand it. Thursday is the day of adjournment.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. Was this committee authorized to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Missouri as objecting?

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I object, if it is not a privileged question.

The SPEAKER, (to Mr. HASKIN.) Was the committee authorized to report at any time?

Mr. HASKIN. That I do not know without referring to the resolution; but I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. GROW. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from New York presented that resolution, and the Chair had it read. Is it not now too late for any one to object to the reception of the report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will recollect that the gentleman from New York stated he rose to a privileged question; which left the Chair under the impression, as he supposes it did the House, that the committee had a right to report at any time. The Chair thinks it operated as a surprise to the House.

Mr. COLFAX. If there be no alarm felt at the reception of the reports, the best way is to let them come in.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. There will be no objection to the reports being presented in proper time. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past eight o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 8, 1858.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MASON presented the credentials of the Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of Virginia for six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1859; which were read, and ordered to be placed on the files.

Mr. FITZPATRICK presented the credentials of the Hon. CLEMENT C. CLAY, jr., elected a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of Alabama for six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1859; which were read, and ordered to be placed on the files.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, together with the documents by which it is accompanied, embracing all the information which it is practicable or expedient to communicate in reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 31st ultimo, on the subject of guano; which was ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a report of the Postmaster General, in answer to a resolution of the Senate requesting information in relation to the Post Office at San Francisco, California.

Mr. BRODERICK. I move that it lie on the table for the present. I desire to look into it. I may, after I have done so, perhaps move to print it.

The communication was ordered to lie on the table. A subsequent motion by Mr. YULEE to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES presented the petition of Thomas M. Folk, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of Francis Huttman, praying remuneration for losses sustained in consequence of illegal proceedings of the collector of the customs at San Francisco, California; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. POLK presented the petition of Thomas Allen and others, praying that certain land offices in Missouri may be closed, under authority of law, and consolidated at St. Louis; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the papers relating to the claim of J. M. Pommares, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 442) for the relief of J. M. Pommares. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John P. Figh and John H. Gindrat, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the petition and papers in the case of John P. Figh and John H. Gindrat be referred to the Court of Claims.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Peter N. Paillet, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Peter N. Paillet, praying indemnity for losses sustained during the war with Mexico, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for examination of the character and amount of losses sustained by said petitioner, whether of goods, wares, merchandise, or money, as alleged in said petition, and to report to Congress the evidence in the case, with the opinion of the court upon the legality or equity of said claim.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. C. C. No. 84) for the relief of Ferdinand Coxe, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 369) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department," approved July 30, 1854, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of H. R. Schoolcraft, reported a bill (S. No. 643) for the relief of Henry R. Schoolcraft; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 440) for the relief of James Tilton, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred several petitions of citizens of Missouri on the subject, reported a bill (S. No. 444) to consolidate at St. Louis, Missouri, such land districts as may be discontinued in that State; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 333) to establish an additional land district in the State of Minnesota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 631) granting an invalid pension to John Holland, of Arkansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 14) to confirm the title in a certain tract of land in the State of Missouri to the heirs and legal representatives of Thomas Maddin, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. No. 29) to refer the case of Joseph Valliere, deceased, to the Court of Claims, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a resolution of the Legislature of California, relative to land titles in that State; the petition of John Phelps; and the petition of William Sawyer; asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution relative to the engraving and publishing of a map of the explorations of Lieutenant Warren in Nebraska Territory, reported in favor of printing five thousand copies of the map; and the report was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print a letter of the Secretary of the Navy, with estimates of the cost of continuing the publication of the charts of the North Pacific ocean and Behring's Straits expedition, reported against the printing, for the reason that the charts are not yet complete.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. No. 39) directing the printing of certain reports therein mentioned, report it back without amendment, and adversely. The Superintendent of Public Printing has made a careful examination; and he reports that the proposed number of copies of Major Delafield's report, with the illustrations, which are of a very costly character, can be printed and bound for $75,000; but the illustrations may be reduced in size, and printed in black, so as to reduce the expense to $55,000. The report of Major Mordecai is also accompanied by illustrations, but to a much less extent; and the proposed number of that document can be bound for about $22,000. If these works be printed, an express appropriation will have to be made for the purpose, because the expense has not been estimated for in any existing appropriation. The Committee on Printing do not think it is essential or proper that these works should be now printed; and therefore I make an adverse report on the resolution; but I do not ask to have it acted on now, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Davis] is not in his seat.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 22) for the relief of Michael Papreniza, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of John H. Wheeler, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 446) for the relief of John H. Wheeler. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 361) for the relief of William Rich, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Ferdinand Coxé, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of Ferdinand Coxé. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of Daniel B. Hibbard, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 447) for the relief of Daniel B. Hibbard. The bill was read, and passed to second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BIGLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 448) to repeal "An act entitled 'An act to expedite telegraphic communication for the uses of the Government, in its foreign intercourse,'" approved March 3, 1857; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution of the Senate (No. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the appropriation made July 8, 1856, upon such channel of the St. Mary's river as he may select.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 55) to regulate fees and costs to be allowed marshals, district attorneys, clerks of courts, jurors, and witnesses, in the State of California; and

A bill (No. 583) providing for keeping and distributing public documents.

An act for the relief of Josiah Webb;

An act making an appropriation for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon;

An act for the relief of Captain Stanton Sholes; and

An act for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac W. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky.

On the 7th of June, the following acts and joint resolution:

An act for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition;

An act granting a pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Devidrine;

An act for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby;

A joint resolution for the relief of Henry Orndorf;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of John McDonough, deceased, late of Louisiana;

An act for the relief of Shove Chase, of New York;

An act for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased;

An act for the relief of the heirs of William Tarvin, deceased;

An act for the relief of James Rumph;

An act for the relief of Stuckey & Rogers;

An act for the relief of John Dearmit; and

An act for the relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon.

MICHAEL HANSON.

Mr. IVERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the petition and papers in the case of Michael Hanson be withdrawn from the Court of Claims, and be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXTENSION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. BIGLER. I move to take up the resolution which I submitted on Saturday last, providing for the extension of the session. The circumstances surrounding what I regard as a very modest proposition and a very proper one in itself, seem to be misunderstood in certain quarters; and I feel required to make a remark or two in explanation of my motives at the time I offered it, and as a justification of myself and others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator first allow the Chair to put the question on taking up the resolution?

Mr. BIGLER. I prefer to make the few remarks I have to make on the question of taking up the resolution itself. In offering this resolution, I was governed solely by considerations connected with the transaction of the public business. I took occasion to inquire into the condition of the business before Congress, and to look at the position assumed by the President of the United States in his annual message. He there suggested to Congress the importance of allowing him at least two days to consider the important bills which always pass near the close of the session, reviewing the practice which had heretofore prevailed, and deprecating its consequences. Taking it for granted that the President of the United States intended to adhere to that position, as I am safe in saying he does intend to adhere to it, I saw that it was utterly impossible to transact even the public business within the time fixed for the adjournment, which is the day after tomorrow. I see it stated in some of the papers that the President of the United States had nothing to do with the proposition which I submitted here. That is very true; and no one can doubt that the President of the United States is anxious that Congress should adjourn so soon as the public business shall have been transacted; but I presume no member supposes that an adjournment prior to that time would be agreeable to the President. I find that there are one hundred and seventy-three bills which we have passed through this body that are pending in the House of Representatives, some of them important public bills. One of them is for the admission of a new State into the Union. We have here eighty-eight bills passed by the House of Representatives, which we have not considered. Amongst these is the Army appropriation bill, the Post Office appropriation bill, the ocean mail service appropriation bill, and two Indian appropriation bills. In addition to these, we have the bill presented by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a very important measure, a measure which, under other circumstances, would occupy weeks of time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me out of order, on a motion to take up a subject, to go into a general discussion of it. We have lost more time this session, since I have been here, in discussing mere questions as to the order of business, than in discussing the merits of the subjects before the Senate. I hope we shall take a vote, and either take up the resolution or not; and if it be taken up, we can then, if necessary, discuss it on its merits.

Mr. BIGLER. If that be the experience of the Senate, I am astonished that the Senator from Wisconsin should raise the question of order, for I should have disposed of this subject in about the length of time he has occupied in raising his question of order, and it is really no question of order at all. It is the commonest thing to give reasons why a measure should be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in answer to the question of order raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, that he is not able to decide that the Senator from Pennsylvania is not speaking to the pending question.

Mr. BIGLER. I am giving reasons why the Senate should take up the joint resolution, and pass it. I am of opinion—I think Senators generally are—that the public business can be disposed of by Monday next. For my own part I prefer the 21st, and I submitted the resolution fixing that day, because it was in accordance with my judgment, and my sense of what duty to the country required. I do not care now to enter into any discussion of the exciting public question which occupied the attention of this body during all of yesterday; but this much I will say, that if the aggressions which have been inflicted on our flag, the indignities which have been offered, shall be recognized and sanctioned by the British Government, then there will be occasion for a continuance of this session of Congress. I presume, however, indeed I believe, that a very few days will bring us an entire disclaimer on the part of the British Government. But suppose it should be otherwise: then who would be willing to adjourn Congress? who would be willing to flee these halls, and leave the honor of the country in the condition in which it would be involved?

The idea which I had upon my mind was, that Congress might very properly remain in session until we heard from our Minister at the court of St. James; but I am satisfied that the sense of the Senate, in regard to the time of adjournment, is against me; and in accordance with what I believe to be the wish of the majority here, I modify my resolution so as to fix the 14th.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which, as modified, reads as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the resolution directing the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Thursday, the 10th of June, at twelve o'clock, m., be, and the same is hereby rescinded; and that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die on Monday, the 14th of June, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. TOOMBS called for the yeas and nays on the resolution; and they were ordered.

Mr. TOOMBS. In regard to the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the Calendar, I will say there is nothing in it. The Calendar is never got through with, and has never been from the beginning of the Government, and never will be; but the longer you sit here the more there will be on it. As to the discharge of the public business, as I have said here before, I have never known a session when, within a week of the adjournment, we were so nearly through with the necessary business of the country. As for intelligence from across the water, I do not wish to hear anything from there at all. If I wanted any more information on which to legislate for the country, there might be some reason for it; but I do not want any. I do not expect to get anything from Mr. Dallas on this subject that will, in the slightest degree, affect my public conduct. I trust we have something else to do than to sit in our seats waiting to hear from the circumlocution office over in London.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say a word in regard to bills of a private character. I think I may say, from fifteen years' experience, that I have never known the Private Calendar to have been as well disposed of as it is to-day, at any session since I have been a member of Congress. Between now and Monday we shall have time to dispose of the public business and a number of days to devote to the Private Calendar. If we adjourn on that day, we shall have concluded more business, we shall have done it more promptly, we shall have diminished our Calendar more, than at any session of Congress I have ever known.

Mr. HAYNE. I came here in miserable health, and I am yet exceedingly delicate; but I sincerely believe it is our duty to remain here until Monday. I do not think we can adjourn before that time with anything like dignity and propriety to ourselves. If there be a man in the Senate, from length of service, and from his peculiar position, who knows better than any other when we ought to adjourn, that gentleman will tell you on the 14th of the month. I shall vote for the resolution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 43, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Green, Gwin, Hamlin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Sidelick, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Pearce, Pugh, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toombs—16.

So the resolution was agreed to.

RETURN OF A BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution requesting the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. No. 198) for the relief of Joseph Hardy and Alton Long. The request was complied with on the part of the Senate by an order directing the Secretary to return the bill to the House of Representatives.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 287) for the relief of Timothy O'Keefe, for the purpose of correcting an error.

SETTLERS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the consent of the Senate that the bill (H. R. No. 246) may be taken up and passed. It will not lead to debate. It has passed the House, been unanimously reported by our Committee on Public Lands, and no debate will grow out of it. It concerns a class of individuals.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin.

It proposes to confirm to the State of Wisconsin so much of the even-numbered sections of land selected by that State in the month of June, 1849, to satisfy the quantity of land due the State under the act of Congress of August 8, 1846, granting land in aid of the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, as have been sold, or contracted to be sold, by the State or its assigns, under the laws thereof; and the title of the purchasers is declared to be valid as though the selections had been made in conformity with law, with a proviso that this is not to be construed to increase the quantity of land to which the State is entitled under the grant, and that a schedule, duly certified by the owner, of the lands sold and contracted for to be sold, prior to the passage of this bill shall be filed in the General Land Office within six months from its passage.

The bill further provides that every person being the head of a family, widow, or single man over the age of twenty-one years, who, on the 11th of June, 1849, was, or since that time has become, an actual settler and housekeeper, and has made other improvements on any tract embraced in the even-numbered section selection, which the State of Wisconsin or its assigns has not sold or contracted to sell, is entitled to the same right of preemption, upon the same terms and conditions as are prescribed by the act of September 4, 1841.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTHONY W. BAYARD.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up a bill for the relief of an old soldier in my State. It is the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the payment to Anthony W. Bayard of $1,136, in lieu of arrears of pension, at the rate now allowed him by law, from the time of his being originally placed on the pension roll to the 1st day of January 1852, when the present rate was allowed.

Bayard's name was placed on the pension roll at eight dollars a month, in 1844. In 1852, Congress increased the pension to twenty dollars a month. It is evident to the committee that he would have been entitled to a full pension from the date of his wounds in 1812 if he had applied for it; and by his neglect to make the application then, he failed to receive more than three thousand dollars. It is not proposed to give him this, but to pay him the difference between eight and twenty dollars a month from 1844 to 1852.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. M. JONES.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey. I call up the bill which was under discussion yesterday when the hour of one o'clock arrived.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 42) granting a pension to Mary A. M. Jones.

Mr. IVERSON. I move to reconsider the vote which was taken yesterday on the amendment to this bill, by which the pension proposed to be allowed to Mrs. Gaines was fixed at fifty dollars a month. I voted in the affirmative on that proposition, and I move now to reconsider that vote. I beg leave, by way of explanation, to say that I am opposed to this system of pensions; and the bill itself cannot receive my sanction; but I think it just that the friends of Mrs. Gaines should have an opportunity of having her pension fixed at something like a relative proportion to the rank her husband held. General Worth was a major general by brevet, but was only a colonel in the line, and was drawing the pay proper of a colonel at the time of his death; his widow was pensioned at the rate of fifty dollars a month; so General Jones, for whose widow the bill provides, was a brevet brigadier general, but only a colonel in the line. General Gaines was a brigadier general in full, and he was a major general by brevet, and he was drawing the pay of a major general at the time of his death, because he was in command of a military division. According to the same relative proportion, it would seem to me just that Mrs. Gaines should be entitled to one half the proper pay of her husband at the time of his death—either brigadier's pay, or major general's pay. I am willing to reconsider that section, and vote to give her that pay; and then I shall be constrained, according to my conscientious convictions of duty, to vote against the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment which it is proposed to reconsider.

The Secretary read the following:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the name of Myra Clark Gaines, widow of Major General Edmund P. Gaines, United States Army, be placed on the pension roll; and that she be paid at a rate not exceeding fifty dollars per month, to commence on the 6th day of June, 1849, and to continue during her natural life."

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope the motion to reconsider will not prevail, for the reasons given by my colleague. I endeavored to show yesterday that this system of pensions was a gratuity from the beginning of the Government, or since the system was adopted; and that, when the laws have given half the pay proper of the officer, they have allowed no case to go beyond the half pay of a lieutenant colonel. That has been the long-established rule, even for the most brilliant services, and for losing one's life in action. Well, what reason is there that this lady should be an exception? What reason can any Senator suggest? You adopt a rule by which the families of hundreds and hundreds of officers, in the Army of the United States, who have actually fallen in battle, have received a pension. General Gaines was but a brigadier general in the Army. I think General Worth was a brigadier general. I am not certain as to that fact, but my impression was, that he was a brigadier general by brevet. General Gaines was a major general by brevet, and very much by courtesy, too; because, in a long peace he was not engaged, and he was too old for active service during the Mexican war. It was not his fault, but it was the fact. You propose to overturn the general rule, which is strictly a pension—I am now referring to cases where an officer falls in battle—for it is part of his contract, when he goes into the Army, that if he does fall in battle there shall be half pay given to his widow, but in no case shall it exceed the half pay of a lieutenant colonel.

Somebody has handed to me a report made in the other House—I think the bill has passed, possibly—to accompany House bill No. 474, for the relief of Mary Kirby Smith. Her husband, E. Kirby Smith, was a captain in the Army. He was lieutenant in the last war. I happened to know him personally in the service many years ago. He distinguished himself as a subaltern on the Canada frontier. Promotion came very slow, and he was still a lieutenant, but just before the breaking out of the Mexican war he became a captain. At the battle of Molino del Rey, on account of his superior officers being wounded, and not being able to go to the field, he was actually commanding as lieutenant colonel in the Army of the United States, and was mortally wounded, upon a charge to recover that battle, which was nearly lost. His widow got only the half pay of his rank of captain, though he was actually performing the duties of a lieutenant colonel, and probably lost his life on account of it, for he was mounted and commanding a battalion when but a captain in the line. Why should not this case be brought in as an amendment? I presume the widows of officers killed in battle, on the pension roll stand on the same foundation. For what purpose, now, will the Senate overturn it? Where is the justice, where is the equity of it? Are you going to depart from this great and fundamental rule, that pensions shall not exceed this sum, no matter what may be the grade of the officer? Is it right to alter it? Shall we depart from the practice of our fathers? Are the services of General Gaines deserving of it? He died in a ripe old age, probably eighty years of age, after having been maintained by his country for years. I know it is very easy for Senators to bring in the eagle, and the stars and stripes, and pass eulogies on anybody; but the fact is that many of these men have been maintained forty years by their country, in the long peace between the war of 1812 and the war with Mexico, with occasional and not very brilliant services in our Indian campaigns. We have had no Indian campaigns of consequence since General Jackson's southern campaign in 1817 and 1818.

Now, to give Mrs. Gaines any pension at all is against law. To give her any pension at all is against principle. To give her any pension at all, is against well-settled principles, from the Revolution until now, with the exception of the last five years, when there has been careless and reckless legislation. This is a total departure from principle. But I suppose revolutionary services are nothing, dying in battle is nothing, when put in the opposite scale to a fascinating lady who makes personal solicitations to old Senators. I believe that is just about the case. The older they are the worse they are. I am told that attachment to the ladies, when it gets in the head, is worse than anywhere else. [Laughter.] That is all the reason of it. It ought not to be done. It is against principle, it is against right; and I hope, therefore, the measure will not pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. This appears to be one of the perversities of the Senator from Georgia. With his characteristic ability and fine understanding he occasionally gets into a kink, and I think this is an occasion on which it has happened. I regret exceedingly to make any remarks on this subject; but I really think he has tried to treat it with a degree of unfairness and levity that does not pertain to it. This measure is not against law; but it is intended to remedy a defect which now exists in the law. If it were in strict accordance with law, it would not be necessary. It is for the purpose of remedying defects that now exist in the law, by according an act of justice to the applicant here.

I regret that the gentleman has misapprehended the position of General Gaines; and he appears, also, to have taken a very cursory view of his claims to public confidence, public regard, and to national obligation. General Gaines won his rank. He won two brevets in Canada, in the face of an enemy; and for the brevet of major general, I think he suffered a siege at Erie of forty days, beleaguered by a superior force, on which occasion he received a wound that inflicted disability upon him during his life. Yet such were his ardor and zeal and his soldierly devotion to his country, that he never permitted it, beyond the immediate suffering and injury received, to detain him from service a single hour. He marched to the Canada frontier as a colonel. He there gained both his brevets. No officer stood more high in the Army, either for chivalry, capacity, or fidelity to the interests of his country. Exemplary in all his relations of life; as to temperance, moderation, constancy, and fidelity, he was unrivaled. He was in every respect a soldier and a gentleman. Patriotism was his predominant feeling. In the campaign in Florida, he resumed his duties again as a major general, after having been on duty at various stations in time of peace; and during that war he experienced greater privations and difficulties than any other general in the field; and I would say nothing against the gallant gentlemen who were connected with that war. He there received another wound. He continued in service, discharging always the duties of a major general. He was entitled to the pay of a major general. His widow is now entitled to the half pay of a major general, because he never performed services inferior to them. When General Macomb was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, General Gaines commanded the division of the South. He had the unlimited confidence of General Jackson. He regarded him as one of the fairest and bravest soldiers of the Army, and a most accomplished gentleman. He assigned to him at one time the command immediately bordering on Texas, at the time of her revolution; and there he acquitted himself as became an officer, in maintaining peace and in vindicating the honor of the flag of the United States. He maintained a neutrality under exciting circumstances, most commendable to him.

Well, sir, his widow now comes forward as a claimant. Fifty dollars a month has been accorded to others; and, taking the relative rank of the officers whose widows have thus been provided for, and General Gaines, her allowance should be nearly one hundred dollars per month. The scale regulating pensions in the Army graduates them according to the pay the officers receive. The gentleman from Georgia chooses to refer to a captain who was accidentally called into service on a contingency, and for the single occasion acted as lieutenant colonel. That was the privilege he had on account of being the senior captain, and the field officers being withdrawn from their situations. That contingency he availed himself of. He had the glory of his position. He had no real rank beyond that of captain; and the regulations of the Army of the United States did not entitle those claiming, in virtue of his death, to any superior advantage over other captains.

I sincerely hope that justice will be meted out according to the relative circumstances and positions of the different individuals in whose behalf we are acting; and it is commendable and honorable in the Senate to do it. Sir, if you recompense gallantry by generosity, you will have gallant men. How are you to get an army if a man has no stimulus to enter the ranks of his country, and to defend its standard? and if he can say to himself, "if I fall in defending the liberties of the country, my family, who are dependent on the pittance I draw from the Government, will be left beggars in the world, friendless, and pointed at as the miserable remnants of a reputation of a father, who commended himself to the confidence of his country by the sacrifice of his life." Sir, you will never in that way commend gallantry to honorable minds like Gaines, who was distinguished for his generosity, his truth, his nobleness, his chivalry, and what crowned all, was his matchless generosity. Sir, if he had the power to dispense benefits, feeling as he did, he never could be appealed to by a soldier in vain. Nay, sir; if a soldier's dog had come to his marquee hungry, and he had asked, "Whose dog is that?" and they had said it was a soldier's dog, he would have replied, "Feed him."

Mr. HAYNE. I must rise to say that I consider this an exception to the general rule, upon the principle that equity is right to correct law. It is upon that principle, which all the lawyers here understand a great deal better than I do, that I think Mrs. Gaines should be treated with liberality; and I shall vote for her pension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the allowance to Mrs. Gaines was limited to fifty dollars? That is the question.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Crittenden, Dixon, Doollittle, Douglas, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Green, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Clay, Durkee, Fitzpatrick, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mason, Pearce, Pugh, Slidell, Toombs, and Wright—16.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. The question now is on the amendment to strike out the half pay, and insert fifty dollars per month. We have reconsidered that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The last vote has reconsidered the whole amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.] The next step is the amendment to strike out the half pay.

Mr. STUART. If it is necessary, I move to reconsider that.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now, is on striking out of the amendment the words, "half pay proper per month, to which the said Gaines was entitled at his death," and insert "not exceeding fifty dollars per month."

Mr. HALE. I have labored very zealously, both in this Congress and the last, to obtain a pension for Mrs. Jones, and I am very desirous of voting for it. I am willing also to vote for the pension of Mrs. Gaines; but I understand, on inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that never, from the institution of this Government to this moment, has the Government gone higher than fifty dollars a month, to the widow of an officer of the Army; and, however much I regret it, if this amendment be adopted, I shall be compelled to vote against the whole bill.

Mr. JONES. I would thank the Senator to give my whole testimony, if he gives any. I said there never was such a meritorious case presented to the Senate before, in my opinion.

Mr. HALE. I did not pretend to give your opinions, but your facts.

Mr. TOOMBS. I think, at all events, the attention of the country ought to be brought to that single fact. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Pensions says this is the most meritorious case that has ever been presented. Is that true? Is it more meritorious than those officers who shed their blood and lost their lives on the battle-fields of the Revolution? Is it more meritorious than those patriots who shed their blood and lost their lives on your battle-fields in the last war with England? Is it more meritorious than those who left their bones bleaching on a foreign soil in the Mexican war? Can any man say so? General Gaines was maintained by his country for forty years—literally maintained by his country for forty years; he did his duty, I admit, in earlier life in the last war, but he was not distinguished after that time for anything, I undertake to say, notwithstanding the allegation of the Senator from Texas; and I appeal to history. He was a worthy man, but as for having undergone sufferings or done distinguished services, you may in vain point anywhere else than the speeches of the Senator from Texas, and the general declarations of Senators to find it. It is not in the history of your country; it cannot be found there. Was it more meritorious than the case of Colonel E. Kirby Smith, who fell retrieving a lost battle, who rallied your retreating troops, and spent his life's blood in wrenching victory from defeat? Is it true that the case of this man who had his three, four, or five thousand dollars for forty years, and died in his bed, not in the public service nor by exposure, is more meritorious than those illustrious patriots who lost their lives standing breast to breast with the enemies of their country? It is not true, sir. It is favoritism, and nothing else. There are a thousand cases blazing the records of your country, that do not need a eulogist in the Senate, of men who have written their history by their swords upon every page of their country's annals, who have not received these rewards; but a senatorial eulogy that he would feed a dog if it was a soldier's dog, that is the merit which the Senator from Texas—

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President—

Mr. TOOMBS. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I thought the gentleman had finished. I do not wish to interfere with him. I am very sorry that he has thought it necessary to forget that portion of history which was considered very exciting at the time, I recollect, and involved the security of our frontier. General Gaines was for years engaged arduously in defending Florida, subject to the influences of climate and to Indian warfare. He was there wounded a second time. He shed his blood, as I have stated, and was disabled in the war in Canada. He resumed his duties, and continued them up to the day of his death, always subject to the insalubrious climate of the South, never having a northern station, and never having a furlough that I heard of. He was the very officer who would have been selected for command in the Mexican war had it not been for some difficulties that arose in the construction of orders and military regulations, and he was withdrawn. His pride of character was such that he demanded an investigation of his conduct. I can assure the gentleman that he was never off duty. He died at his post in the insalubrious climate of New Orleans. It was cholera that carried him off. Had he selected a pleasant northern situation, one in the interior, not subject to all the malign influences of a sea-board, he might have been living to-day. He was not superannuated, for he had always performed his duty promptly. He stood erect; he had no debility about him. He had been a soldier, injured to martial difficulties and dangers. He met every emergency that awaited him in life, and acquitted himself to the satisfaction of his country and the admiration of his countrymen; and the devotion of his soldiers would only perish with themselves. Sir, I am proud in this Senate to say that I served as an enlisted soldier under Gaines, who was unrivaled in all the attributes of soldiery of honor and of truth.

Mr. TOOMBS. I yielded to the Senator, and he has made a speech, but he has not replied to me. I would have given General Gaines's memory the charity of my silence on the Florida campaign, if it had not been thrust on me by the Senator from Texas. I know nothing distinguished or illustrious performed by General Gaines in that service, and I had the best opportunity of knowing what was done there. I saw nothing in his being cooped up on the Withlacoochie, with eight hundred or a thousand men, and relieved—

Mr. HAYNE. Allow me, sir, to say—

Mr. TOOMBS. I beg your pardon, sir. I am willing my friend should speak after me.

Mr. HAYNE. I do not wish to speak. I merely desire to state this fact, that if General Gaines performed nothing during that campaign, those who followed after him did just as little. It was a most intricate campaign. General Scott, that distinguished soldier, had an army of ten thousand men afterwards. It was an abortive campaign—nothing was done.

Mr. TOOMBS. That would be a very good speech against a pension being given to any of them, but I do not see that it helps out the case of General Gaines at all. If he did nothing, and other people did nothing, we ought, therefore, to pension nobody. I do not see that you can set off nothing against nothing. If nobody else was distinguished, I will reward nobody. Therefore, I think the argument of my friend from South Carolina is a good one against the pension, and not for it. I say there was nothing distinguished in that campaign. It was a humiliating expedition to the country—an unsuccessful one, eminently—and so felt by the entire Republic.

I say this is senatorial eulogy; it is not history; and I am unwilling to stand as one of the Senators in this body, and hear it said that General Gaines is the most distinguished of all the great military characters who have adorned our military history. It is not the truth—that is what I say about it. There are tens, there are hundreds, there are thousands, of brave and patriotic men who have filled bloody graves. There are thousands and tens of thousands of poor men, not generals, who left their bones upon the plains of Mexico, whose flesh was eaten up by vultures, and whose widows get sixty dollars a year for five years. We heard none of these speeches for them. That was the law of the land. That was their pay. We are introducing this principle that was repelled by the country even when they gave gratuities or pensions in advance. It is that we shall not pay a man according to his rank, but according to eminent services. You carry out the same idea of building up your privileged class. The laws will not give the pay because he happens to be an officer of the Army of high rank, a major general; but they have declared our policy has been, when the grant was not pension, but a compensation fixed in advance, when a brave man entered the service of the country, to tell him, "go and do your duty; meet danger wherever it comes; and if you fall in battle, we will pension your widow for five years at the half pay of your rank, provided you fall before you reach the rank of lieutenant colonel, or at that point, but no more."

Then this exception is sought to be made in favor of a man, who, I say, was for forty years maintained by his country. It is in vain to tell me, it is in vain to tell an American freeman and people out of doors that you are rewarding General Gaines for great services. He did his duty. At the sortie of Fort Erie he did it. He did his duty, so far as I know, everywhere. I have no reproaches to cast on him; but I say he is not more distinguished than thousands and tens of thousands, and not as much distinguished as other thousands who fell in battle; therefore, when you put him on the same basis with the best man that ever fought and bled and died for his country, you have done enough. When you do more you violate principle; you violate justice; you violate even the memories of the illustrious dead.

Mr. HAYNE. I will just say—and I think Senators will understand that I am perfectly correct—that my distinguished friend from Georgia, evidently, if he did not point the finger of scorn, did point the finger of disapprobation exclusively at General Gaines; and I rose to state the fact that even our distinguished General Scott, with an army much stronger than that of General Gaines, did nothing that the country could approve of in Florida, because there were difficulties in Florida which were almost insurmountable from the nature of the country itself.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "half the pay proper per month to which the said Gaines was entitled at his death," and to insert "not exceeding fifty dollars per month."

Mr. TOOMBS. I will say that this pension, even as it stands, commencing in 1849 at $600 a year, will give a bonus of over five thousand dollars to start upon, besides what is received for all the rest.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely wish to say—

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator from Mississippi will allow me to suggest to him that we had better take the question. We have but a very few minutes.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Clay, Durkee, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pugh, Sidel, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Green, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Polk, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and the question recurred on the original amendment offered by Mr. SEWARD as an additional section.

Mr. PUGH. I hope the Senate will not put this amendment on the bill. The whole object of it is to make Mrs. Jones's case carry the case of Mrs. Gaines through the House of Representatives. I hope the friends of Mrs. Gaines's bill will put it through in its regular order, and not stay a bill which has passed the other House and is meritorious by itself, and ought to pass here. I think it is unfair; I think it is unkind; I think it is ungenerous. I have no objection to a pension to Mrs. Gaines, but I think it is wrong to defeat this bill for Mrs. Jones, by putting another proposition on it. It has never been done before. It has been but once attempted since I have been in the Senate, and it was then rebuked by a large majority. I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment, and I ask the Senator from New York to have the goodness to withdraw it. I will vote for a bill to give Mrs. Gaines a pension by itself, but I consider this amendment a defeat of the original bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The bill from the House has already been amended, and it has to go back.

Mr. PUGH. That amendment, I can satisfy the Senator from Georgia, really increases the pension, and probably he will be willing to withdraw it.

Mr. HUNTER. Has not the hour arrived for the special order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will call it up when the hour arrives.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Before the question is put, I desire to know what amount this is we are giving away out of the Treasury? I want to understand what it is. These indefinite terms about "half pay proper," are unintelligible to the Senate generally. I find gentlemen all around me disagreeing as to their meaning. Let us say what is meant, in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Ninety dollars a month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour has arrived for the consideration of the special order, which is the unfinished business of yesterday, the Army appropriation bill.

FOREIGN AGGRESSIONS.

Mr. MASON. I think the debate of yesterday shows that whatever bill may be up, making appropriations, it will carry debate with it on other bills that are before the Senate with reference to our foreign relations. I move, therefore, to postpone the Army bill and all previous orders, with a view to take up the bill (S. No. 402) conferring power on the President relative to our relations with Mexico.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will not be done. I think we ought to get through with the Army bill, and perhaps another appropriation bill, today. I do not apprehend there will be much debate on it.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I will only remind the Senate that I think it is due to the House of Representatives, in good faith, that we should devote ourselves to the appropriation bills. We can take up other subjects afterwards. It is known that the President requires certain time for the consideration of these bills, and this makes it eminently proper that we should take them up first.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator state what bill it is, that we may understand how to vote?

Mr. MASON. It is the bill (S. No. 402) on the subject of our relations with Mexico and Central America. It is the bill referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, by the Senator from Illinois, and reported with a substitute.

Mr. HUNTER. We all know the bill. I hope the Senator from New York will not ask to have it read.

Mr. SEWARD. Certainly not; I only wanted to know what it was.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. MASON. I wish to say a word in reply to my colleague before the vote is taken. I am not aware that there is anything more due to the House of Representatives than the relations of comity that exist between the two branches of the Legislature; but there is a great deal due to the country, and due to the property and persons of our citizens interested in the passage of this bill. I shall not discuss it, or detain the Senate; but I have thought it to be my duty to bring it to the notice of the Senate, as a bill which, in my judgment, claims precedence over the appropriation bills, especially at this stage of the session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. For the very reason that something is due to the country, I think we ought to take up the appropriation bills, and not have any more of what I cannot help calling mere humbug in the Senate on these other bills.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Clingman, Crittenden, Douglas, Green, Hayne, Houston, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Reid, Sidel, and Thompson of New Jersey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Pearce, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, Wright, and Yates—40.

So the motion of Mr. MASON was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

An act to increase the pension of Henry E. Reed, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes;

An act granting an invalid pension to Conrad Schroeder;

A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the appropriation made July 8, 1856, upon such channel of the St. Mary's river as he may select;

An act for the relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois;

An act for the relief of certain settlers upon the public lands in the State of Wisconsin;

An act granting an invalid pension to Alexander S. Bean, of Pennsylvania;

An act for the relief of Wyatt Griffith;

An act for the relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee;

An act granting an invalid pension to James Fugate, of Missouri; and

An act for the relief of Stephen Fellows;

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

An act (H. R. No. 55) to regulate fees and costs to be allowed marshals, district attorneys, clerks of courts, jurors, and witnesses, in the State of California—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 583) providing for keeping and distributing public documents—to the Committee on the Library.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased; and

An act to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 243) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

Mr. HUNTER. My friend and colleague on the Finance Committee, the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] has charge of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. STUART. It is not necessary to read the bill at length.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the Secretary will not read the bill at length, but will proceed to read the amendments of the Finance Committee. The Chair hears no objection to this course.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance, was to strike out the following clause on page 7:

For the alteration of old arms so as to make them breech-loading guns, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, $100,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend that clause before the question is taken on striking it all out, by striking out the words, "breech-loading guns in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War," and inserting in lieu thereof, "conform to the present models, and for the purchase of approved breech-loading arms," so as to make the clause read:

For the alteration of old arms so as to make them conform to the present models, and for the purchase of approved breech-loading arms, $100,000.

Mr. SLIDELL. I should like to have some information on this subject. This clause of the appropriation bill was adopted by the House of Representatives, after full consideration, and I think it is in conformity with a recommendation of the Secretary of War. Its purpose is to alter a certain number of arms that are now comparatively unserviceable and useless, not being of the approved model and pattern, at very trifling expense, so as to make them the most efficient arms in the world. I chiefly rose to correct a false impression that seems to have been very industriously circulated in the Senate—I do not know for what reason or motive, though I might, perhaps, conjecture—that this appropriation is intended to inure to the benefit of a single individual. If there were anything in this clause that looked in that direction, I certainly should not be its advocate. It is very true that the attention, probably, of the Military Committee in the other House, and certainly gentlemen in the Senate, has been more peculiarly called to the examination of a gun which has been invented by a constituent of mine. I have never voted, and probably never shall vote, in the Senate, for any appropriation, however small, that is intended to give the stamp of approbation to the invention of any individual or to give him privileges which are not enjoyed by the rest of the community. This appropriation is in a general form, to enable the Secretary of War to convert a certain portion of arms now on hand, from the ordinary rifle and musket into the breech-loading arm. It is said that this conversion can be effected at a charge of about two dollars and a half per arm, thus making a musket or rifle, now capable of discharging but a single shot, a revolving, breech-loading arm, that discharges five or six shots.

I do not profess to be at all familiar with arms; I have a rude, general notion on the subject, and I confess my entire ignorance generally of mechanical inventions. I may reproach myself on that subject, perhaps, but I have a guide in these matters which to me, heretofore, has been an unerring one—that the usefulness of an invention is generally in proportion to its simplicity. Any man who looks at these breech-loading guns understands them at once. They appear not to be at all complicated, not likely to get out of order; and if they are not obnoxious to some charge on the part of experienced professional gentlemen who say they are not serviceable in the field, it is evident that the offensive capacity of each soldier will be increased in the proportion of six to one, if these arms be substituted for the ordinary arms.

I rose in the first instance to ask, at any rate, for some explanation of the motives which induced the Committee on Finance to strike out this clause of the bill, which has been adopted, I presume, after full consideration, by the House of Representatives. It is due to ourselves to give some reason for striking out the appropriation made by the House.

Mr. PEARCE. It appeared to the Committee on Finance that this was a large sum to appropriate for the purpose. They were informed, in relation to the arm alluded to by the Senator from Louisiana, that the alteration of old muskets into that form of gun could be made at an expense of about two dollars and a half. Whether the Secretary of War would apply this sum to the change of the old muskets into the new arm alluded to by the Senator or not, the committee had no means of knowing. They were assured, out of doors, that he had come to no conclusion on the subject; but supposing that it was his purpose to apply this appropriation to that object, it was sufficient to alter forty thousand muskets, and the committee were not disposed to appropriate so much for that purpose, because it seemed to them that it was something of an experiment, and that there should be some surer test than that of ordinary individual inspection by the members of a committee, or even by persons familiar with military weapons; and in this they were supported by a letter from the colonel of ordnance, from which I beg to read a very few sentences. Speaking of breech-loading guns, and after having expressed the preference given by the board of officers at West Point last summer, after some preliminary trials of Burnside's breech-loading arm, the colonel of ordnance goes on to say:

"I think it due to the merits of the different inventions which have been presented, to compare the breech-loading arms, that the opportunity should be given of settling the question of superiority, or otherwise, as a military weapon, by actual use in the hands of troops—the only sure and reliable test."

The committee thought so, too; the committee thought the only sure and reliable test of a newly-invented gun must be found in its use in actual service. They supposed, therefore, that if an appropriation were made at all, it should be a small one—enough to purchase a thousand stand of arms, to equip a regiment with, and let it be tried by them in actual service. But, on considering the whole matter, though they determined on this account to move to strike out the appropriation, they thought it would be as well to let the Military Committee have an opportunity of examining the subject; and the papers were therefore sent to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who has prepared the amendment he has submitted. I am very much disposed to defer to his judgment; but I have no authority to withdraw the amendment of the Committee on Finance. I feel disposed to give my individual vote for his proposition. I would suggest to him, however, that it would perhaps be better to apportion more specifically the sum his amendment proposes to appropriate between the objects he has mentioned in it. I do not think he has discriminated the amount to be applied to altering the old guns into breech-loading weapons from the amount to be apportioned to purchasing new guns. I think he has left the appropriation in gross, leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary to apply such part of it as he pleases to the one purpose, and the residue to the other. I was in hopes that the Military Committee would designate what portion of the $100,000 should be applied to each of these objects.

Mr. DAVIS. The amendment proposed by me does not indicate a purpose to alter any of the arms of the United States into breech-loading arms. My own opinion is, that the musket or the rifle would be injured by being altered into a breech-loading arm for any purpose for which it is used either by the militia or the Army; and that the only value of a breech-loading arm belongs to its use by cavalry; that, in other words, the value of breech-loading, so far as applied to military purposes, is confined to those cases where the man has not freedom of action to load the piece at the muzzle. The infantry-man who has space enough, and is in proper position to load his piece at the muzzle, I think is better served with a muzzle-loading piece than a breech-loading piece. When breech-loading was first introduced, the great defect in arms was the difficulty of putting down a ball so as to obtain all the force of the powder to propel it. It was necessary it should be rammed home with great force. Then breech-loading had its value in rapidity of fire, or in putting the ball in as if intended to have rapid firing at any rate, so that it should be tight in passing out. All that has been superseded by the introduction of the expanding ball, which is put in loose in the muzzle, rammed home without delay, expanded by the powder the moment it is ignited, and passes out of the piece tight. There is, therefore, no advantage to the foot-man in loading a piece at the breech. There are many disadvantages. It necessarily complicates the machinery of the piece. It is liable to get out of order. It usually requires special ammunition; and just in proportion as you multiply the varieties of ammunition you increase the disability of the troops. The special ammunition designed for a particular piece may be exhausted in a battle, and until they can reach the supply for that special arm, it is impossible for them to get any ammunition which will answer their purpose. If, however, the ammunition be all of one kind, you can go to the first caisson you reach.

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator will allow me to ask him, for information, whether there are not breech-loading guns that are prepared so as to use the common ammunition?

Mr. DAVIS. There are some methods of breech-loading which enable you to load at the muzzle equally as at the breech, and which enable you to use the ordinary ammunition firing with the cap, if the special ammunition be exhausted, and to some of them they attach the primer, so as to make them self-priming. All special arms, however, are subject to objection. The parts cannot be interchanged with other arms, and if they get out of order, they must be thrown away. The objection which I was stating applies rather to the peculiar method of breech-loading which was presented by the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana. The amendment I have proposed is to enable the Secretary to alter the old flint-lock muskets so as to make them conform to the present models, to make them percussion muskets; self-priming or not, as he may judge best; rifled or not, as he may judge best. The Senator from Maryland will therefore perceive that it is impossible for me to divide the sum, because it will depend on the method the Secretary may adopt. One method will cost fifty cents, another will cost $1.50. I believe that is about the range in the methods employed for converting the flint-lock into the percussion musket, self-priming.

Then the next provision is to enable the Secretary to purchase breech-loading arms of approved models, in order that he may have a small number of every new improvement that he may put in the hands of troops, subject it to actual test, and discover its value. It would be very unwise for the Government, for the small number it ought to take of any new arm, to build machinery, and incur the vast expenses which necessarily must be incurred to make a new pattern of arms in its armory, to delay the manufacture of arms according to the approved model, and at last perhaps to find that the arms, if manufactured, were worthless, or, if the old arm had been altered, we not only lost the money we expended in the alteration, but ruined the arm on which the alterations were made. I object to any alteration, upon any new plan of breech-loading, of those arms which we have, and which we know to be good. Let new plans be tested upon new manufactures, and tested upon a small scale until we discover their reliability.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Of course, Mr. President, on a subject of this kind, I would not pretend to put my judgment and my experience against those of the honorable Senator who has just addressed the Senate; but there is one portion of his remarks that really does not recommend itself to my mind. It is that portion which relates to the purchase of breech-loading arms, instead of permitting the Secretary of War to change some of the old arms into breech-loading arms, as he desires to do. I understand, for instance, that these breech-loading arms, when purchased, cost from thirty to forty dollars apiece, and we can make a change of some of the old arms at an expense of two or three dollars a weapon, the weapon now being worth but three or four dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. We have none such.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That is the report.

Mr. SLIDELL. With the permission of my colleague and the Senator from Mississippi, I will ask the Secretary to read a letter from the head of the War Department and two other documents in order that the Senate may understand the matter.

The Secretary read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, May 27, 1858.

SIR: The inclosed report from the Ordnance Bureau shows the number of altered arms now on hand, five hundred and fifty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-two muskets, sixty-two thousand two hundred and thirty-eight rifles, the estimated value of which, at auction or by other means which the Department could not adopt for their sale, would be about two dollars and fifty cents each.

There is a necessity for selling these guns, when they are regarded as no longer suited for the service, because of the expense which their storage and care imposes on the Department. The alteration of them to breech-loading arms, by some of the most approved methods, would make them, in my judgment, quite equal to the muzzle-loading guns which we now manufacture at the national armories; the best of which are worth from thirteen to sixteen dollars a piece. The cost of this alteration would probably be covered by a sum ranging from two and a half to four dollars. This would constitute a very great saving to the United States, as the above figures will show.

The inclosed statement of Major Bell, of the Ordnance Corps, will show the advantages to be derived from the alteration of the arms according to Morse's patent; and this statement I recommend to you as worthy of attention, from the deservedly high character which the writer possesses for attainments and practical knowledge in his profession.

There are some other methods of breech-loading which may be fairly regarded as competing with these for simplicity and efficiency, and which experience might show would answer quite as well for the altered arms.

I presume that the foregoing statements furnish the information which you ask for.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. M. SANDIDGE, House of Representatives.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That is in accordance with what I understood to be the facts of the case.

Mr. SLIDELL. Will my colleague permit the other letters to be read?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am very willing.

The Secretary read, as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WASHINGTON, May 27, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office of a letter from Hon. J. M. SANDIDGE, of the House of Representatives, and to report that we have on hand, besides the arms of the model of 1855, five hundred and fifty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty-two percussion muskets—those altered to percussion and flint lock—and sixty-two thousand two hundred and thirty-eight rifles of similar descriptions.

Very few of the arms have been in service. They originally cost and were valued at about thirteen dollars each. If sold at auction they would not probably realize $2 50.

Not knowing what alteration is proposed to be made, I cannot state the probable cost of the alteration. The practical defect of the musket is its differing in caliber from the new arm, and its ammunition being inconveniently heavy. Such a defect cannot be obviated by breeching. I do not think that any alteration made on these arms would supersede the propriety of making new ones.

The amount of money expended in the manufacture and purchase of muskets and rifles during the last five years, has been $1,562,999 77.

Hon. Mr. SANDIDGE's letter is returned herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. K. CRAIG, Colonel of Ordnance.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Memoranda for Hon. HENRY WILSON, member of the Military Committee of the Senate, concerning the application of Morse's breech loading principle to the muzzle-loading arms of the United States; that is to say, to the rifle-musket, caliber 69-100 inch; to the musket, smooth bore, caliber 69-100 inch; and to the rifle, caliber, 54-100 inch.

The Secretary of War, esteeming Morse's breech-loading principle the best, directed its application at this Arsenal to one of each of the above-mentioned old arms, whereof we have large numbers now on hand in the State and United States Armories. This application was to be made with the least possible change or expense in the arms; the object of the Secretary in the experiment being both efficiency and economy in producing a more perfect arm than had yet been made, and economy in avoiding the contemplated sales of these old arms, necessarily at a great sacrifice. The result of the experiment is shown in the form of the arms which I had the honor to exhibit to you in the committee, on Saturday morning last, by direction of the Secretary of War.

1. Advantages.—The change in these arms is very small—only in a part of the lock and in the lower part of the barrel, everything else remaining the same. The estimated cost of this change, when effected by machinery, being from two dollars and fifty cents to three dollars and fifty cents per arm.

2. The strength of the barrels and other parts after the change is found most ample—one of the altered arms having sustained one thousand three hundred and fifty rounds of service charge without injury.

3. Facility of fire.—Its advantages over the muzzle-loader, in its breech-loading facilities, with its barrel always level and directed to the front, whether on horse, standing, or advancing, sitting, lying or kneeling, gives it both greater celerity as well as greater accuracy of fire on these accounts.

4. Accuracy of fire.—But its superior accuracy over the muzzle-loader is more particularly due to the fact that the construction of the cartridge, and of its chamber in the barrel, is such that when the gun is charged the axes of the ball and bore are necessarily in the same vertical plane of projection at the moment of fire, whereby they fulfill the most important requisite for accuracy of fire.

5. Force of the charge.—The force of the charge is necessarily greater than that of the corresponding muzzle-loader of the same caliber and charge of powder, because the cap being fired in the center of the charge, without vent or vent-discharge, the whole effect, therefore, of the cap and of the charge of powder goes to move the ball; whereas in the muzzle-loader the effect of the vent-discharge is lost to the motion of the ball. Accordingly, the penetrations of this gun, at thirty yards, are from one to one and a half inch boards greater than those of the muzzle-loader. And its range also, with the same elevation, proportionally greater.

6. Certainty of fire.—As the cap is fired in contact with the powder, the certainty of fire is greater than that of any other breech or muzzle-loading arm fired without the charge. In consequence, this arm never misses fire with a good cap.

7. Cleanliness of fire.—This arm is remarkable for cleanliness of bore after many fires; this being because a new chamber with every new charge is inserted at every fire, the old one being then withdrawn. Whereas, in the muzzle-loader, the chamber being always the same, is accumulating filth at every fire, which, at every fire, the ball carries forward in the bore. This gives much less accuracy of fire to the muzzle-loader.

8. Safety from explosion.—It has been charged against this arm that the cap being in contact with the powder there is danger of explosions from this cartridge in magazines and laboratories. But there is no such danger, as the projecting charge has no existence as a cartridge, except in the cartridge-box of the soldier, who forms it with surprising facility by merely pouring the powder into the iron chamber, and inserting the ball and cap, the wad and chamber being always ready, and then turning it into the cartridge box. Having the balls and the flask of powder, this may be done at any time, even in the field in presence of the enemy. As the cartridge in the cartridge-box rests on wood, the percussion could not, therefore, take effect there, if it could be made in the cartridge-box, which it could not be in consequence of the structure of the box.

9. Saving.—It is claimed for this arm that all the labor in magazines and laboratories which is now devoted to the manufacture and preservation of muzzle-loader paper cartridges, is saved, as it needs only powder and ball. It is also claimed for it that the trains for transportation of ammunition for small arms will be greatly reduced, besides saving much material of paper, twine, and lumber, &c.

10. The cartridge of this arm being water-proof, is greatly superior to the paper cartridge of the muzzle-loader. The latter, in a cartridge-box, might spoil in a few days' rainy weather, while that of this arm would not be affected for years.

Which is respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM H. BELL,
Major Ordnance.

WASHINGTON ARSENAL, May 26, 1858.

Mr. PEARCE. I had not seen that paper at the time I was addressing the Senate. It seems to be a piece cut from a newspaper containing the letter of the Secretary and the report of Major Bell. If I had seen it, I should have had this difficulty: I should have found Major Bell recommending this arm very specifically, and giving the reasons in detail for his preferences; and then I should have found a report from the commission which met at West Point last year, stating as follows—the first part of the opinion of the board assigns their preference to the gun of A. E. Burnside as best suited for military service; and then they go on to say:

"In expressing this opinion, the board do not wish to be understood as disparaging the merits of the other guns tried, for they consider that some of them possess much merit, and evince much ingenuity in their construction. In submitting this opinion, the board feel it their duty to state that they have seen nothing in these trials to lead them to think that a breech-loading arm has yet been invented which is suited to replace the muzzle loading gun for foot troops. On the contrary, they have seen much to impress them with an opinion unfavorable to the use of a breech-loading arm for general military purposes."

This is signed by Colonel Bell, first dragoons, president of the board, Major Hill, of the paymaster's department, Captain Benton, of the Ordnance, Captain Heath, of the tenth infantry, and Lieutenant Gibbon, of the fourth artillery, dated August 12, 1857, the period of their making the observations and experiments. Really, the Committee on Finance know so little on these military subjects, that it seems to be a difficult thing for them to recommend with any authority to the Senate, whether they shall adopt this or that peculiar arm. They meant, by this amendment of theirs, to signify, that, in their opinion, the sum appropriated was too large to be applied to the purpose of changing forty thousand old guns into any one particular arm. They thought, as they were advised by the military board and by the colonel of Ordnance, that if we are to purchase or change any of these guns at all, we should have only a limited number so changed that they might be tried in actual service. It was supposed one or two thousand would be sufficient for that purpose. If, when tried in actual service, their utility and value shall be demonstrated, we may then want to have more altered into that form; but at present, the committee do not think it proper to recommend the expenditure of so large a sum for that purpose. If I understand aright the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, the same sum is proposed to be appropriated for the double purpose of purchasing breech-loading guns and altering the old muskets so as to make them conform to the present model; but I understand that that would not include alterations into breech-loading guns. I really do not feel competent to decide on such a question. If Senators who understand the subject will enlighten the Senate, the body will, perhaps, be enabled to decide for itself understandingly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We have got back, then, to the point from which I started, which is this: that the Secretary of War states, on the report of competent officers, that he is desirous of an appropriation to enable him to change certain old arms, worth not more than two and a half or three dollars apiece, into breech-loading arms of different inventors, not all of one inventor, at a cost of two and a half or three dollars apiece, and to make a trial of those arms in actual service, to see whether they will answer the demands of the Army, and that recommendation, thus specifically made by the Secretary of War, and communicated to the Finance Committee, is passed by the House, comes to the committee, and from the committee, by some means, gets into the Senate, with the whole object of the appropriation stricken entirely out of the bill, and something else provided for which the Secretary never asked for.

Mr. PEARCE. There is nothing else provided for in the bill. I ask the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The amendment reported provides a distinct thing entirely.

Mr. PEARCE. The amendment as reported is to strike out the whole appropriation. The Senator is mistaken. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is a different matter.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand that; but I understood from the Senator from Maryland, who represents the Finance Committee, that that committee referred the matter to the Military Committee. The Finance Committee first strikes out the entire appropriation asked for by the Secretary of War for a particular purpose, refers the subject to the Military Committee, and the Military Committee take the appropriation and apply it to a distinct purpose of their own. That is the point I wish the Senate—

Mr. DAVIS. I will correct the Senator from Louisiana, as that seems to be a point of his argument. The Secretary of War does ask for money enough to buy a thousand breech-loading arms, which, we understand, will cost from thirty-five to forty thousand dollars, and part of this $100,000 is to go in that way, according to his application.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not understand that the Secretary of War has asked for any part of this $100,000 here appropriated in the House bill, to purchase the breech-loading arms. If he has, I am very much mistaken.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, I will state the very simple fact that he asks money to buy breech-loading guns. Whether it is in this $100,000, or out of the Treasury, I do not know.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is very easy for the Senator from Mississippi to give a sneering reply to what was certainly a very respectful inquiry.

Mr. DAVIS. I considered it as an attempt to misrepresent a very plain remark.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator is mistaken, and has no right to state any such thing. His manner is not agreeable at all.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator happens to find it disagreeable, I hope he will keep it to himself.

Mr. BENJAMIN. When directed to me, I will not keep it to myself; I will repel it instantly.

Mr. DAVIS. You have got it, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That is enough, sir. Mr. President, I was stating—I shall not be diverted on this occasion from my public duties—

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator from Louisiana will allow me to interrupt him. I find that there is a recommendation from the Secretary of War on the subject. He says:

"The state of the existing appropriations will not admit of the purchase of these arms, and it will require a special appropriation of $45,000 to purchase a proper supply."

I believe this letter only came in yesterday, which will excuse me for not being better acquainted with its contents.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I stated that the Secretary of War had asked for $100,000 for the alteration of old arms into breech-loading arms; that that appropriation had been stricken out by the Finance Committee; that it had then been referred to the Military Committee; and that that committee had thought proper to retain the appropriation, but apply it to a purpose entirely different from that for which the Secretary asked it. Whether he asks an appropriation independently of this for the purchase of breech-loading arms, is a matter I was not considering, and was not presenting to the attention of the Senate. Now, sir, the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is this: that, instead of making an appropriation of any portion of the sum asked for by the Secretary of War for the purpose for which he asked it, between the two committees together the sum is appropriated, and nothing is done that he asks for. I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that, upon this particular point, reports were before us showing, in the first place, that there was a large body of old arms belonging to the Government, worth some two and a half or three dollars apiece, which, for a similar amount, could be changed into breech-loading arms, for the purpose of experimenting with in the Army; and I asked the reason why we should purchase new breech-loading arms, costing forty dollars apiece, instead of devoting the old arms for the purpose of this experiment; when these old arms, as reported by officers of the intelligence and experience displayed by Major Bell, could be experimented with at two and a half or three dollars apiece—three and a half dollars, I believe, is the extremity. There is Sharpe's patent; there is Morse's patent; there is Burnside's patent; there are a number of these patents, which the friends of the different parties consider extremely valuable. Certainly no member of the Senate is competent to decide—not even the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs: the officers of the Army who have examined this matter state that, up to the time of their report, in August last, the experiment had not been sufficiently solved. I understand that, since that time, great improvements have been made in these arms—sufficient to warrant the Secretary of War in recommending them to the attention of the Senate.

I hope that the whole purpose of the appropriation which is asked for will not be stricken out of the bill. If the Committee on Finance are still of opinion that $100,000 is too large a sum for the purpose of testing the value of these improvements, let that sum be reduced; let a portion of it be applied either to making the old arms conform to some regulations, or to purchase breech-loading arms, if required; but do not strike out the entire appropriation for the purposes for which the Secretary wants it. Take thirty, forty, or fifty thousand dollars of it, and let the Secretary apply that to an object so valuable to the country, and take the remainder, if you please, and let the Senator from Mississippi have his own theories carried out with half the appropriation, but not with all. I hope that one half this appropriation, at all events, will be reserved for the purposes for which the Secretary of War asks it.

Mr. PEARCE. I will suggest to the Senator that it is competent for him to move an amendment to the amendment, appropriating a specific portion of the sum, if he thinks proper, to the object he desires.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will, then, move to amend the amendment offered by the Military Committee, so far as to leave this appropriation in its present language, but changing $100,000 to $50,000. We shall then have "for the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading guns, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, $50,000," leaving the other $50,000 to be applied according to the recommendation of the Military Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator who has just taken his seat has argued from the papers which have been read to the Senate, that which is not in them. He has asserted over and over again, in the course of his argument, and endeavored at one time to make me responsible for it, that we had a large number of old arms worth $2 50 which were to be converted into most efficient arms by expending some two dollars and a half upon them. The letter of the Secretary of War says that if sold at auction they would not bring more than a certain sum. That may be all very true; and if our forts were sold at auction, pray what would they bring? The arms that are made for military purposes are not suited to the private purposes of civil life. There is very little use that could be made of the musket, a little more of the rifle, but very little indeed which could be made in civil life of the musket manufactured for the Army. It would not answer the sportsman's purpose for anything perhaps but bear hunting. That those arms would sell for far less than their value, I do not doubt; but it is not to be assumed that all the arms which are described are of the character which were sold to George Law for a small sum. A certain number of the muskets on hand were condemned because they were inferior; they were, generally, the arms made before 1821, after which we had an improved model; all the material was improved, and continued to improve until 1842. We have eighteen thousand old flint-lock muskets. They were examined and reported upon as serviceable muskets, too good to be sold; they were kept in store because they were too good to be sold; and it requires but a sum sufficient to convert them into percussion muskets to make them all that the Government requires.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask the honorable Senator if that number includes all that are deposited in the arsenals of the States?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no; it does not include those issued to the militia. A large number have been issued to the militia which may or may not still be in their possession. But the whole argument which is made is, that we have muskets which are worth two and a half or three dollars, because the statement is that they would sell for that at auction. It may be true that the best arms we have, if sold at auction, would not bring more than that; but my position is that, if you alter muskets into breech-loading arms, and particularly of a pattern which requires special ammunition and cannot be used with the ordinary ammunition, you have not only lost the three dollars you put on them, but you have lost whatever the value of the musket was, and I believe that is from ten to twelve dollars apiece. That is their value to the Government, though I have no idea they would bring it if sold at auction.

But, sir, the proposition which was before the Senate was to strike out the whole appropriation; to that the amendment is offered, and it is offered, among other reasons, because the Secretary of War has asked for money to purchase breech-loading arms. Now, what mattered it whether this $100,000 was left, or whether it was stricken out and rewritten, or changed to $40,000, or to $10,000. I have no objection to a reduction of the amount to any extent the Senator pleases. I believe it is too much. I think a very small purchase of breech-loading arms of new patterns is all that would be required; and I think the alteration of the eighteen thousand old muskets to the present model, upon a plan which has been approved by an ordnance board, would probably not cost more than half a dollar apiece. Therefore, I am perfectly willing to agree to a reduction of the sum. I am not willing to allow arms which I believe to be useful, to be changed into a new method of loading that will render them useless for the purposes for which we require that kind of arms.

But it has been asked, why do you want to buy breech-loading arms, if altering the muskets into breech-loaders is not advisable? The answer is easy. We buy breech-loading carbines; we do not buy breech-loading muskets. When the musket is altered, it will be too cumbersome for the cavalry man; and we buy breech-loading carbines for the cavalry man. So of the rifle: it would be too cumbersome for the cavalry man; he can never allow it to fall by his side in order that he may use his saber or his pistol. Our mounted riflemen have carried it, and it has been found too heavy. The only breech-loading arms which I suppose the Secretary would purchase would be breech-loading carbines adapted to the use of cavalry. That is my purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. REID in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN.]

Mr. IVERSON. I rise to a point of order. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is clearly out of order; it is an amendment to an amendment to an amendment. An amendment comes from the Committee on Finance; the Senator from Mississippi proposes to amend that. It is not in order to amend the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. PEARCE. Allow me to explain. The Senator is under a mistake. The amendment of the Finance Committee is to strike out the whole clause. The Senator from Mississippi supposes, properly I think, that he has a right to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out before the question is taken on striking out; he therefore proposes an original amendment to the clause as it stands in the bill; and to that the Senator from Louisiana proposes an amendment. So it is only an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia insist on the point of order?

Mr. IVERSON. No, sir; I misunderstood the state of the case.

Mr. MALLORY. I presume there are some members of the Senate who are familiar with the use of arms; the American people generally are. I should say nothing on this subject if I did not regard myself as familiar with the breech-loading and the muzzle-loading arm from the time I have been able to handle an arm at all. I understand the proposition to be to appropriate fifty or a hundred thousand dollars, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, to enable him to change the musket now on hand into a breech-loading musket. Well, sir, it must be considered by all, whether familiar with the use of arms or not, that, all other advantages being equal, there is a decided preference to be given to a breech-loading gun. Some of the prominent advantages are pointed out by the major of ordnance, whose letter has been read. In the first place, that gun may be loaded on the ground without a rammer. It may be loaded always with the muzzle to the enemy. A man standing at the charge loads his gun without altering his position. I might go on and enumerate other advantages; but, certainly, all other parts of the gun being equal, there is a most decided advantage in favor of the breech-loading arm. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs speaks of the altered musket not being used by the troopers because it would be too cumbersome. We will admit, of course, that the musket cannot be used by mounted troops at all; because, whether it is altered or not altered, it is cumbersome; and the objection is to the long musket—not to the altered musket. But, if the trooper were to use any musket, he could certainly use the breech-loading one; for in the one case he would hold his musket in the left hand at the charge, simply inserting the charge at the breech; whereas, with a muzzle-loading musket, he would have to use both hands, with a rammer. Now, if we can alter the muskets we have on hand at an expense of $2 50, it is a self-evident proposition that it ought to be done, if the musket retains the advantages it had before. Does it do so? You have the same length. If you meet a civilized enemy in warfare, he has the same length of musket that you are obliged to have. You have the same weight, which is another specific property of the charge. You have a straight breech, which constitutes the strength of the musket; for, in falling a musket to the ground at the order, for example, if you have the crooked breech that sportsmen use, as the chairman of the Military Committee will admit at once, there is danger of breaking it. I do not pretend to know whether all the advantages that the musket possesses now are retained by the alteration to the breech-loading gun. The major of ordnance, however, on that subject informs us that the gun has been altered at an expense of from two dollars and a half to three dollars; that this altered gun has been fired thirteen hundred and fifty times without any material injury. Now, sir, I apprehend that no musket in the service of the United States has ever been fired thirteen hundred and fifty times, unless it be on a test precisely like this; but, in ordinary service, a musket may be manufactured and be in an arsenal for five years, and never be fired that much, although it may be used in two or three campaigns. Sportsmen's guns are, of course, used very often. If this be so, if the gun has been tested at a service charge of thirteen hundred and fifty times, it is a sufficient test to prove its durability. I do not know that the report says anything about the escape of gases, which would render the gun somewhat inefficient; but I presume it does.

I believe the cost of the United States musket at our armories is $13 80. We can alter that gun and give it all the advantages of a breech-loading gun at an additional cost of two dollars and fifty cents or three dollars and fifty cents; and then we have a gun which has the advantages of a breech-loading gun, besides all the advantages of the original musket. Now, the ordinary breech-loading gun possesses great advantages in the hands of mounted troops, and of riflemen, and of light troops. It is short, easily carried, slung upon the shoulders; it is light, and has a very great range; but for infantry, as the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has said, you want the ordinary musket; and I agree with him it cannot be dispensed with. But it is a wonderful improvement if you can communicate to the musket all the advantages of breech-loading. In the first place, there is a greater rapidity of firing. I do not know what the test here has shown of that rapidity; but certainly when you load the gun with a fixed cartridge at the breech, holding it horizontally in the left hand, without using a rammer at all, you can fire it with much greater rapidity than in the old way. I have seen one of these guns within a few days past, and the alteration appears to be exceedingly simple; but no man would venture upon an opinion as to the utility of that alteration without some such test as has been here prescribed. We are told by the major of ordnance that it has been fired thirteen hundred and fifty times. I am bound to rely on that. I regard that as a sufficient test. I have been using guns all my life; I buy every new gun that is made. Whenever I hear of a gun invented, I send and get it. I try them all, and if a gun stood that number or half that number of charges, if there was no displacement, no giving way, no escape of gases on the five hundredth charge, I should consider that an ample test.

Improvements in fire-arms are taking place around us every day. They are progressive. They are more or less costly. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has alluded to the improvement in the ball, and he seems to prefer loading the musket at the muzzle. You have conical ball with the hollow base, or what is called by the French engineers, à la tige. There is a little point placed on the breech of the gun, a cone—it has now come to that. Originally the ball was smooth on the bottom; it lay upon the powder, and it was enlarged by a blow of the rammer. The ball underwent many changes. It was formed of cup shape at the bottom, and then it was forced down to the powder, and the powder was forced into it; but that produced greater impingement of the barrel to obtain the range which you wanted. Subsequently they placed a small cone upon the breech of the gun at a very small expense, and forced the ball upon that cone, and the vis inertie which is there produced by the contact between the ball and the pin, takes the powder a little longer to ignite, but there you get greater impingement. Here the insertion of the cartridge at the base, I presume, gives you all the impingement without the disadvantage of loading with a rammer. I do not pretend to put my opinion in these matters at all against that of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, because he has these subjects under his control—he sees all these new guns, and I rely very greatly on his judgment as to them all; but I do not see why, if we can alter our muskets at this cheap rate, preserving all the advantages of a musket, and deriving at the same time all the advantages of rapidity of loading at the breech, we should not do it at this small expense.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, these scientific discussions upon the subject of arms are very edifying; but I suppose that if the Senate wait to decide this question until they understand it, and decide it with reference to the value of these particular arms and the different kinds of them, we shall have a somewhat lengthened discussion. Now, there were some things that the Committee on Finance understood. They understood that the Secretary of War asked for an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of expending that amount in the alteration of old arms, and in the alteration of old arms according to a particular patent, and for the benefit, so far as it might inure to his benefit, of a particular person, the United States being benefited of course. They understood, also, that there was a very great difference of opinion among military officers as to the advantages of the several kinds of breech-loading arms, and that it was by no means a settled question, it was a question that was open; some officers preferred one kind, some another kind; some preferred to have arms of an entirely different description; but the Secretary it seems recommended that this sum (and it is the only thing that he did recommend in that particular) should be appropriated for this special purpose, to procure the alteration of the old arms in one way. In that state of facts the Finance Committee came to the conclusion, as I understood, as one member of the committee, that it being a disputed point, it being doubtful, it being by no means settled one way or the other, it was advisable not to make the appropriation, and they therefore proposed to strike out the appropriation which had been inserted for that purpose. They did not undertake to make any specification, to apply the money in a different way, for two reasons: in the first place, because they had no practical acquaintance with the subject which would enable them to do so, and in the next place, because the Secretary of War had asked for an appropriation for a specific purpose and for no other. He did not require what is now proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs. He made no recommendation such as is now made, as I understand, by the Military Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I will only say that the Committee on Finance furnished the Committee on Military Affairs with the information of the desire of the Secretary of War to purchase a thousand breech-loading arms of a particular pattern, which he named in a letter, which was sent from the Committee on Finance to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Most unquestionably he wished to do what is provided for by this appropriation of $100,000—nothing further.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state to the Senate that since the Finance Committee had the subject under consideration, a letter was sent by the Secretary of War to the chairman of the committee, which was handed to me yesterday; and from that letter I have read a request of the Secretary for an appropriation of $45,000 for purchasing breech-loading guns; but that was subsequent to the meeting of the Finance Committee, and therefore the Senator from Maine did not know it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was unknown to me. I was not aware of the fact.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the basis on which the Military Committee have acted in proposing the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But I understand the Committee on Military Affairs propose an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. DAVIS. For a double purpose. We did not alter the amount. For myself, I do not think the amount is necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then there is one portion of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs which was recommended and approved by the Secretary of War. Another portion of it, as I understand, is a suggestion of the Committee on Military Affairs alone, and does not come from the Secretary.

Mr. DAVIS. Not quite that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should be very glad to hear the explanation.

Mr. DAVIS. It was a proposition to change old muskets, which, I think, referred to those that were still flint locks; and it is a change so far, that we propose to give the money to alter them according to the present models, instead of altering them according to some new breech-loading model.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the Committee on Military Affairs, if I understand it—and I am glad to have this explanation, it is what I desired to get—take the original proposition of the Secretary of War for an alteration of the old arms in a particular mode and connect it with his more recent communication to the Finance Committee for the purpose of breech-loading arms of approved models. The Military Committee connect the two together, and make the proposition which is now before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. No; I do not think our conduct is quite so defensible as that. We alter the proposition to change the old arms by adopting a new mode of changing the old arms, and coupling that with the more recent proposition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then they adopt the proposition of the Secretary in part, and reject it in part?

Mr. DAVIS. Well, yes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now we have a full understanding on that subject. My objection goes to the whole. I do not see the necessity of making the appropriation at all. Certainly, the proposition originally before us was in the nature of an experiment. To be sure it was recommended by some of the ordnance officers, but it was not a conclusive recommendation; because, as I said before, the officers of the Army are by no means united in their opinions on that point. The Committee on Finance, therefore, in my judgment, decided well and wisely in saying that they would not undertake to put into the hands of the Secretary of War $100,000 for the purpose of appropriating it for one particular object alone, and that object as yet an experiment. I agree with the Military Committee that that must be called an experiment which has not been tried to a certain extent in actual service. There is nothing in all the papers, or in any information that has been furnished anywhere, that I have seen, showing the necessity, at the present time, of making the appropriation at all. The whole thing is experimental. I am for acting on some sort of principle in reference to these matters. We have been talking here all the session about the necessity of saving money wherever we can. Now, is there any pressing necessity for the use of these arms? Is there any want of arms of approved models in the public service now? I have not heard of any. If there is such a want, I am ready to make the appropriation; but if there is not, I am opposed to making an appropriation of this sum, or of any other sum, for the purpose of trying these experiments at the present period; and that is the ground of my objection to the whole thing.

As to the proposition as it was originally made, I think there can be no doubt it is nothing more nor less than doing what Senators have expressed themselves here as entirely opposed to, and that is, advertising a particular kind of arm; for whatever may be said, and however general may be the language in which the recommendation of the Secretary of War is couched, it comes to this: that it is a proposition to appropriate $100,000 for the purpose of altering the arms according to a particular patent—Morse's patent. The very papers which have been read at the table, show that that is the object; and if you make the appropriation in any shape, giving a discretion to the Secretary, the result will be that the Secretary may, if he chooses—and we are bound to believe he will—follow his own judgment, in opposition to the judgment of any board of officers; for we have had the evidence before us that he has done certain things with regard to matters connected with his Department, in direct opposition to the opinions of officers of the Army, and has given a rebuke when they undertook to intimate to him that certain things with reference to the military property of the United States ought not to be done, telling them pretty clearly and plainly to confine themselves to their duty in obeying orders, without undertaking to advise him.

Now, sir, I am unwilling to put this sum of $100,000, or any other sum, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, to be used in the purchase of arms of any description at the present time. If there was a pressing necessity for it, I would do what that necessity required; but so long as there is no necessity for it, I am opposed even to the amendment suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and certainly to the amount that is there stated—putting the large sum of $100,000 into the hands of the Secretary of War for the purpose of making these experiments at the present time. As it is, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be rejected, because that would bring the matter back, I think, to its worst shape, which is allowing the Secretary of War a discretion on the subject, and power to expend what he pleases of the appropriation for the purchase of this particular arm and making these particular alterations; and I am opposed, also, though not so much, to the amendment that has been offered by the Committee on Military Affairs, for the reasons I have stated, connected with the Treasury and connected with my disinclination to allow this money to go into the hands of the Secretary of War at the present time for the purpose of making these experiments.

Mr. HUNTER. I know that time is precious, and I hope that we shall be able to take the vote on this amendment, because there are a great many others on which we shall have to decide, and I trust we shall get through with this bill some time to-day. In regard to the amendment of the Committee on Finance, on which the Senator from Louisiana commented, I will say that, so far as I was concerned, it was founded on this: it seemed to me that the present was no time to expend $100,000 in the trial of experiments. The appropriations for the armories are large—I think some four hundred thousand dollars. In addition to that, there is a permanent standing appropriation of $200,000 for arming the militia, (the Senator from Mississippi will correct me if I am wrong,) and I do not see why a portion of it might not be devoted to the purpose of breech-loading arms if the Secretary of War desires them. Under these circumstances, and in consideration of the condition of the Treasury, it seemed to us better to postpone this experiment, and to strike out the provision altogether. It will be, however, for the Senate to determine. The subject has been fully debated; and I hope we shall come to a vote on this question, and proceed to the consideration of the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is simply reducing the sum, I understand.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My amendment is to divide the sum between the proposal of the Secretary of War and the proposal of the Committee on Military Affairs. If that amendment be adopted, the appropriation can afterwards be either reduced or stricken out.

Mr. HUNTER. I am for striking it out entirely, I do not care what amendments are put on it. I am against the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana is to make the clause read, "for the alteration of old arms so as to make them conform to the present models, $50,000; and for the purchase of approved breech-loading arms, $50,000."

Mr. PEARCE. I shall not detain the Senate longer than to say that I cannot give my vote for that amendment. Fifty thousand dollars will secure the alteration of twenty thousand stand of arms at $2 50 apiece, which we are told by the Secretary will be the cost. I think that is too large for an experiment. I would be willing to go perhaps as far as four thousand stand of arms, which would cost $10,000; and I think that would be quite enough. That would test the value of the guns in actual service; and we are told on the authority of some officers of the Army, supposed to be perfectly conversant with the subject, that no gun ought to be relied upon as adapted for the use of the Army in actual service until it has been tried in actual service. To that extent I am willing to go; but otherwise I must vote against the proposition.

Mr. DAVIS. There must be some misapprehension. I will merely state that the amendment in its present form will not give the Secretary one dollar to convert a musket into a breech-loading arm. That is what I want, but I suppose that is not the object of the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to have the amendment divided. I think the Senator from Louisiana has drawn it so as not to meet his purpose.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not hear the reading of the amendment, and I do not know how the Secretary may have it; but my proposition was that the $100,000 appropriated in the House bill should be divided, $50,000 towards the purpose mentioned in the bill, and the other $50,000 to the purpose mentioned in the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs—one half for the purchase of breech-loaders, and the other half to make the change in the arms which the Committee on Military Affairs prefer to the breech-loading.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is just an appropriation of $50,000 to the alteration on this particular patent—Morse's patent. It is not so in words, but that is the effect of it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is what the Secretary of War will do, because that is what he wants to do.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the Senator chooses to say all kinds of breech-loading weapons, I have no objection. I do not know in what way we can make it more general. I do not want the appropriation confined to any particular patentee: I would not vote for such an appropriation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What I mean to say is that the Secretary of War having committed himself on that point, and recommended one patent specifically; if we appropriate $50,000, of course he will use the money in that particular way and for that particular purpose, as he ought to do.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand not. I understand that having made this experiment with Morse's patent he is perfectly satisfied that that breech-loading arm would answer in service, and he wants to try it; but he is not satisfied that others would not answer also. Having satisfied himself by experiment with one of these patents that this great benefit can be done to the public service, he asks for an appropriation sufficient not only to try that patent, but others also which he has not yet tried. I do not care how it is worded.

Mr. DIXON. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to the recommendation of the Secretary of War. He says, "esteeming Morse's breech-loading principle the best," he recommends that.

Mr. SLIDELL. There is no doubt at all that, as at present informed, the Secretary of War considers that Morse's breech-loading gun is the best arm of the kind; but the passage of this clause in the appropriation bill does not, by any means, restrict Mr. Floyd to the use of Mr. Morse's patent, or to the employment of Mr. Morse in any way. Other models of arms may be presented to him which, to his mind, may appear to secure greater advantages than Morse's gun now presents; and I hope it is not necessary for me here to repeat what I have already said, that I disavow altogether every feeling of that sort, and I should be just as much opposed to this appropriation, if it were made to inure specifically to the benefit of Mr. Morse, as any man in this Chamber; but I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that this is not a simple question of the appropriation of $50,000. There is a large combination, a lobby interest, that is employed in getting up a feeling on this subject. They think that the men who are now in the charge of the Department; the men at the head of the ordnance bureau; the men upon whom Mr. Floyd would rely, are satisfied, as at present informed, that Mr. Morse's gun is the best, and that Mr. Floyd will probably make use of it. It is in order to prevent such a trial and such a test of Mr. Morse's gun, that a great influence has been brought to bear here in the Senate. I have had occasion to observe it. Men have been approached and asked to vote against this appropriation, not because the invention was not a good one, but because it would interfere with certain manufacturers and patentees. That is the real secret of the interest that has been elicited in this debate. There are other instruments behind.

Mr. PEARCE. If there are any outside influences brought to bear on the Senate, they have not been brought to bear on me.

Mr. SLIDELL. I certainly did not allude to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PEARCE. But without some explanation, the remark might be understood as rather general.

Mr. SLIDELL. Nobody, of course, would attempt to influence the Senator from Maryland; but no doubt he has heard of opposition originating from conflicting inventors in the matter.

Mr. PEARCE. I have heard nothing in the world but this: I have talked with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SIMMONS] in regard to Burnside's gun, which I understand does not come in competition with this, being for a different purpose; his gun, I believe, is a carbine intended for mounted men. He has shown me that gun; I have examined it, and he made a statement to me in relation to the negotiations between the Secretary of War and the company, of which Mr. Burnside is one. That I have heard. In the next place, I have seen Mr. Morse, the only inventor whom I have seen, and he showed me his gun, which is the only gun I have seen except that of Burnside; and that is the only conversation I have had on the subject with a living soul outside of the committee except the Senator from Louisiana, with whom I had a little talk. If any outside influence—

Mr. SLIDELL. It is scarcely necessary to repeat that I did not allude to the Senator from Maryland at all; because I happened to know all about his connection with this matter. The Senator from Maryland will not expect me to put my finger on the man, and say, this Senator has been approached in that way for the purpose of defeating this opposition.

Mr. PEARCE. Certainly not.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not exactly hear what the Senator from Louisiana said; he spoke of interest exhibited in this matter. I have exhibited some interest in this matter.

Mr. SLIDELL. I must disclaim any allusion to the Senator from Mississippi, for I have never had any conversation with him on the subject of this gun; but other Senators have told me that they have been approached, and that there was a lobby influence at work here in order to defeat the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS. I have an interest in preserving the old muskets; but my amendment is equally open to any breech-loading arms.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am very unfortunate—

Mr. DAVIS. I will not ask the Senator, of course, for any further statement. I want none.

Mr. SLIDELL. If I have not been able to make myself understood, I repeat, there are other gentlemen in the Senate who, if they thought proper, could say that they have been appealed to by other patentees and inventors to defeat this appropriation. If they choose to mention it themselves, I have no sort of objection; but I do not see why I should be called upon to say who these gentlemen are.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not ask the Senator to make any such statement. I have no desire to exact anything of that kind. The only interest that I am aware of, is an interest to get appropriations; I have never yet encountered anybody that came here showing great zeal to prevent an appropriation. The man who endeavors to prevent an appropriation is very apt to be exposed to assault.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Louisiana whether he had any allusion to me?

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not know whether I made any allusion to the Senator from New York, but I certainly inferred, from what he said to me, that he had been addressed by men having an adverse interest.

Mr. SEWARD. I thought it was possible that that was the case, and that was the reason I rose to make an explanation. Yesterday morning the honorable Senator from Louisiana called my attention to this subject, and I answered him that I was very willing to examine the matter of Morse's patent, and more, that I felt it to be my duty to do so, because I had been spoken to on the subject with an adverse view of it. I turns out, however, that I misled the honorable Senator, because I find that I was solicited by the other party, who addressed me in favor of this appropriation, not against it.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then the Senator from New York will permit me to throw the whole responsibility of this matter on him. If he did not understand what I said to him, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. SEWARD. I find the application made to me was on the Senator's side of the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIXON. I have an amendment to propose, which, if the Senator from Louisiana will accept it, I think will relieve the subject of the whole of this difficulty. It is, to insert after the word "arms," "upon a plan to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers."

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know anything about the plan of this alteration, and did not suppose I was to be brought in collision at all with the committee in any way. I wanted to get an appropriation for the purchase of cavalry breech-loaders, and I suggested it to the Military Committee; and I believe they will report an appropriation for the purchase of such arms for the cavalry service. I did not suppose, however, that would interfere in the least with the clause in the bill from the House of Representatives. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that it would be better to divide the amendment, so that we shall not be entirely cut out.

Mr. SLIDELL. I think I shall be disposed to consent to that, if it were not that it might subject me to the charge of bargain and corruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no bargain to make about it; but here is an indefinite appropriation of $100,000, and I did not know whether we might not get out of it a sufficient amount to purchase these arms with.

Mr. SLIDELL. If it is to be done in open day, I have no sort of objection to the bargain. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENJAMIN. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. [Mr. Dixon.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as now modified, is:

For the alteration of old arms, on a plan to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, so as to make them breech-loading guns, $50,000; and for the alteration of old arms so as to make them conform to the present models, and for the purchase of approved breech-loading arms, $50,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote. Have the yeas and nays been ordered on this proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. Do Senators insist on the yeas and nays?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Not if the amendment will be agreed to without a division.

Mr. HUNTER. I am against the whole thing. Mr. SLIDELL. Very well; let us take the vote.

Mr. DAVIS. There is one objection to this proposition. It compels the board to report for breech-loading arms. My opinion is, that you cannot assemble a board of ordnance officers who will say that arms intended for foot troops should be breech-loading.

Mr. CLARK. I merely rise to say that I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana; but if the discussion in the Senate has satisfied me of anything, it has convinced me that when I have done that I ought also to vote for the amendment of the Committee on Finance, to strike out the whole appropriation, which I intend to do.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on Mr. BENJAMIN's amendment, resulted—yeas 34, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Coffamer, Dixon, Douglas, Durkee, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Green, Hale, Harlan, Hayne, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Polk, Reid, Seward, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wilson—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Clay, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Haman, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Mason, Pearce, Pugh, Wade, Wright, and Yulee—16.

So the amendment of Mr. BENJAMIN was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the clause.

Mr. IVERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the clause; but as there will be no use in offering it, if the clause be stricken out, I shall wait until the vote is taken, and if it be not stricken out, I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. PUGH. I ask that the words to be stricken out be read.

The Secretary read them, as follows:

"For the alteration of old arms, upon a plan to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, so as to make them breech-loading guns, $50,000; and for the alteration of old arms, so as to make them conform to the present models, and for the purchase of approved breech-loading arms, $50,000."

Mr. BENJAMIN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foster, Green, Hale, Haman, Hammond, Hayne, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Stuart, Wade, Wright, and Yulee—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Clingman, Coffamer, Davis, Douglas, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Harlan, Houston, Iverson, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Seward, Simmons, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wilson—23.

So the motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There are some members of the Senate who inform me that they voted to strike out the appropriation on account of its magnitude; that they are satisfied some experiment of this kind ought to be made in relation to breech-loading arms; and that if the appropriation as proposed by the House of Representatives were simply reduced to $20,000, they would be willing to vote for it. I make that motion now.

Mr. HUNTER. It cannot be made. The clause has been stricken out.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That appropriation, as amended, has been stricken out. Now, I wish to offer a new clause entirely, though partly in the words of the original bill. Any member has a right to offer a new clause if based on an estimate from a Department. That is expressly declared by the rule.

Mr. PEARCE. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, that he allow the Committee on Finance to proceed with their amendments. When they are through he can offer his as an independent motion, supported by the estimate of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to defer, if Senators prefer that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment of the Committee on Finance is to strike out:

"For arsenals, including $100,000 for arsenal in California, $296,979."

And in lieu thereof insert:

For the Alleghany arsenal, $35,100.

For Fort Monroe arsenal, $24,900.

For Kennebec arsenal, $1,600.

For St. Louis arsenal, $31,000.

For Washington arsenal, $9,379.

For Watervliet arsenal, $30,000.

For repairs and preservation of the public buildings, fences, drains, culverts, &c., at all the smaller arsenals, $20,000.

For continuing the construction of the arsenal in California, $100,000.

For contingencies of arsenals, $10,000.

Mr. PEARCE. Before we proceed with the consideration of these items, I suggest that, by a clerical error, one of the appropriations, that for the arsenal in North Carolina, was omitted. I send that up so that it may be inserted without a formal motion. I will state that the object of striking out this clause in the bill was to make the appropriations for the different arsenals specific. In the bill, as it came to the committee from the House of Representatives, the appropriation was for the gross sum of $296,000 for all the arsenals. We have only separated that sum into the particulars applicable to each arsenal. The omitted item, to which I have alluded, is:

For additional timber and carriage store-house, at the North Carolina arsenal, $25,000

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understood that it was the intention of the committee to omit the appropriation for the arsenal in North Carolina.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken. I did not so understand. I thought we were making the appropriations specific. We had some discussion about this arsenal, but when we found that estimate of the colonel of ordnance, we agreed to put it in. That was my understanding.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My understanding was that we specifically agreed to draw up this amendment for the purpose of omitting that particular sum. The appropriation, as originally made, was for a gross sum for arsenals, generally, and it was suggested to strike out all the appropriation. The motion included the arsenal in North Carolina. But for that movement, the bill would not have shown what particular provisions it was intended to make; and therefore, as I understood, it was suggested to draw up the provision, and to insert all but the $25,000 for the arsenal in North Carolina. If, however, it was decided otherwise by the committee, of course I yield.

Mr. PEARCE. I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken. There was some objection made to this item in committee, and there was an inclination to strike it out, but it was determined not to strike it out for the present, but to acquire additional information. That additional information was sought for by the chairman of the committee and myself, and the result was that it was not stricken out. We obtained other information, and reported the matter to the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have nothing further to say. I did not understand it at the time as the other members of the committee did.

Mr. PEARCE. It had been told to the committee that this was not an eligible place; that there was a scarcity of timber and difficulty of access; but the committee ascertained, on inquiry, that there were certain improvements going on in the neighborhood of Fayetteville, where the arsenal is situated, which would give a navigation from the arsenal, forty miles, to the site of certain coal mines, where there is also an abundance of fine specimens of iron. They found that although the wood, in the immediate neighborhood of Fayetteville was pine, there was abundance of fine oak very near it, and boats running all the year to Fayetteville, and they ascertained that it was considered a very desirable location, and certainly will be when these improvements are completed, which, I understand, will be by the 1st of July next, so that we did not call the committee together again to consider whether it should be stricken out.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting after the appropriation for the Kennebec, these words:

Two thousand dollars of which may be used in bringing gas upon the arsenal grounds, and with leave to extend gas-pipes through the grounds by the gas company.

I will state, in a very few words, the reasons which induce me to offer the amendment. The arsenal grounds are situated in the city of Augusta; they are outside of the settled portion of the city, and the gas which would be needed in these works would not justify the company in laying down their gas-pipes for that purpose. Still the officers at the arsenal, and all who are there, desire to have the public buildings lighted with gas. I propose no additional appropriation. I simply propose to take $2,000 of the appropriation made for this arsenal, for this purpose. I hope it will meet the approbation of the Senate.

Mr. PEARCE. There is no point of order which can be raised against the Senator's amendment; it is not objectionable on that ground, but then it is not estimated for, and the whole sum which we propose to appropriate is asked for specific purposes. We are asked to give $10,000 for repairs of the river wall, and $1,600 for keeping in order the sewers, &c. This object is additional, and therefore if we divert part of the appropriation to it, an additional appropriation will be required for these other purposes; and besides, it will lead to applications for gas at all the arsenals where gas can be introduced. There is already an appropriation of $10,000 for contingencies at arsenals, and if the War Department think proper they can divert $2,000 of that sum to this purpose.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was aware that there were two specific objects for which the sum proposed to be appropriated was estimated, and that $10,000 was to repair the wall along the shore of the river, but I think not half that sum will be used this year for that purpose. I have a letter from Captain Gorgas who is now in South Carolina, who passed through this city the other day, calling my attention particularly to this matter. He has left that arsenal, and has been ordered to the arsenal in South Carolina. I think from the statement which he made, I have no doubt that this money can be appropriated for these two purposes, and still have some of it left. I hope the Senate will see fit to let $2,000 of the sum be applied to this purpose.

Mr. TOOMBS. What do you want with gas in an arsenal? You do not use it at night.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not every arsenal have its superintendent who has a house on the arsenal grounds? Are there not barracks and troops there? Is it not cheaper to light all these buildings with gas than in any other way?

Mr. TOOMBS. It is to increase the consumption of gas, for the benefit of the gas people. I should think they ought to find their own lights.

Mr. CAMERON. I live about a mile and a half from a town where there are gas works, and I offered the company $2,000 if they would bring the gas to my house, but they would not do it. It is a cheaper light, and better than any other. I should be glad to give $2,000 now to have the pipes carried to my house.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope my friend from Maryland will not make any serious opposition to this amendment. This arsenal is not in my section of the State; but I am perfectly familiar with the locality. The city is mainly on the east side of the river. The pipes have not been carried to the west side of the river; but a portion of the people who live there, and particularly the persons connected with the arsenal, desire that the pipes should be extended across the river so as to furnish the arsenal and other buildings in that vicinity with gas. The object of this proposition simply is, that the arsenal which is to be accommodated, and which desires to be accommodated, should pay some reasonable proportion of the expense necessary for that purpose. I believe it to be more necessary, in fact more conducive to comfort and to cheapness, and everything that is required ordinarily in such establishments, than any appropriation of money to the specific purposes asked for at the present time to the extent of this amount. It is a small sum, and I have no doubt its expenditure will be beneficial. I concur in opinion with all the officers who have been at the head of this establishment, that the good of the service requires it, and I believe it meets the approbation of those who have examined the matter.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to understand the last part of the proposition. I am afraid that is the essential part of the amendment—for the benefit of some gas company.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will state that the arsenal grounds are outside the city; they embrace, I should think, according to my best judgment, fifty acres of grounds. There are, therefore, no inhabitants that can come near to it. The gas-pipes must come immediately to it. Adjacent to it, and lying directly below on the river, is the State asylum for the insane. The State cannot get gas to the asylum unless the Government will give leave to lay the gas pipes under ground across the arsenal lands; that is what the latter part of the amendment provides for. The State is willing to pay its proportion to light up its public buildings; but if it has to go all the way around the public arsenal, the distance will be more than a mile, while it will not be more than fifty rods across it. I had an interview with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he said there was no earthly objection to it, as it was simply to put a gas pipe under ground, which the State or the gas company will do for the purpose of lighting the insane asylum with gas.

Mr. HUNTER. This proposition is to make a distinct appropriation for the purpose of introducing gas into the arsenal. It is to divert a portion of the appropriation which is for specific objects that necessarily require money, to gas, and of course next year you will have to increase the estimate to that extent, so that it amounts in fact to an additional appropriation of that sum. But that is not all. I well recollect the struggle to get gas at West Point, which was an exception. It was a long time before the House of Representatives would agree to that. The amendment was passed annually here, and rejected there until it was finally adopted two or three years ago. Now if we light up with gas this arsenal, we shall next have applications to light them all up with gas. I am opposed, for the two reasons I have mentioned, to making this diversion of the appropriation. As to giving leave to go through the grounds, I have no objection to that, and if the Senator from Maine will confine his amendment to that I shall not oppose it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The objection of the Senator from Virginia really is not one that ought to weigh with the Senate. It is unquestionably true that if gas were introduced into all the arsenals, it would be a saving of money, it would be very much cheaper, and very much safer, than the present mode of lighting them. Everybody knows that gas is an exceedingly safe light, whereas the use of other lights, in many particulars, is unsafe in the hands of many persons. I undertake to say, from my own experience and observation, that if it could be done at a reasonable expense, and this certainly is very reasonable, it would be a saving to furnish all our arsenals with gas, and it would be an improvement which would be valuable to the country, and it would be effected at a trifling cost.

Mr. HUNTER. That may be so in large establishments; but not in small ones.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; this is a large one.

Mr. DAVIS. One remark of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] renders it proper that I should state that when the proposition was submitted to me by him, I thought there could be no objection to it, and I thought it desirable to the arsenal that gas should be introduced, and that taking it over the arsenal grounds to the asylum was so much more direct and economical that, if done conjointly, it would be for the advantage of both; but since that time I have referred the matter to the Department, and the report is adverse. Objection is made to the plan proposed, of introducing gas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, by inserting at the end of it:

For repairing the arsenal and two eighteen-pound gun carriages, at Stonington, Connecticut, $750.

I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer this, and I have stated the circumstances to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, and it has, I believe, his assent also. The amount is very small. I know it to be necessary. I will not take up any further time.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Finance Committee, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment of the Finance Committee was, at the end of the bill to insert:

For payment of the volunteers operating in Florida during the year 1857, $385,000.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state that there is a letter from the Secretary of War recommending this appropriation, which is necessary for the payment of a regiment of volunteers and ten independent companies called into the service, in Florida, by General Harney.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know very little about this amendment, but I know we have had a great portion of our army stationed in Florida for many years. Here is a proposition to pay $385,000 to volunteers employed there. I do not see any appropriation in this bill for the volunteers that defended Oregon and Washington Territories. I do not know why this distinction should be drawn. If we are to pay volunteers who have defended the settlements against Indian incursions, it seems to me all ought to be brought into the bill.

Mr. PEARCE. Allow me to state that these volunteers were called into service, and commanded by United States officers, under the instructions of the War Department. Such was not the case in other instances.

Mr. YULEE. I will state to the Senator from Illinois the circumstances which rendered necessary this call on the part of the Government. These troops were regularly called for by requisition upon the Governor of the State.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him if there is any law authorizing the calling out of these volunteers? Were they called out in virtue of any authority given by any act of Congress?

Mr. YULEE. If the Senator will wait he will hear the explanation. The President made a requisition for these troops upon the Governor of the State, under the authority of law. There is a law existing which authorizes it. The occasion for it was this: the condition of affairs in the West required the removal of all the regular troops to that quarter, and the United States officer commanding in Florida was left with only two or three companies, and these troops were called for by the Government, to supply the place of regular troops, and they have conducted the war to a successful issue.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should be glad to see the act of Congress which authorizes the calling out of troops by the President. I am not aware that the President of the United States has authority to muster any number of volunteers, under any circumstances which he thinks proper, into the service of the United States, and call on us to pay them. This Florida matter has been a very expensive one for the Government. So long as a Billy Bowlegs was left there, a large part of our regular Army had to be stationed there for many years at an expense of many millions; and now here is a call for volunteers in addition, and the Senator from Florida gives as a reason why these volunteers were necessary that the regular Army was withdrawn to the West—yes, sir, withdrawn and stationed in Kansas. This is another expense growing out of the illegal and improper use of the Army. It is because the regular Army was drawn off under the name of a posse comitatus to accompany a Governor without authority of law, that the necessity existed for calling out these volunteers, according to the admission of the Senator from Florida. On a former occasion I undertook to show, and think I did show, that the Army of the United States had been employed for illegitimate purposes; and now you see one of the consequences is an appropriation of nearly four hundred thousand dollars to pay volunteers who have been called out in Florida. Sir, if Congress foots these bills as often as they are made, they will always be made. There will be no end to the expenses of the Government, nor to the usurpations of authority on the part of the executive officers so long as Congress willingly sanctions them and foots the bill.

Mr. HAYNE. I am sure that Senators will think the observations in relation to Kansas which the honorable Senator from Illinois has thought proper to introduce entirely out of place. They have nothing to do with the question before us. I have lived on a frontier country myself, and I speak from experience, and I would ask the honorable gentleman himself, supposing he lived on the frontier, could he not conceive that an attack by Indians might be threatened on himself and family, and would he wait to make a requisition upon the General Government to have troops brought forth for their protection? I should think not. I will not say one other word; for I am determined, for my own part, never to utter anything that will cause more than two minutes' speaking under existing circumstances, at the close of the session.

Mr. YULEE. I have sent for the act which authorizes the President to call for the militia. It is the act of 1795 which authorizes the President to make requisitions upon the States for militia to suppress insurrection and rebellion, and repel invasion. It is under that authority that the call is always made when troops are required for the public service by the President, without any express legislation for emergencies. I have been handed the act, and I will send it to the Secretary to read. It will be found that there is full authority under it. It was for the President to judge of the occasion. He did judge this occasion to be such as required the use of these troops. They were called for, have been used, and have been discharged, without pay. It is a debt due by the Government, for which an appropriation must of course be made.

The Secretary read the first section of the act of 1795, as follows:

"That whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper. And, in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States:" * * * "to call forth such number of the militia," &c.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not aware that the President has proceeded, in accordance with this law, to call out forces in Florida. I was not aware that the State of Florida had been invaded, either by a foreign Power, or an Indian tribe, within the contemplation of this law, or that any such case has existed as would have authorized the President to act, under this law.

Mr. YULEE. What does the Senator understand by invasion by an Indian tribe? Must they come from foreign parts?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it must be something more than a simple disturbance of a few Indians residing within the State.

Mr. YULEE. It would be an invasion of the established settlements of the whites over the Indian frontier, or it would be insurrection if there was no Indian country to which they were entitled.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that an invasion means something more than a simple disturbance of a few Indians located and living within the State. The language of the act of Congress is:

"That whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger, or scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion."

Now, does the Senator from Florida refer to this as the authority? Have the United States been invaded by Billy Bowlegs and his tribe, down in Florida? Was it under this act that the President of the United States called out these troops in Florida? Why, sir, it is true, I live somewhat remote from the State of Florida, but I never heard of this invasion of the United States before. It is most extraordinary that we should be referred to such a statute as this as the foundation of the power for calling out these troops. I am sure it will be news to the people of the United States, that this great country was invaded last year, or in imminent danger of invasion, so that it was necessary for the President to call out the militia of the country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How many of these Indians are there—a baker's dozen?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not aware of the number. It is very small, however. I say that no foundation whatever exists in this provision of the statute for calling out the troops in Florida, for there has been no invasion of the United States. It is matter of public notoriety that there has not been.

Mr. HAYNE. I am sorry that we have so little sympathy from the Senator from Illinois on the present occasion. Now, let me state to him a fact or two. On one single occasion, for the want of proper defense, eighty men, ten women, and five children, were scalped at Apalachicola, all belonging to the regular Army. Subsequently, and just before those villainous men, Arbuthnot and Ambriester, were executed, five hundred men and women were murdered on the frontiers of Georgia and Alabama by these very Indians. Why, sir, I think that people living in that country should have their eyes open, and their ears, so that they may hear, and their understanding so that they may understand. I really am sorry to see so little sympathy exhibited on such a solemn occasion.

Mr. YULEE. I shall not go into a discussion of the Florida war with the Senator from Illinois. The simple question is this: Does the United States owe a debt? If it owes a debt, it must pay it. That is the whole amount of the matter.

The President, acting upon the authority of law, has done what has been done by every President before him—called upon a State for troops which could not be supplied from the regular Army to suppress an insurrection or repel an invasion, whichever the gentleman chooses to denominate the uprising of the Indians there, and the invasion of the peaceable homes of the citizens of that portion of the United States. He may denominate it either an insurrection, if the Indians were entitled to no place, or he may denominate it an invasion, if they had an established place, and went over their frontiers to attack the white settlements. The President has done what has been established by precedent to be his right to do in the construction of the law which has been read to the Senate. The State of Florida, in compliance with the call of the Federal Government, has supplied these troops. Whether they were necessary or not, is not material to the present purpose, and I do not propose to discuss that point. They have been supplied on the call of the Federal Government; they have done the service; they have been discharged without payment; and this appropriation is asked for by the President, through the War Department, to enable him to discharge the debt. The debt is due, and it must be paid. We ask nothing of the gentleman's mercy; we ask nothing of his judgment as to the policy of defending the white settlers in Florida; but we ask him to pay this debt—that is all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Florida be good enough to furnish us the evidence of the call of the President of the United States, giving notice of the invasion? Has there been any proclamation, or any call by the President of the United States, notifying the country that we were at war, and that the United States had been invaded?

Mr. YULEE. I leave the Senator to make those discoveries for himself. It is sufficient for me, that the President has called on Congress to make an appropriation for troops, which he, under the laws of the United States, called into service. If the Senator desires anything more of the particulars and history of the transaction, I leave him to seek it himself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should be glad to see this call from the President; the evidence that he has called upon us to pay the troops mustered into service in Florida. I have seen no such message from the President. I have no recollection of any such thing in his annual message, or in any communication he has made to Congress. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. YULEE. I presume the Committee on Finance can furnish the gentleman with the proof of the fact that the Government have asked for this appropriation.

Mr. PEARCE. The Committee on Finance have already furnished that proof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I agree with the Senator from Florida, that this money must be paid; but I should really like to know how many Indians there were in Florida at the time of this invasion.

Mr. YULEE. I should have been happy to employ the Senator from Maine to ascertain that. The trouble has been that we have not had army enough to find out how many there were, but murders have been committed all the while, and the Government of the United States has not been able to give the protection which it was its duty to give to the population of Florida. Having tied the hands of the State of Florida, by the provision in the Constitution which prevented its waging war, this Government assumed the duty to protect them, which it has not been able to fulfill, for bloodshed has continued all the while; and it is only since the field has been taken by the Florida volunteers, under this call of the President, and has been left to them, that the Indians have been harassed and cut to pieces, that they have surrendered and retired, and that it has been announced by the commanding general of the United States army there that the war is ended in Florida; which fact I am happy to communicate to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. One question more. Will the Senator inform me whether there is anything in the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the people from defending themselves?

Mr. YULEE. No, sir; and it has been on that right of self-defense and self-preservation that the people of Florida have been obliged mainly to rely for their protection.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Clingman, Davis, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Havne, Hunter, Jones, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Shdell, Wright, and Yulee—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Dixon, Doolittle, Foster, Harlan, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I have another amendment from the Committee on Finance. I will remark that when the volunteers, for whose payment we have just provided, were discharged, ten companies were mustered into service by the successor of General Harney, and the Department undertook to pay them with funds drawn from the appropriations for suppressing Indian hostilities, and for marching volunteers into the service—two funds which I suppose were strictly and properly appropriated to such an object as this; but one of the accounting officers has taken it into his head that they were not properly applicable to this service. How, I cannot imagine; because the general appropriation for suppressing Indian hostilities would seem to cover this object precisely. The allowance is necessary to be made, having been refused to be passed by the accounting officers. The amendment which I now offer is the last amendment of the Committee on Finance, which proposes to authorize the application of these balances:

And he further enacted, That the balances from the appropriations for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for traveling allowance to volunteers, already expended in the payment of Florida volunteers, called into service by authority of the War Department, may be applied by the accounting officers of the Treasury to the settlement of the accounts of paymasters by whom said balances were disbursed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have some amendments to offer from the Committee on Military Affairs. The first is to insert after line fifteen:

Provided, That the superintendent of the Military Academy, while serving as such by appointment of the President, shall have the local rank, the pay and allowances of a colonel of engineers; that the commandant of the corps of cadets at the Military Academy, while serving as such by appointment of the President, shall have the local rank the pay and allowances of a lieutenant colonel of engineers; and, besides his other duties, shall be charged with the duty of instructor in the tactics of the three arms at said academy; and that the senior assistant instructor in each of the arms of service—to wit: artillery, cavalry, and infantry—shall severally receive the pay and allowances of the assistant professor of mathematics.

Mr. HUNTER. Does this increase the pay of these officers?

Mr. DAVIS. It does slightly. It increases the pay of the superintendent $50, of the commandant $24, and of each of the first assistants, three in number, $16 67; making the gross increase $124 a month. I think it will greatly improve the organization, and relieve the Government from some embarrassments it now has in the selection of a superintendent; and prevent it from having to appoint as commandant an officer too young to have been tried in the field, and to have that sort of reputation which is necessary to govern young soldiers, and is greatly advantageous in the formation of the character of those who are to be officers of the Army. I believe it will confer a great benefit at a very small expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs is, in line one hundred and thirty-eight, after the word "in," to insert "the manufacture of cannon and cannon powder, and for tests of;" so as to make the clause read:

For the current expenses of the ordnance service, including experiments in the manufacture of cannon and cannon powder, and for tests of arms and ammunition, not otherwise provided for, $150,000.

I will merely state to the Senate that some experiments have shown that we have been in great error as to the mode of casting cannon. I am myself convinced that they ought to be cast hollow, with a stream of water passing through the metal. I think it has been shown conclusively, by recent experiment, that we have made a great error in making cannon powder too quick, and we ought to go on with investigations to ascertain how cannon powder should be made, so as to give the greatest range to the projectile and the least danger of explosion to the piece. I have not proposed to change the amount as passed by the House of Representatives, but to introduce words which I think are covered by the language now in the bill; but that language being of somewhat doubtful meaning, I propose to introduce words that will make it certain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I propose further, in behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, to insert after line one hundred and forty-six:

For the purchase of breech-loading carbines of the best model, $45,000.

This is a proposition which was before the Committee on Finance and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and which was intended to be included in the amendment offered at an earlier part of the day. It is now presented as a separate amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I am opposed to any such appropriation at this time, because it seems to me we are appropriating enough to the manufacture of arms. This bill contains an appropriation of $400,000 for the manufacture of arms in the national armories. In addition to that, there is a permanent appropriation of $200,000 for the purchase of arms for arming the militia. The two together make $600,000. I do not see why they may not, out of the permanent appropriation of $200,000, try these experiments.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer the chairman of the Committee on Finance in a sentence, and really I am unable to speak much, and I hope a few words will suffice. It is not possible to spend one dollar of that appropriation in the manufacture of breech-loading arms, unless they expend a large portion of it in machinery suited to the manufacture of breech-loading arms. Unless, therefore, it be justified by the intent to manufacture a very large number of arms, we are thrown back, of necessity, upon the purchase.

Mr. HUNTER. I spoke of the appropriation of $200,000, which is designed and generally used to purchase arms from contractors.

Mr. DAVIS. You may purchase from contractors, or you may take from the armories the arms manufactured by the Government. The Department generally takes from the armories, the evident object being to put into the hands of the militia such weapons as they will be required to use in time of war.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that this appropriation, if passed, ought to be deducted from the $200,000. I do not think we ought to add to the entire appropriation for arms. We find that these large appropriations lead to this consequence: we accumulate large stocks of arms which are superseded by subsequent discoveries; and the result is, that we have to sell them for little or nothing. The expediency of accumulating arms in such numbers, I think, is more than doubtful; but if this appropriation is to pass, it ought to be deducted from the permanent $200,000 appropriation.

Mr. DIXON. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, by inserting after the word "model" the words "to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers;" so as to make it read:

For the purchase of breech-loading carbines of the best model, to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, $45,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope that will not prevail.

Mr. DIXON. I believe the Senator from Mississippi is willing to accept my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I like it very well. I think those officers are the best judges.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to amend the amendment by providing for the purchase of new arms, or the alteration of old arms into breech-loading arms, so as to make it entirely discretionary with the Secretary of War whether he will purchase new arms, or use the economical process of changing the old ones. The Senator from Mississippi suggests that this amendment is for carbines, but I am told—I again repeat that I am unfortunately ignorant on this subject—that the process of changing muskets and rifles can be adapted to the carbine by simply shortening the barrel, and therefore that difficulty may be obviated. The musket and rifle, by this change, may be reduced to the carbine.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Secretary of War has made a distinct request for an appropriation of this amount for purchasing breech-loading carbines for cavalry purposes. At the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] I told him that I hoped he would permit the question to be taken on this proposition by itself, and if he wanted to alter any arms, bring that forward as a separate proposition, and not embarrass the one with the other. To that he assented; but the other Senator from Louisiana is about to mix them up. I voted with him before in regard to the alterations, and I hope he will permit the question to be taken on this amendment by itself.

Mr. SLIDELL. My amendment is, to insert the words "the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, or for," after the word "for," in the amendment of the committee; so that the whole will read:

For the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, or for the purchase of breech-loading carbines, of the best model, $45,000.

Mr. DIXON. Is the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an amendment to an amendment, and cannot be amended.

Mr. DIXON. Then I ask the Senator from Louisiana to accept an amendment to his amendment, providing that the models for these breech-loading guns shall be selected by a board of ordnance officers.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FITCH. There is some incongruity in the amendment. I should be very glad to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, but it contemplates making out of the old muskets what cannot be made out of that material—carbines. They are of different caliber, with different shaped stocks, and different shaped barrels; and it is utterly impossible for them to be made into carbines by any process short of new manufacture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, is to make the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, from the Committee on Military Affairs, read as follows:

For the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, on a model to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, or for the purchase of breech-loading carbines, of the best model, to be in like manner selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, $45,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask for the yeas and nays. I have nothing to say. The subject has been fully discussed.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator from Louisiana would withdraw his amendment, and present it as a separate proposition.

Mr. SLIDELL. Can the Senator show me a good reason for doing so?

Mr. SIMMONS. When they were together before, they were both voted down. Now I should like to try them separately.

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senator can give me an assurance of a better vote in that way, I may accede to his suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not wish to have the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment, but on the insertion of the amendment as amended. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana had been accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi does not accept the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. HUNTER. Then, by general consent, I am willing to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. It is on the final vote that I want them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to allowing the call for the yeas and nays to be withdrawn.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am willing to withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi:

For the purchase of breech-loading carbines of the best model, to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, $45,000.

Mr. HUNTER. On that, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Gwin, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Slidell, Trumbull, Wilson, and Wright—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Cameron, Clay, Clingman, Fessenden, Green, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mason, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Stuart, Wade, and Yulee—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I now renew the amendment which I withdrew. It is to insert after the word "for," in the amendment just adopted, "the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, or for."

Mr. DIXON. I propose the same amendment which I offered before, which I presume the Senator from Louisiana will accept, requiring the model to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers.

Mr. SLIDELL. I accept that.

Mr. HUNTER. Do I understand that this is an additional appropriation?

Mr. SLIDELL. Not at all.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand it is to amend an amendment we have already adopted. We cannot do that. The Senator can only reach his object by offering an independent proposition, and then he will have to say how much he proposes to appropriate. I raise the question of order that a Senator cannot offer an amendment to an amendment which has already been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT.) The Senator from Louisiana will have an opportunity of renewing his amendment in the Senate, when the bill shall have been reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SLIDELL. I prefer to have it done now, if there be any mode of doing it consistent with the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot move an amendment to an amendment which has already been adopted, but he can offer an independent proposition.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I move an additional clause, appropriating $25,000 in conformity with the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. KING. It is not in order to move to increase the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Mississippi through with the amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. DAVIS. I have some others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will first receive the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has no objection to my amendment being now considered. It appears to me to be entirely germane to the matter we are upon, and I prefer to have it tested in committee. I will state very frankly that if my amendment now does not prevail, I shall vote against the whole appropriation for the purchase of arms. My amendment is to insert after line one hundred and forty-six:

For the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, upon a model to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, $25,000.

Mr. KING. I inquire whether it is in order to move an additional appropriation?

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senator from New York will suggest his point of order, I will hear it.

Mr. KING. The amendment proposes an increased appropriation, and does not come from any committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. This is only a motion to appropriate $25,000 out of $100,000 before appropriated by the House of Representatives; so I presume it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No doubt it is in order.

Mr. POLK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] if this is the amendment that he gave notice he would offer at some time?

Mr. BENJAMIN. The same one in effect.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to inquire what kind of arm it is proposed to change from muzzle-loading into breech-loading?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Both muskets and rifles.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I must say that I have not much faith in changing the old musket or rifle into a breech-loading arm.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I have an amendment to offer as a proviso to the appropriation just adopted:

Provided, That any portion of said sum, not exceeding five thousand dollars, may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in applying to the old or new arms the recent improvement of Captain J. N. Ward, in the mode of applying Maynard's primer.

I beg leave to make to the Senate a very short explanation in relation to this matter. This subject was brought to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs, the improvement of Captain Ward was subjected to the inspection of the committee, and I think met the decided approval of every member. This is an improvement in the application of Maynard's primer, which Congress have heretofore adopted, and for which they gave a very large premium to Dr. Maynard. The improvement consists in a hammer which contains within it a coil of Maynard's primer, so arranged that upon the cocking of the gun, one link of Maynard's primer projects itself so as to come down upon the cap and explode. That is the simple explanation of it. This improvement has been subjected to a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War consisting of Colonel J. E. Johnson, first cavalry; Major W. H. Bell, of the ordnance department; Brevet Colonel Charles A. May, second dragoons; Major N. C. McRae, third infantry; and Captain J. E. Whittall, fifth infantry. They assembled in the month of February, in the present year, and examined various arms submitted by Captain Ward, and amongst others this improvement in the mode of applying Maynard's primer. The board say:

"The board examined an arrangement for attaching tape primers to small arms, called Ward's magazine hammer. To test its working, forty shots were fired. The board are of opinion that Ward's magazine hammer is a great improvement on any other method known for the application of tape primers for the firing of small arms; and therefore recommend that it be applied to all the small arms except revolvers, to be manufactured, and to all the old small arms except revolvers."

That is the unanimous recommendation of the board of officers who were appointed for the purpose of making this examination. The improvement is also very highly recommended by various officers of the Army who have examined and tested it; amongst others, by General Churchill, Colonel Mansfield, Inspector General of the Army, Assistant Adjutant General Thomas, Major Bell, of the ordnance corps, and Major Backus, of the third infantry. Major Bell says:

"It is, in my opinion, by far the greatest invention for firing charges of powder ever known."

It has also the recommendation of some fifteen or twenty of the highest officers known to the militia service of the State of New York. The advantage of this arm is, in the first place, that it can be cheaply made, as compared with any other self-priming arrangement, and can be adjusted to percussion guns by any blacksmith, without requiring any alteration of the arms except the insertion of a screw pin in the lock-plate. Thus, the hammers can be made in the United States armories and sent to Texas, New Mexico, Oregon, &c., to be there adjusted, and will save the cost of double transportation required for the alteration of these arms by other methods. In the next place, from its construction, this magazine hammer feeds out the continuous primer with greater precision and certainty than does any other method. Its parts are all strong; and as neither water nor smoke can get into it, it will not suffer from corrosion. That is an advantage which perhaps no other improvement has. Next, the flame of the cap and the vent discharge are reflected down from the magazine, instead of into it, as in the case of all magazines located below the cone. It was to determine that point that the late examining board of officers had forty shots, with ball cartridge, fired. They were satisfied on all other points simply from an inspection of the hammer in detail. From observing that after forty shots no smoke even was found in the passage to the magazine, the board pronounced themselves entirely satisfied, and some of them remarked that forty shots were as good as a thousand to establish the certainty, accuracy, and safety of feeding out and firing the primer. Lastly, this hammer is just as good for percussion caps as for primers, and a soldier can be supplied with a few of the former to use in case the latter fail.

It requires no fixed ammunition or fancy cartridges, such as a sportsman may carry about his shooting wagon. Our soldiers are accustomed to cartridges and caps; and, in my opinion, no gun will answer for our service which does not have a cone for caps or primers. Caps and powder and ball can be found anywhere, but fixed ammunition of a peculiar kind cannot; and when out of cartridges, though you have powder, ball, and caps in your hand, your gun is worth no more than a crowbar to you.

There is an additional invention by Captain Ward of a cone seat, which prevents fire from going forward and striking the fingers or hand of the party who holds the musket, which is always a great disadvantage, and this is an effectual preventive of that difficulty.

The cost of this application cannot be more than one dollar and a half or two dollars to each musket; and, in a conversation which I had on the subject with the Secretary of War, who examined it very critically, he said that, with the application of this hammer to our old muskets, they would be equal to any guns known to the world. A board of officers have recommended it; it has the recommendation of a large number of other officers who have examined it; the Committee on Military Affairs are satisfied that it is a very valuable improvement; and I trust that at least a portion of this appropriation will be applied in this way. The amendment does not direct the Secretary of War to apply the money in this way; it authorizes him to do so, leaving it discretionary with him to use $5,000 in applying this improvement to the old arms, or to any new arms he may think proper to have manufactured at the armories. This is one of the most valuable improvements that has ever been invented, and I trust there will be no objection to the application of the small sum proposed to test the matter. The amount will probably be enough to supply two regiments with this hammer, so that, in the course of a very short time, its utility would be fairly tested, and it might then be applied to all the arms of the United States, if that should be considered advisable.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia, who proposes this amendment, to what extent Maynard's primer has been introduced into the Army in actual service. This is a proposition to apply Maynard's primer with more facility. This invention is a magazine hammer in which to place the primer. The Senator can doubtless tell me to what extent the primer itself has been introduced into actual service.

Mr. IVERSON. I am not able to say. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs perhaps can do it better.

Mr. DAVIS. The primers, as originally made, were defective, and did not succeed. Recently, at least within the last two years, we have got a cement to prevent the caps being dampened. Since that time, they have gone out, to some extent.

Mr. MALLORY. I have no doubt, that any fulminator, covered with gum shellac, as these primers are, made in Washington, or any climate similar to Washington, would prove very advantageous; but I think when you transfer these primers to a moist climate, a damp atmosphere, they are perfectly useless—Maynard's, or any other. I think we now supply our soldiers with the percussion caps.

Mr. DAVIS. We supply both, and therefore all modifications require that the cone should be retained so that the cap may be used. I would, however, state what I am sure will be agreeable to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that we think we have found a cement that is insoluble either in vapor or water.

Mr. MALLORY. If that is the case, the primer is a very valuable discovery, if it can be protected from dampness, and be equally good under all states of temperature.

Mr. IVERSON. The hammer of Captain Ward secures the primer from all moisture of every kind whatever.

Mr. MALLORY. I have seen the hammer, and am familiar with it. I was referring, however, to the character of the primer itself. My own experience of Maynard's primer in a southern latitude, is that it is useless. If, however, a cement to cover the fulminate has been discovered so as to protect it from dampness, it is a valuable discovery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs, to insert between lines one hundred and seventy-one and one hundred and seventy-two:

To enable the Secretary of War to examine and report upon suitable sites for an armory and foundry in the west and on the Pacific coast, $10,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any estimate for an armory on the Pacific coast?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no estimate, nor is there any work projected. This is simply for an examination to ascertain the site. It is recommended by the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to insert between lines one hundred and seventy-four and one hundred and seventy-five:

To enable the Secretary of War to compensate F. W. Lander, for services performed and expenses incurred by him in making a reconnaissance for a railroad from Puget Sound, via South Pass, to the Mississippi river, in 1854, $4,750, or as much thereof as the said Secretary may consider reasonable and proper, in full consideration for said services and expenses.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim—back pay in 1854? I ask the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that the amendment is in order.

Mr. HUNTER. Such amendments were ruled out last week all the time.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Without some information upon the subject, I do not see how we can vote for any such claim. I do not know who Mr. Lander is; I do not know by whom he was employed.

Mr. DAVIS. I will give such explanation as I can to the Senate. Congress, some years ago, so far adopted a reconnaissance made by Mr. Lander of a route for a railroad from the Columbia river into the valley of the Platte as to direct that his report and map should be made and published. He made his report to Congress, with a map which has been published; and the only question is, whether Congress, by adopting his work, have not made themselves liable to pay him for it. I present the amendment, without myself pretending to be a judge of the question of order that has been raised. I merely thought, that, as Congress had adopted the work, and it was recommended that he should be paid, and this is the sum we learn from the Department that is considered a fair compensation, the amendment would be proper.

Mr. HUNTER. It is evidently a private claim; and if the Chair insists on his decision, I shall have to take an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is aware that the rule has been construed more rigidly this session than last session; but the Chair considers it not to be a private claim, being in pursuance of a law heretofore passed.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not in pursuance of any law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair misunderstood the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps I have not made myself plain; and in my effort to avoid unnecessary speaking, I have said too little. Mr. Lander was a civil engineer employed in the expedition to survey the best route for a railroad near the forty-ninth parallel of latitude, being a part of the organization of Governor Stevens. After he got into Washington Territory, he left the party with which he went out, and returned, as an individual enterprise, up the Columbia river, and across into the valley of the Platte, and made out a report. He had no outfit; he had no aid from the Government at all in this survey; but when he arrived here, by influences which I understand, but cannot attempt to describe, his report was called for by the House of Representatives, and it was authorized that he should make a report and map. He submitted his report to the War Office, and it was sent in, with his map of his route, and Congress ordered it to be printed, thus adopting his work. His claim to compensation is that he made a survey, which Congress adopted, and gave to the public.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understand one other fact, which the Senator from Mississippi took it for granted the Senate were aware of, and therefore did not state. Congress passed a law authorizing surveys of different routes to the Pacific; and he was employed under that law, as I understand.

Mr. DAVIS. He went out under Stevens.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Stevens was sent out in pursuance of that law.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And the service, therefore, was in pursuance of a law of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided the amendment to be in order. From this decision the Senator from Virginia appeals. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The decision of the Chair was sustained—ayes twenty-four, noes not counted.

Mr. HUNTER. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. It ought not to be put on this bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Davis, Douglas, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Iverson, Kennedy, Mallory, Seward, Simmons, Wade, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Reid, Sidel, Trumbull, and Wright—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SEWARD. With the leave of the Senator from Mississippi, as I wish to be absent for a little while, I ask leave to offer now an amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which I offered last night to the naval appropriation bill, but which was then arrested on the motion of the Committee on Printing. That committee have withdrawn their objection, and consented that I should offer the proposition now. I believe there is no opposition to it. My amendment is:

And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for preparing for printing the charts of the Behring's Straits and North Pacific surveying and exploring expeditions, under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Navy, but not for printing the same, $5,700.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. This subject was referred yesterday to the Committee on Printing, and we reported this morning against an order for printing these charts. Our reason for making this report was that the charts are not yet in existence, and we did not think it in accordance with those rules which had hitherto been held, and the practice which had heretofore prevailed, to order the printing of matter which has no existence, because it is impossible to get a just estimate of its cost, as is required by our rules before we make such an order. Under these circumstances, we reported adversely to the proposition to print these charts; but I am at liberty to say that the Printing Committee have no objection to having the sailing charts prepared, so that they may hereafter be printed, if that be necessary. I will say individually, for myself, that I believe these charts ought to be prepared. They are mere sailing charts. If, when prepared, we shall see that the cost of printing them is not unreasonable, and that they are such as the Department will indorse, it will be appropriate to order them to be printed. I will support the amendment as it is now presented.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from New York by whom these charts were made?

Mr. SEWARD. Captain Rodgers, and those connected with the expedition.

Mr. KENNEDY. Are Captain Ringgold's charts included?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It includes both the North Pacific and the Behring's Straits explorations, as I understand. The amendment places the matter under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Navy, and he will have those charts prepared which he thinks ought properly to be prepared.

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand it includes Captain Ringgold's charts.

Mr. SEWARD. It includes both expeditions. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Military Affairs offer this amendment, to come in at the end of the first section of the bill:

For the construction of bridges, and the improvement of the crossings of streams on the road from Fort Smith in Arkansas, to Albuquerque in New Mexico, $50,000.

This route has always been an important one for military transportation, and its value, I suppose, is to be increased by a recent contract for transporting the mail by water to Fort Smith once in every two weeks. It is one of the most practicable routes we have from that frontier across the continent. On the eastern portion of the route there are a number of small streams which occasionally it is difficult to cross. After passing over beyond the ninety-ninth meridian, the water courses are so small, and the whole country is so arid, that we believe there will be no necessity for bridges beyond that point. Moreover, the expense of bridging becomes so great as you go from the seat of the settlements, that the committee have only thought proper to present the amendment for the bridging and crossings of streams on the eastern end of this route. The natural road is very good, and we have, therefore, only submitted that amount which was estimated for bridges and crossings of streams.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that if there is anything that ought to be postponed it is military roads. Here are immense amounts appropriated in this bill, and we are adding to it largely, and I think we ought at least to cut off these expenditures for the present. I understand it is to aid in the transportation of the mail under a contract which has been made for the overland post route.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There is no exclusive object of that kind.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me it ought to be postponed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Senator from Virginia is incorrect in the supposition that the only object of this proposition is to facilitate the transportation of the mail. That is the only one of many inducements. Certainly we are to consider the benefits to emigration, which is a matter of the greatest importance. Military transportation also is a matter of very great importance. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I presume, is well aware of the fact that there is a region of country lying west, on this line, that must be a point of future difficulty, where our troops will be required without doubt. Without going into that point further, I will simply say, that the policy of opening wagon roads across the continent has been recognized by Congress, and the object is mainly to enable our people to traverse the country between the Mississippi and the Pacific. I can say to the Senator from Virginia, who objects to this appropriation, that the Committee on Military Affairs have considered this subject quite maturely. I was not present at the meeting of the committee when it was taken up, although it might be supposed that as a representative of the State of Arkansas, I should feel a personal interest in it. I can tell the Senator from Virginia, that with the exception of another road, this is the only one on which the committee make a favorable report at this session. The other one is the Salem and Astoria road in Oregon. I beg now to read the letter of the topographical bureau on this subject, and I ask the attention of the Senate to it:

BUREAU OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS,
WASHINGTON, May 8, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office of the letter of the chairman of the Military Committee of the Senate of the 30th ultimo, requiring a report of the necessity, expediency, and practicability of making military wagon roads from Fort Smith, Arkansas, to Albuquerque, New Mexico, and from Fulton, in Arkansas, to El Paso, in New Mexico, the probable cost of each, the time to complete, and the amount required during the coming fiscal year.

In obedience to your directions, I have the honor to report, that the construction of these roads will facilitate travel and emigration from our western borders to the southern portions of the Territory of New Mexico.

Of the practicability of constructing the roads, there does not exist a doubt, as the prairies and plains furnish excellent natural roads. The construction will consist in laying out the roads, the building of bridges, and grading the crossings of streams.

There, however, is no data in the office upon which to base exact estimates of cost. The labor will be chiefly required upon the first two hundred miles of the roads from the western borders of the States over the prairie country; the remaining portion of each of the roads will be upon the elevated plains.

It is respectfully recommended that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated for the construction of a military wagon road from the Arkansas river, at Fort Smith, Arkansas, to Albuquerque, New Mexico; and that the sum of $50,000 be appropriated for the construction of a military wagon road from the Red river, at Fulton, Arkansas, to El Paso, New Mexico.

The time required for constructing each of the roads would be one season, commencing about the 1st of April, or as soon as the grass is sufficiently advanced to sustain the animals. The funds, therefore, would not be required until the latter half of the fiscal year.

The military road from Fort Benton, on the Missouri river, to Fort Walla-Walla, also referred to in the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, is not under the direction of this bureau. An appropriation of $30,000 has already been made for opening the roads, and Lieutenant Mullen, of the artillery, has been assigned to the duty, under the immediate direction of the War Department.

Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

J. J. ABERT,

Colonel Corps Topographical Engineers.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

This recommendation is in pursuance of the policy adopted at the last session of Congress, when we recognized it as the best course that could be pursued to open ordinary roads, by which emigrants could traverse this country—best for our peace, best for the purpose of convincing the Indian tribes of the necessity of allowing our people to pass through their country quietly, without obstruction. I believe it is conclusively established that the route from Fort Smith, which is about the head of navigation of the Arkansas river, is one of the very best that there is upon the continent of America, for making the crossing. It is proposed to appropriate only $50,000. With regard to the route on the thirty-second parallel, starting from Fulton, on the Red river, the committee have declined to make any recommendation at this time, though it is recommended by the Department. Other roads have had an appropriation for them, and now only a small appropriation is asked for this road, on which emigration has already been traveling without assistance. The great obstacle is as to the crossing of some of the small rivers, in time of high water, by which emigrants are arrested and compelled to encamp on the banks until the stream falls, causing them to consume their provisions and supplies, and often causing them severe loss, in their anxiety to get over, when they will attempt it too early and in too deep water. The committee have thought that this one appropriation, out of the number before them, ought to be made, and I trust that that policy which has heretofore been pursued towards the northern portion of this Union, will not now be denied, in this instance, to the best southern route, probably, that there is for purposes of emigration. I trust the amendment will prevail.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories, to offer an amendment, and as it is connected immediately with this question, I think it is more appropriate as an amendment to this amendment. When it shall be read, it will be found that it is for the continuation of this same route from Albuquerque to the Colorado river. As it is a mere elongation of the same line, I think it is proper as an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. Was that appropriated for last year?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BARGENT.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment which is, at the end of the amendment to insert the following:

And that the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in completing connecting sections in the road extending from Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, westward, on the route of the Colorado river, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The letter of the Secretary will explain this proposition.

Mr. GWIN. It will be recollected that at the last Congress there were $300,000 appropriated for a military road by Salt Lake; $200,000 were appropriated for the road from El Paso to Fort Yuma at the mouth of the Gila river, and but $50,000 for this route. This appropriation is simply to bring the amount on this route to the sum appropriated for the route from El Paso to Fort Yuma, at the mouth of the Gila river, and it is $100,000 less than was appropriated for the Salt Lake road. It is certainly one of the best routes across the continent, and I think, no amendment more appropriate could be made to this bill.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the Senator from California if the money has been expended on this route which was appropriated last year.

Mr. GWIN. I take it for granted it has been. I believe it is stated in the letter of the Secretary of War, that what was appropriated, as was provided for in the law, directed the construction of the road from Fort Defiance to the Colorado river.

Mr. WILSON. The report says that money has been squandered rather than expended in building the road. I do not know that it is so.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose it is useless to resist any of these appropriations if we go on. I wish merely to strike out the phrase in it that it is to be paid "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." I wonder how much will answer that description if we put on the amendments which are proposed?

Mr. DOUGLAS. This is to finish an appropriation made before. I presume it will stand as good a chance as the rest of them.

Mr. BRODERICK. I understand there is a letter from the Secretary of War in regard to this appropriation, which I hope will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, May 22, 1858.

SIR: In reply to your note received this day, I beg leave to remark that the road from Albuquerque to the Colorado river, of which you speak, is, in my judgment, one of very great importance. It constitutes the central line of communication between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific ocean, which, for many purposes, will compare favorably with any other, and in some particulars is superior. It will be a great thoroughfare for emigration, presenting, as it does, the straightest road of any yet discovered across the great basin lying between the Sierra Madre and the Sierra Nevada, along which there is no scarcity of water and grass.

In a military point of view it is probably of more importance still, for by its construction, and the settlements which it will superinduce upon its whole length, it will present a line of defense after a while which will divide completely the nomadic tribes of Indians which inhabit the Utah Territory and the regions north of this road from the country lying in the territory of Arizona.

It will be scarcely possible, when the road from El Paso to Fort Yuma is completed and properly graded, that the region of country lying between the road now spoken of and that line of travel could be subject to any very serious depredations from the Indian tribes either residing in it or those north of the roads which you are proposing to construct.

Fifty thousand dollars have been already expended upon this line, judiciously, as I think, and the facts connected with the report which Mr. Benie made, heretofore transmitted to Congress, surrounding this road, demonstrate, in my opinion, that a wise economy would warrant the appropriation of $100,000 towards the completion of an enterprise so auspiciously begun.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,

Secretary of War.

Hon. M. A. OTTIE, House of Representatives.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know that I have any objection whatever, if this is the proper time to do it, to expend money to build these military roads across the continent; but I have no objection to this particular appropriation. But, sir, while supporting this, there are other routes across the continent of no less importance than the one for which this appropriation is to be made. There is a route across the continent, near the forty-ninth parallel—the route from Fort Benton over into the navigable waters of the Columbia—which, for the benefit of emigration and for the development of our country, is far superior to this route which is proposed across to Albuquerque—a country which I venture to say when time shall have developed both, where the inhabitants within a square mile will be double what they will ever be on this route, across the arid plains of the lower country—a route where rain falls during the season of rain, where the grass grows up to the very ridge of the mountains and on the very line of emigration in the northern part of this Confederacy. If this matter is to be gone into, I insist that it is but just and fair that those routes should be considered and equally regarded. While I should not object to opening this military road as is indicated by this amendment, I insist that it is but just, if we now enter upon it, and appropriate money to do it, that this other great route should also receive support.

Mr. DAVIS. I will state, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the road he speaks of had a small appropriation made for it, quite inadequate to the sending of a party there with any hope of constructing it. There is an officer employed now, however—I really do not know with what means—upon that road. In 1856 a plan was devised for making that road by passing troops from the west towards the east, and from the east towards the west, changing the mode of transportation at Fort Benton, the troops coming up the Missouri to give up their boats to the troops who come across from Oregon and Washington Territories, and take their wagons and go back on the route they had come over. It was a mode by which a small amount might render it possible to make a wagon road. The route is a very difficult one. A party has once been over it. But to make a practical and easy wagon road would require an amount of labor on the mere route which would exceed any sum, I am sure, the Senate would give; and, except by a military expedition across that line, I see no prospect of ever making a good road there. The officer who was engaged in it, I suppose, has given us the details, and the $30,000, I expect, will go something like other appropriations, in finding out where a road is to be built.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, also, to a fact which has not been noticed. It is the concluding passage of a letter that I did not consider as relating to the amendment, a portion of which I read just now. It is:

"The military road from Fort Benton, on the Missouri river, to Fort Walla Walla, also referred to in the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, is not under the direction of this bureau."

It is not under the direction of the War Department, allow me to say to him, and did not call for action on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs; but the letter goes on to state:

"An appropriation of $30,000 has already been made for opening the roads, and Lieutenant Mullen, of the artillery, has been assigned to the duty, under the immediate direction of the War Department."

That letter shows that efforts are going on already to construct that road. I will state to the Senator, when the question came up in regard to this or any of these roads at the last Congress, it never occurred to me, and certainly I think not to any gentleman on this side, or, if so, it was never called to my attention, that we should have asked the question, was this road North or was it South? I very well know that I voted for these roads, and that I struggled in supporting the Senator from California in efforts to get some road open by which emigrants could reach the Pacific shore. I did it with earnestness. No such question as a sectional one ever entered into my head, nor do I think the question is raised on any of the propositions as to whether the North was receiving most or the South was receiving most.

Now, sir, the committee report this amendment here. It is for a road which all the reports, whenever they shall be examined, I am confident will show is one of the very best, if not absolutely the very best, route for emigration, for a mere wagon road, that the whole continent presents to us. There are more resources along it for the emigrant than are to be found, I verily believe, upon any other one. You may obtain those resources still earlier, as you go further South; but not, however, for so great an extent of country, nor to so high a degree of excellence. This I believe to be so.

I trust that the question will not be considered by Senators on the other side of the Chamber as a mere matter of sectionalism. I know that has not entered with me into the consideration of the propriety, utility, or necessity, of any of those public roads, for a single moment. If we introduce that feeling here, it is plain we can divide this Senate at once; and it is plain that no measure for the relief of that section of the country can pass whatever. This will be the result, and the only result, of the consideration of a number of roads. We think this is but a moderate demand for the necessities of the people of the United States who ask to emigrate across to our new possessions on the Pacific.

Mr. DOUGLAS. One word more upon this road, and I have done. I feel as much interest as the Senator from Wisconsin in that northern road. It is a favorite road with me; and I will contribute everything in my power to have that road opened. A commencement has been made; and when we get the report from the officer in charge of it, I have no doubt the Government will go on with it. Permit me to say to him that this route to Albuquerque, in my opinion, is the best wagon road from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. It is the furthest northern road that can be traveled in winter. I believe our own people North would prefer it in the summer to any other, except a route going to Puget Sound, and thence to the bay of San Francisco; but I trust that no rivalry between these two roads will be gotten up. This route, which the amendment is intended to complete, is as much a northern road as a southern road; it is a central road, a good road, and, in my opinion, the best road. I trust the amendment will be adopted, therefore, without interfering with any other route whatever.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that the Senators on this side of the Chamber with whom I act will, on this as on all other questions, adopt a liberal policy. I was on the committee that reported the original proposition which has been submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I voted in that committee in favor of the proposition. I shall vote for it here most cheerfully. We had several proposed roads before us; some of them, I think, in Oregon and Washington Territories, and the one referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. The committee, after a great deal of deliberation and examination, decided to report this amendment appropriating $50,000. I shall vote for it. At the same time, however, I shall have to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois. I think we had better appropriate the $50,000 contained in the original amendment, and let the question in regard to the other roads stand until another year. If we commence to amend the amendment from the committee, there may be several other propositions offered. Standing alone by themselves, they have claims; but I think this is one that has superior claims upon the attention of the Senate. I hope that the amendment moved by the Senator from Illinois will not be adopted, but that we shall agree to this small appropriation of $50,000, and make this progress during the present year. That is my feeling. I think there is nothing sectional in it. In fact, Mr. President, I know that in the Committee on Military Affairs the idea of sectionalism did not enter into the examination of this or any other of the routes.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will reconsider his determination to vote against the amendment to the amendment. If these appropriations be made, he will find that there will soon be established a four-horse coach mail, and it will be one of the greatest inducements for emigrants to settle along the route and use this road and make it a great highway. Nothing can contribute so much to it. All that is wanting to make it one of the great emigrant routes between the Atlantic and Pacific is this appropriation. I do hope, as it is only the amount appropriated for the El Paso road last year, and $100,000 less than was appropriated for the northern route by Salt Lake, that there will be no opposition to the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I should be very glad if the Senator from Illinois would let his proposition stand on its own merits, and not offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the committee. I think it would be more appropriate. I really hope that he will not embarrass the original proposition with an amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will allow the vote to be taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi first, and I shall then renew my proposition, and allow it to stand upon its own footing.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is all I ask.

Mr. BRODERICK. It appears to me that the vote can as well be taken at the same time on all. I think the last proposition is more important than the first. I knew nothing of the amendment introduced by the Senator from Illinois until yesterday. If I had known of it earlier, I would have taken the trouble of seeing Senators, and trying to induce them to vote for it. I consider it very important to my State, because I believe it to be the best route to California. If the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi passes, I hope this will pass also.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to explain to the Senator from California that I only withdrew it for a moment to allow the vote to be taken on the amendment of the committee, and then to follow it with the offering of my proposition.

Mr. BRODERICK. Then I have no objection.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Perhaps I was misapprehended by the honorable Senator from Arkansas, as he supposed that what I said was dictated by some sectional feeling. Sir, I claim to be as devoid of sectional feeling as any person who has a seat on this floor. I know my country, and my whole country.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, I hope he did not understand me as using any expression of that sort in an offensive sense.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir, I did not; but I desire to disclaim for myself in my action here that I am controlled by any such feeling. I hope I may ever be free from being controlled by it. It is true, I claim to be nothing more nor less than human; and from my position, living among a people residing in one section of the Union, I may have sympathies that are stronger with them than with people residing in other sections of the Union; but I hope, so far as I may be able, never to suffer myself to be controlled by mere sectional feeling in any proposition that I have to make, or in any vote that I may have to give, on this floor.

I desired to call the attention of the Senate to the question on this proposed amendment, as there is to be made an addition to the appropriation bill of $100,000. If we are to enter upon it, I, for one, would desire at the same time to make an appropriation for the purpose of developing the route from Fort Benton over into the navigable waters of the Columbia river; not that I wish to prevent the building of this wagon road which is said to be the best road to California. All I desire to have is a good wagon road built, so that emigration may pass from the northern portion of this Confederacy over to Oregon and Washington, as well as that emigration may pass to California. It was not in any sectional spirit that I made my observations; and if, as is indicated by the remarks which fell from the honorable Senator from Mississippi and the honorable Senator from Illinois, upon the meeting of another Congress, a survey shall have been made by the officer now at work upon that route to Congress, and I could feel reasonably assured that Congress would be willing to make a proper appropriation for the development of that wagon road, I should not interpose any objection to making an appropriation for this.

I desire that California should be developed, and that a good wagon road should exist to California, which will be the precursor, in all probability, of a railroad route; for when there can be a good wagon road, and the country can be peopled and inhabited, and thickly inhabited, railroads become a necessity; but a population must generally precede the building of a railroad to be successful; and a wagon road is necessary in order that emigration and population may go into the territory. I desire that a wagon road should be built, and a good one, upon the northern route—the Salt Lake route—and also this Albuquerque route; for I believe that the time is coming when there will be at least three good roads across the continent to the Pacific, and they may be the precursors in the end of three railroad routes across the continent. It was in no sectional spirit that I made the observation.

Mr. POLK. I do not know, Mr. President, that I ought to object to the willingness exhibited on the part of the Senator from Illinois to take these votes separately; but it strikes me that there is great propriety in the amendment of the Senator from Illinois being attached to the amendment offered by the Committee on Military Affairs. That amendment has been the subject-matter of investigation by the Committee on Territories just in the same manner and to the same extent, probably, that the appropriation of $50,000 had been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs; and therefore I look at them both alike. Both come before me as a member of the Senate with the indorsement of the recommendation of the standing committees of this body after an investigation; and it is evident that the two together make a continued road across from the settlements on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains to the settlements on the western slope. There is therefore a propriety that they should come together, and stand together a unit, and effectuate a great object. Besides, though the amount in the last instance is larger than in the first instance, it is an amount no larger than it seems necessary for the purpose; and, when given, it is not an amount larger than has been appropriated to the route just below it, nor as large by $100,000 as has already been appropriated to the route next above it. I think, therefore, that the amount ought not to be an objection to it.

Then, sir, we are to look at this as serviceable in a double point of view. It has already been stated that there is to be run a mail line across from Albuquerque. The contract is made for running a mail line with coaches from Albuquerque into California. Now, this road will accomplish a double purpose; facilitate the transmission of the mail, and will also be serviceable in a military point of view. I do not wish to detain the Senate; I am not in the habit of doing so; but I would prefer, for one, that these two propositions should be kept together, because the two constitute but two links in a chain that makes the communication perfect. I readily believe that all that Senators have said about not being actuated by sectional feelings in this matter is so. I do not think they look at it in that light. I certainly am not influenced by any such feelings. I am certain that gentlemen who have spoken from the Military Committee were not, and I am equally certain that the gentlemen who acted on this matter in the Committee on Territories (though I am not a member of either of the committees) offered this amendment because they believed that the public interest required that it should be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I really do not see how anybody can be required to defend himself from the charge of sectional feeling. I do not intend to defend myself or the committee. If they cannot select a route which is to be used for military transportation, and which may be made useful on account of the mail contract, without defending themselves from the imputation of sectional feeling, I, for one, should be unwilling to report anything back to the Senate.

But there is one point I wish to correct in this matter. Senators speak of two links in a chain. To constitute a chain requires that the links should be united. Now we do not propose to make a road to Albuquerque. There I submit the Senator falls into an error. We merely propose to work upon the eastern section of a route designated as a route from Fort Smith to Albuquerque; and when I was up before I stated, not very plainly or impressively, that we would not undertake to work the western section of the road because of the very great expense incident to attempting any work so remote from the population of supply; an objection which increases when you reach that section of the road contained in the amendment. I stated very briefly in my remarks, addressed particularly to the observations of the Senator from Wisconsin, that another road remote from labor, remote from supply, is, some day or other, to be constructed, but not with such sums as we propose to give. Such sums as we propose to give for making bridges and crossing streams on the western section would be wholly exhausted by taking a laboring party to either of the other sections.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I shall say nothing in regard to the road from Albuquerque west. That will be for a vote, and each Senator can give his opinion best by giving his vote upon it. I am in favor of it, but I think it best that every proposition should stand upon its merits; and I do not think either the one—

Mr. DOUGLAS. They are now separated.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Then I say to the Senator from Wisconsin, in regard to this proposition, that I recognize the absolute necessity that there shall be some roads opened somewhere for the purpose of enabling our people who cannot go around by the isthmus and take sea transportation to the Pacific coast, to cross the continent. That they should be open to Oregon as well as to California no one would hesitate to admit. Whenever the estimates shall be brought in—and they are in a fairer way now than any other people on any other route to furnish just and fair estimates—I recognize the necessity of making the road to which he alludes, and I know very well that I shall support it. It is but just that that route should be made when its time comes. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment offered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I now renew the other proposition. It was to be offered immediately after the vote should be taken on the amendment which has been adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you wish to take a vote again?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was connected with this road; and that is the only reason why I offer it. My amendment is to insert, after line one hundred and ninety-two, the following:

And that the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in completing connecting sections in the road extending from Albuquerque in the Territory of New Mexico, westward, on the route of the Colorado river, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we ought to have the yeas and nays on this amendment. I do not believe there is a quorum present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Withdraw the call.

Mr. HUNTER. If you postpone this amendment until we get more Senators in the Chamber, we can take up some other amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I have got one here which involves no money.

Mr. HUNTER. Let this lie over until more Senators come in.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let it be voted on now. Several members have since come into the Chamber.

Mr. HUNTER. When the bill shall be reported to the Senate it will be too late, and therefore I want the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) Does the Senator withdraw the amendment?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not feel authorized to withdraw it. I was blamed for doing so before.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Douglas, Green, Gwin, Harlan, Hayne, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, King, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Thomson of New Jersey, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay, Olingman, Crittenden, Davis, Doolittle, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Reid, Slidell, Wilson, and Yulee—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. As I have one amendment which I shall offer that involves a great deal of money, I am gratified to be able to say that the one I now present requires no expenditure. It is to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the second section of the act of March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to found a military asylum for the relief and support of invalid and disabled soldiers of the Army of the United States," be so amended as to reduce the number of commissioners authorized by that section to three, and to consist of the Commissary General of Subsistence, the Surgeon General, and the Adjutant General, any two of whom shall be a quorum for the transaction of business, whose duty it shall be to examine and audit the accounts of the treasurer, quarterly, yearly, and visit and inspect the military asylum at least once in every month.

And be it further enacted, That the benefits of the said act shall be extended so as to include invalid and disabled soldiers of the war of 1812, and of all subsequent wars, subject only to the restrictions in the proviso of the fourth section of said act.

And be it further enacted, That all pensioners on account of wounds or disabilities incurred in the military service shall transfer and surrender their pension to the institution for, and during the time they remain therein, and voluntarily continue to receive its benefits.

And be it further enacted, That the deduction of twenty-five cents per month, from the pay of every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, and private in the Army, shall be reduced to twelve and a half cents per month, and these amendments shall take effect from and after the last day of July, 1858.

Mr. President, the object of the principal features of this amendment are: first to reduce the number of officers who constitute the board, and to prevent any charge upon the asylum fund of mileage by selecting three persons who will always be in Washington city, and then to require this board of three officers, the Commissary General, the Surgeon General, and the Adjutant General, to make frequent inspections both of the pecuniary accounts of the establishment, and of its condition, as stated in the amendment. The three officers are named, because their duties will require them almost uniformly in Washington city; and further, because the Surgeon General should know most of the condition of disabled soldiers; the Adjutant General keeping a record should know most of the history of the old soldiers, and the Commissary General was thought the proper person to look after the supplies, and judge of the proper treatment so far as the rations, &c., were concerned. Then the next provision is to include within the benefits of the institution all the soldiers of the war of 1812, as well as of all subsequent wars. The fund is so large, and has accumulated so rapidly, that I think there need be no fear entertained that it will be self-supporting, if we allow the disabled soldiers of the war of 1812, and of the subsequent wars, to come into the asylum. It asks no appropriation from the Treasury; it anticipates none.

The next step which is taken in connection with this is, that the amounts which are stopped from the soldiers instead of twenty-five cents per month, shall be twelve and a half cents per month. These stoppages, in connection with fines and forfeitures, last year amounted to over one hundred thousand dollars. I thought it a fit time, therefore, to reduce the amount of stoppage from the non-commissioned officers and enlisted men generally, for whose benefit the asylum is founded and maintained, believing that enough will still be received, and more than enough to cover all the expenses which would result from the increased usefulness we have from the enlargement of the sphere of its operations. Those who have pensions on any account, and who go into the asylum, surrender their pensions when they enter the asylum for the benefit of the asylum. The object as explained in the debate upon this bill, when the asylum act was first passed, was to prevent the accumulation of extraordinary pensions. Men who were so disabled as to require a servant, came and asked twenty and thirty dollars a month, instead of the small amount given by the laws of pensions generally. After founding the asylum it was argued that there would be no obligation to give an extraordinary pension to anybody, because by entering the asylum he would there find a comfortable home, and all his wants would be attended to at the expense of the institution. The institution being self-sustaining, it was thus thought to be a relief to the Treasury of the United States. Now we propose that when a pensioner goes in, claiming that he cannot live out of the asylum upon his pension, he shall surrender his pension to the asylum. There is another reason for this; that if you had two classes of inmates in this house, some receiving pensions and others only the gratuity allowed in the asylum fund, the inequality would produce discontent, and perhaps be the just foundation of complaint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment which involves a large expenditure—$1,280,000, I believe, though I have not got the figures added up. I will merely state, in advance, that the committee have selected, from all the works estimated for, those which they believed most essential for the present defense of the country. The amendment is to add:

For continuing the construction of the following works of defense:
 Fort Knox, at the narrows of the Penobscot river, Maine, $50,000.
 Fort Montgomery, outlet of Lake Champlain, New York, $50,000.
 Fort at Hog Island ledge, in Portland harbor, Maine, $50,000.
 Fort Richmond, Staten Island, New York harbor, New York, $100,000.
 Fort Wood, New York harbor, $20,000.
 Fort Delaware, Delaware river, Delaware, $100,000.
 Fort Carroll, Solier's Point flats, Baltimore harbor, Maryland, $100,000.
 Fort Calhoun, Hampton Roads, Virginia, $75,000.
 Fort Sumpter, Charleston harbor, South Carolina, $25,000.
 Fort Clinch, entrance to Cumberland Sound, Florida, $75,000.
 Fort Taylor, Key West, Florida, $100,000.
 Fort Jefferson, Garden Keys, Tortugas, Florida, $300,000.
 Fort Pickens, Pensacola, Florida, (construction and repairs,) $50,000.
 Fort Point, San Francisco, California, $150,000.
 Fort Gaines, Dauphin Island, entrance to Mobile bay, Alabama, $50,000.
 Fort Philip, Mississippi river, Louisiana, (extension and repairs,) $10,000.
 For contingent expenses of fortifications, preservation of sites, protection to titles, and repairs of sudden damage, $30,000.
 For construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber, in existing fortifications of important harbors, $50,000.

Mr. HUNTER. This is an object of expenditure to which I have always been favorable when there was money in the Treasury to apply to it. I believe one of the best objects to which the public money can be appropriated is the defense of the coast. I believe that it is economical to do so when we have plenty of money, because I think it diminishes the necessity of expenditure upon the standing army, and because I think experience shows it to be the cheapest mode of defending a country. But notwithstanding all that, in the present posture of affairs I concur in the action of the House, which has determined not to appropriate anything at this session for fortifications. They have so determined, because, in the present condition of the public Treasury, and with the large expenditures necessarily made, it will be impossible to supply these appropriations by any means now within our reach, unless we add to the loan which has been proposed to be made. I believe it is a matter of the first importance to the country to save the necessity for resorting to another loan and to keep down the expenditures, if possible, below the estimates. If our expenditures are to go beyond seventy-four or seventy-five million dollars, I do not see how we can avoid the necessity for another loan. With that comes up this old contest with regard to increasing the revenues from customs, increasing the tariff, and we become involved in questions which might be avoided by a little prudence and foresight. I believe that there are revenues enough, that there are sources of revenue large enough to meet all the just wants of the Government, if we could only persuade ourselves to economize for the present. For that reason I have heretofore voted on these appropriation bills against amendments which otherwise I might have favored. I have done so because I have thought it a matter of the first necessity to curtail our appropriations and expenditures even to the amount of a few millions; and I have felt, within view of all that, important as I deem these fortifications to be, that I was willing to postpone them for a year.

Against the measures indicated in the amendment, I have nothing to say. I believe there is no work mentioned in that amendment which ought not to be prosecuted and finished; and if the Treasury were full, I should be willing to vote, and would vote, to push them on much more rapidly than is there proposed; but in the present posture of affairs, I think it would be prudent to postpone these works until another year.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Virginia takes a position so nearly friendly to these works that I have very little to reply; but his conclusions I think altogether unsustained either by his argument or by the facts. To postpone the works under construction, is to allow them to go to decay, and you would have then to make repairs when you resumed the construction. It is not only to stop your progress in appropriations for defense, if the country should be assailed, but it is to increase the final amount of expenditure upon every work which is in course of construction.

Take Fort Calhoun, off Hampton Roads, a work quite necessary to protect the entrance into Hampton Roads, which was commenced many years ago, but from the imperfect nature of the foundation, it was necessary that the work should be discontinued. It was put under great pressure and allowed to settle, and after a number of years remaining under that pressure, when it ceased any further to sink, the work was resumed. It has progressed now to the point, if this appropriation be granted, that one full tier of guns and some others may be brought into operation; and then we believe that Hampton Roads, and the entrance into the rivers above, will be secure from an enemy's fleet. That is one case I mention; not that I believe the Senator will be influenced by it, but because he is more familiar with it, as it is on the borders of his own State.

Take Fort Carroll, which has been prosecuted in connection with the expenditure of the appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Patapsco river. It has reached the point when it is now just ready to receive the lower tier of guns, and we have commenced turning the embrasure arches. To stop at that point is certainly to allow the work to go to decay; but the expenditure of the appropriation for the improvement of the Patapsco has brought material means and knowledge to the improvement of that river which they had never applied under the old system; and the consequence has been an entrance to Baltimore of such depth that it is now assailable by vessels of a large class. The very improvement you have made to facilitate the commerce of Baltimore has increased its hazard; and Fort Carroll is necessary to protect the entrance.

I cite these two cases. If it were necessary, I could go through the whole list. There are but one or two cases not described generally in the language I have employed; and that is, a work prosecuted towards a particular object of defense, as, for instance, Fort Knox, on the narrows of the Penobscot river. The object in view there, was to protect vessels which would fly from an enemy's fleet for covering to the Penobscot river. The fort was, therefore, placed at the lowest point of the river which could be commanded by its guns, just at the head of the bay of Penobscot. They had constructed there works to assail an enemy's fleet ascending the bay in pursuit of merchantmen running into the river; and they have exhausted the means in their hands in the construction. It is made, I believe, adequate to the object; but nothing has been done for land defense; so that now a fleet, instead of being brought under the guns of this work, (Fort Knox,) would anchor below, land a small force, and, by a land attack upon the open side of the work, carry it; when the work would be silenced, and all the money you have expended would be lost.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not surprised to see the Senator from Virginia resisting the application for appropriations for all these works. I admire his vigilance and economy; and I have endeavored upon all suitable occasions to go with him on measures of economy. At this time, however, I differ with him radically. If I considered it economy to allow all our works of defense on the coast, from Maine to the Rio Grande, to be left exposed to destruction by the elements, I should of course unite with him; but I think it is important to put our fortifications in a proper condition of defense, so as to afford some security to the interior, and the country, in case of a war. It is true economy, in my opinion, to make this appropriation, and I think that is the conviction of a majority of the Senate; at any rate, I hope such will prove to be the case.

The Senator from Virginia says we are expending $70,000,000 a year. Well, sir, that is a very large amount of money, and I have upon all fit occasions voted for reducing it; but what have we done in that direction? Worse than nothing. We have provided for the support of the Army; we have provided for the support of the Navy, and almost every other interest throughout the country; and yet now, according to the course of action indicated by the Senator from Virginia, we are to leave these works in an unfinished condition until we have an overflowing Treasury, when, in the mean time, nearly all the money that has been spent upon them might as well have been thrown away. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have paid some attention to the subject, and I think every member of that committee was impressed with the propriety of making the appropriations in this bill, and throwing upon the House of Representatives the responsibility of providing for the protection of our coast. It would be very singular, if, when the Government is spending $70,000,000 a year, and providing for nearly every other interest in the country, we cannot spare a million and a quarter to keep up works that we are assured, from the proper sources, will receive more injury by leaving them in their present condition for a year or two, than the whole amount now proposed to be appropriated. Two years ago our great difficulty was that we had too much money in the Treasury. I predict that before many years pass away such will be the cry again; and how can money be more properly and judiciously appropriated than for the improvement of our fortifications, which are so essential both for the safety and honor of the country? Sir, when we have an overflowing Treasury, a large portion of the money, judging by the past, will be squandered on other and less meritorious objects than building fortifications; and I think our true policy is to provide for these works now, preserve them from destruction, make some progress with them, and not wait until we have an overflowing Treasury. Anticipate enough for this purpose at least. Is it prudent to leave them as they are, to go to destruction, and wait until the Government shall have ample means for every other purpose as well as for this? My honorable friend from Virginia, I trust, will not insist upon that. He has told us of the effect of the late revulsion upon the finances of the country, and he has asked us at this session to borrow or to incur a debt in the shape of loans and Treasury notes, to the amount of $35,000,000; and ought we not to use a small portion of this for so laudable an object? I think so. Few men understand the great destruction and injury resulting to these works from leaving them as they are. It will cost the Government nearly as much to inaugurate another system as perfect as the one now in operation as the money now asked for to start our works again. We have not asked for all that was recommended by the Secretary of War, but only for about two thirds of that amount. As economical as I have always professed to be—and certainly it will be admitted here that I have endeavored to practice economy in the expenditure of the public money—I will cast my vote for this proposition with great pleasure, and hope the amendment will receive the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I shall vote for the amendment submitted by the honorable Senator from Mississippi with great pleasure; while I am very free to say it is not such an amendment as I would like to vote for. I would like to have voted, and should have voted with a great deal more of cheerfulness, if the committee had deemed it wise and best to have included all the estimates from the Departments. They have omitted some works which I deem of high merit—works which I think, when the interests of the whole country are regarded, should have been included in this amendment. Still it is the amendment of the committee. I shall not seek to change it. I have looked at it, and I can regard it as little more than an amendment of pure economy; and I think we may justify our votes, and demand a favorable action upon it, upon the simple question of economy alone.

Now, sir, it is an amendment for continuing the works that are in process of erection. Your mechanics, each adapted to the specified kind of work that is necessary, are gathered from remote sections; your stone masons, your brick masons, and all the variety of engineering and mechanics that are required, are there on the spot. All the machinery that is necessary to carry on the works is there in a state of preparation for continuing the works. Stop those works, and you have not only the necessary decay which must follow from the stopping of the work, but you must again get together the variety of mechanics who are necessary to prosecute the work, and they must again learn the duties that those men have already learned who are there. As a strict matter of economy entirely, I say it is wise to adopt this amendment which appropriates, I am told—I have not footed it up—about one and a quarter million dollars. Look at the service of the country in all its departments, and the appropriations which you have made for them, and I ask if this is not a very limited appropriation for the military defenses of the country when measured by any other appropriations that have been made? It seems so to me; but, as a simple matter of economy, I shall cheerfully give it my vote.

Mr. HUNTER. I merely wish to say, in regard to this matter, (for these are objects of expenditure which I said before I generally favor,) I do believe it is true economy and good policy, when we have money in the Treasury, to appropriate for them, and it costs me something to vote against them now; but I believe, as I said before, that war which is most imminent, and in regard to which we stand most in danger, is that upon the Treasury. I believe it is a matter of the first importance to us, if we can, to keep down for the present the expenditures of the Government. I think we are in more danger from an increased taxation, and from a contest in regard to a high tariff, and revenue, and all those questions, than we are from anything else just now; and under that belief I have felt it to be my duty to vote against even some good appropriations, if I believed they could be postponed without serious detriment to the interests of the country. Now, sir, these works of stone and mortar are not apt to decay in a year or two. Some injury might accrue from this delay to appropriate; certainly we much delay the completion of the works; but still, under all the circumstances, I think it is perhaps of more importance to reduce these appropriations than it would be to continue even those works.

I know that my honorable friend from Alabama [Mr. FITZPATRICK] says that in the general he agrees with me, but he differs from me in regard to this appropriation. I find that is the case with all my friends, when I propose to cut down any object of appropriation in which they feel essentially interested. I think there is no attempt which I have made in which I have not met precisely such an objection from some of them. But, sir, it will be for the Senate to decide. I do not wish to multiply words. I have nothing more to say upon the subject.

Mr. WILSON. I agree with the Senator from Virginia that we ought, in every particular, to be as economical as we can, in the present condition of the Treasury; but I do not agree with him in the extreme anxiety he seems to feel in regard to what we may have to come to, and which I have no doubt we shall have to come to—a revision of the revenue laws of the country.

But, sir, the Secretary of War asked for nearly two million dollars for fortifications. In the House of Representatives the bill was lost. The question was taken up in the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and, in view of the present condition of the Treasury, the matter was most carefully examined and deliberated upon. There was a recommendation there for $75,000 for my own State, for the harbor of Boston. I did not ask and did not vote for that appropriation. I thought we could get along without it, and I wanted whatever we did do to take the most important and exposed points of the country, in the present condition of the Treasury. After much time spent in an examination of the different demands for fortifications asked by the Secretary of War, we settled down upon the sum of about one million one hundred thousand dollars. After the adjournment of our committee, we had the most pressing applications from those connected with the Army in the Department to add about two hundred thousand dollars in the improvement of exposed points, one of these being Fort Knox, in the State of Maine, another an appropriation of $20,000 for the harbor of New York. The committee, I believe, agreed unanimously to make those amendments, which makes the amount something less than one million three hundred thousand dollars, or nearly seven hundred thousand dollars less than was asked for by the War Department.

Now, sir, it may be that we have made a mistake. We have taken the estimates asked for wherever we have made any report at all. We have large appropriations here for the small State of Florida, but the points are very important as they stand, and we are told that it is of the greatest importance that these works shall be completed. The committee have reported this with the greatest reluctance in the present condition of the Treasury of the country. We leave the matter to the Senate to be determined. I shall vote for the amendment, but with a great deal of reluctance. I should have asked for the defense of the harbor of Boston, the second important city of the country, an appropriation of $75,000, if it had not been for the present condition of the Treasury; and I felt we could get along without it. I shall justify my vote to my State and to my constituents on that ground.

Mr. HAYNE. I shall support this amendment making appropriations for fortifications. I can very truly say, so far as the city of Charleston is concerned, that really we ask but a very small appropriation; and therefore I support the bill upon the most liberal consideration. I am prepared to say, although the appropriation for the completion of Fort Sumpter amounts to but $25,000, that if that appropriation is not made you will have to make an appropriation of $50,000 next year, and you will lose thereby one hundred per cent. I believe the same principle holds good in relation to the million and a quarter of dollars which the amendment proposes to appropriate. If it is not made now, you will have, next year, to appropriate two and a half million dollars to cover that which you can do this year with a million and a quarter.

Under these circumstances, I must vote for the amendment. There are sections of this country pretty well defended; but when I look towards the States of my friends from Florida and Louisiana, I find that really their possessions are very much exposed. I cannot, therefore, overlook it. Really, sir, I must smile at my honorable friend from Virginia, whose talents and truthfulness no man can more properly appreciate than I do; but I must say that I would rejoice with all my heart and soul if every man in this Union, every man in old England, every man and every nation with whom we hold intercourse, stood as the Treasury of the United States stands. How does it stand? Why, sir, ripe with prosperity. The whole country, compared with every other country on the face of the earth, is prosperous beyond all compare; and what is it for her to borrow a million and a quarter at a discount? I cannot reason upon that suggestion.

Mr. YULEE. The works referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, although within the jurisdiction of Florida, are not being constructed with reference to the defense of Florida, and are not necessary to the defense of Florida. They occupy the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, and in the absence of the possession of the Island of Cuba, are essential to enable the country to hold possession of the Gulf of Mexico, and to cover the trade and territory of all the rest. I understand that the appropriation proposed for Fort Taylor, which is located at Key West, will complete it, with three tiers of guns; and that the appropriations proposed for the fortifications on Tortugas Island will prepare it with one tier of guns in full, and put it in condition for a pretty effective use of another tier.

Now, sir, the chairman of the Committee on Finance thinks we may very well dispense with this appropriation, because he has not heard that stones and mortar will be damaged much in a year. That is a very different lesson from that which the Senator endeavored to teach me when he was pressing a much larger appropriation than $1,200,000 for carrying on and preserving the structures for custom-houses that are in progress. What was the amount of the appropriation recommended by the chairman of the Committee on Finance? One million seven hundred thousand dollars. I remember when I asked my friend, [Mr. HUNTER,] under whose lead I generally follow, whether stone and mortar would be injured by a year's delay, whether it was necessary to make that appropriation, he told me that stone, if left exposed to the air, would be very much damaged. I confess it was a new lesson to me, but having great confidence in him, I followed him, and voted with him, I believe, for $1,700,000 to carry on the construction of custom-houses, and to preserve them from decay.

Mr. HUNTER. If my friend from Florida will allow me, I stated in regard to the Charleston custom-house, that the blocks of carved marble would suffer from exposure and that it was necessary to put them in a position where they would be sheltered. I do not understand that we make forts of carved marble.

Mr. YULEE. My friend has "carved" a tolerable excuse; but I do not remember that I referred to carving at all. I never heard of carving stone, and certainly it would not have required $1,700,000 to protect carved stone at Charleston. Is all the stone carved?

Mr. HUNTER. I never said that we required that much to protect the stone. Those were various estimates. I stated that it was designed to pay for material contracted for, and some of this material was necessary to be put up, and there was a positive saving in putting it up; but the larger portion of it was to pay for material, and make small appropriations to complete buildings upon which large amounts have been expended.

Mr. YULEE. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs tells us very much the same thing; but I ask the Senate to contrast the objects of the two appropriations: the one for continuing buildings which may very well be dispensed with, for there are a thousand buildings at all the localities where those works are progressing which may be hired, and have been hired in all past time, for the use of the Government; and the other intended to protect and defend the country, to defend its commerce, to maintain possession of the sea into which empties the production of much the largest portion of this Union, and through which passes more than two thirds of all the commerce of the country. Sir, I think the appropriation which the Committee on Military Affairs ask, a small one, and I am prepared to vote for it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If I had any fear of a war with England—of which we hear some apprehensions expressed in the Senate—I should be exceedingly anxious that one fortification, at least, should receive an appropriation, to put it in a state of readiness against any such apprehended war; and that is the fortification of Fort Mackinaw, which commands Lake Michigan—a sea upon which floats more commerce than upon any other sea of its size connected with our country, or any portion of our country—upon the banks of which are exposed the cities of Chicago, Waukegan, Kenosha, Racine, Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Manitowac; cities ranging from five thousand to one hundred thousand inhabitants, perfectly exposed to the open sea, without the slightest protection in the world. Yet, Mr. President, I have so little apprehension of any war to arise with Great Britain—the only Power which we have any reason to fear, in any controversy—that I shall, under the circumstances in which we are placed, and the condition of the Treasury, feel constrained to vote altogether against this amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs. I shall vote for that reason; and deem it due, in explaining my vote, to state this much—that I have not the slightest apprehension of any war with Great Britain. If I had, I would be in favor of very large appropriations—much larger than are proposed by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Allow me to ask my friend a question before he gets through; that is, if he supposes, in case we should have a war with Great Britain, we would have time enough to build fortifications before the season of hostilities, or whether we should build fortifications in time of peace?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think before we get into a war with Great Britain we shall have ample time and ample notice.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Or in any war? That is a new idea of defending the country.

Mr. RICE. I wish to say but a word on this question. I see that no appropriations have been recommended by any committee for the fortifications in the great Northwest. I suppose that our time has not yet arrived. I have listened to a great deal that has been said in regard to the Treasury, and I merely wish to say that I do not care whether it is full or empty, that the condition of that institution will not govern my vote upon a single question, excepting for raising revenue. It appears to me this appropriation has come through the proper channel, is properly recommended, and must be necessary, and for that reason I shall vote for it.

Mr. SEWARD. I am quite surprised and grieved almost to hear my honorable friend from Wisconsin allude, under any circumstances, to the failure of the committee to provide fortifications for the western part of our northern frontier. The honorable Senator thinks he may excuse them and excuse himself, for voting for dispensing with any fortifications there, upon the ground that he does not apprehend an immediate war with Great Britain. But there is a further consideration which he may call into his mind, and I know he will agree with me when I mention it, and that is, if there should be a war with Great Britain tomorrow, that it would be Great Britain who would find it necessary to build fortifications in Upper Canada, and not Michigan, or Wisconsin, or Ohio, or New York, that would need to have any fortifications upon their shores. An enemy from Europe will first have to pass Quebec, and I think that if we are prepared with this fortification well constructed, at the outlet of Lake Champlain, if he should possess Quebec, he will never disturb the people of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I have only one word to say more in relation to this subject. That I say rather because it is a subject which interests the State which I represent, so deeply. I do not regard this as a measure of public defense. I apprehend no war. This, like every other question, involves one of economy in regard to the permanent and constant regular administration of the country, to engage, I think wisely, in preparing fortifications which are useful in case of war with any foreign Power. We are induced to do this. We must either vote small sums, if appropriations are to continue to preserve these incipient works, or we must abandon them to ruin and dilapidation altogether. The same consideration, as regards the improvement of rivers and harbors, made me vote for those appropriations, notwithstanding any representation made in regard to the condition of the Treasury; and the exigency of the public service justifies the vote I shall give for continuing the appropriations for these works.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed it was not necessary, and, therefore, sat down without doing what I will now perform—stating the general principle on which the various points are connected. Only those points which commanded commercial cities; those points which commanded harbors, which would be the refuge of commerce in time of war, and where the fortification had progressed, but had not been completed, were selected by the committee. Fort Wood, which was estimated for repairs, I found, upon investigation, was for the extension of the battery. It was for an external battery, a water battery, which would render Fort Wood effective, if a fleet should pass through the Narrows and come into the North river side of the city of New York. Then we would rely upon those guns of Fort Wood to render that water untenable by an enemy's fleet.

So at Portland, Maine. The two old forts, Preble and Scammel, command the ordinary entrance into Portland harbor. There is another entrance called the North Channel, which is not sufficiently commanded by those works. The work upon Hog Island Ledge was, therefore, commenced with a view to give adequate protection to the North Island channel to Portland harbor, and that is selected as one of the objects of appropriation, because we believed it to be a harbor that would probably be sought by an enemy's fleet, if we should get at war with a maritime Power. In the first place it had a channel into which vessels of almost any draught could enter, it was almost entirely land-locked, and then it is in the great Atlantic and St. Lawrence railway connection with the British Provinces, which would cause it to be the port most naturally selected. It was deemed, therefore, essential to cover the entrance into that harbor.

Then at Fort Point we have failed to get a site on the opposite side of the bay, called the Golden Gate entrance into the harbor at San Francisco. This work consequently had to be pressed to its greatest strength. It was found that the work at Fort Point had not sufficient range to sea, and that it was necessary, instead of three tiers, as originally designed, to make it a four-tier work. The appropriation asked for is to complete it to a four-tier work.

At Fort Gaines, which commands the entrance into Mobile harbor, the work had been commenced; and I will say to the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that I think the injury would be very great to all these fortifications if work upon them is stopped. He is certainly aware that the covering of an embrasure, whatever material we may use, is subject to decay if exposed to moisture. It is never intended to resist exposure to the elements. It is always expected that it is to be covered by a roof, the arch is turned over the embrasure, the roof is the platform of the next tier of guns, and so it goes on until you get to the upper tier of guns, which is set en barbette, and then such a covering as to prevent water passing through. To stop it midway in construction is to expose it to circumstances which the engineer did not apprehend, and which must result in its ultimate destruction.

Then, again, the questions are very different between these fortifications and custom-houses. When a custom-house falls down, it is a matter of very little importance; and if you never rebuild it, is not important. A fortification, however, the country has a right to require of Congress shall be pressed to completion, at least to such completion as will make it effective for defense, at the earliest possible moment. The Tortugas, a work selected by General Jackson, when he commanded in Florida, as the military work most necessary of all for the command of the Gulf of Mexico, has lingered along through a long term of years. Now we have one tier of guns, and have turned the arches and commenced preparation for the second tier. The money we ask will give us the second tier; and with two tiers of guns in Fort Jefferson, and with Key West brought up to its complete armament with three tiers of guns, we believe we have that defense for the Gulf of Mexico which is required of those positions.

At Fort Pickens, (and I am glad I did not forget it,) we thought an appropriation was merely required for repairs. It was deemed necessary to command the entrance of Pensacola, and as it has been made a naval harbor that the armament should be increased in caliber. An increase of the armament in caliber, required new platforms. An appropriation was made, and they proceeded to change the platforms when they discovered the covering of the embrasures so imperfect that unless they got additional appropriations, if they laid down the platform, they would have hereafter to tear up the platform so as to mend the covering of the embrasures beneath, and therefore it was deemed advantageous to ask an appropriation now.

We did not deem it necessary to ask for an appropriation for Fort Niagara or Fort Mackinaw, nor Fort Brady. Fort Mackinaw, alluded to by the Senator from Wisconsin, commands the entrance of Lake Michigan, and is important in that connection. But at those points we should want nothing but water batteries, which could be thrown up hastily if guns were at hand against any fleet we could expect to be upon Lake Michigan, and then would follow the policy that the Senator from New York—not the Senator who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. King,] and who is somewhat more combative than his colleague who has addressed us—suggested, in relation to the Canadian works on the frontier, when he said they were but starting points, and that we should go into Canada, and that the British would not come into our country. I think it very true that we should probably be the invaders instead of the invaded party; but yet I would say Mackinaw ought to have the defense suggested. Niagara ought to have the strength proposed, as points from which to go out; but both these and Fort Brady, and other works of a smaller character, can be done in such short time that it is not necessary to make the remote preparation required in the great works along the sea-shore. All the interior defense which may be required on the northwestern frontier is of that temporary character which can be made by the troops who hold it. The garrison themselves can throw up the only intrenchment required in such positions. I think this is true of all our inland defenses, that we may expect our race to be the aggressive and not the defensive race; but if they should be the defensive race, the garrisons that hold the points will throw up all the fortifications they require. Not so along the sea-coast, and that is the basis of the great distinction which the committee made; first as to the locality, and secondly, as I heretofore explained, as to works selected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRILL.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to offer, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act of March 3, 1817, entitled "An act making provision for an additional number of general officers, and for other purposes," which deprives cutlers in the Army of their right to a lien upon any part of the pay of the soldiers, or to appear at the pay table to receive the soldiers' pay from the paymaster, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have another amendment to offer, to insert as a new section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized to sell, at the actual cost thereof, to the Post Office Department, such a number of fire-arms of the most modern and efficient pattern as may be necessary for the protection of the mail stages and emigrant wagons on the route from St. Louis and Memphis, to San Francisco.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand this amendment. Is it to sell the Post Office Department arms?

Mr. DAVIS. I will state it in a moment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask to have that amendment reported again. I did not hear it distinctly. The Secretary read it.

Mr. DAVIS. I will state, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Virginia, that the Postmaster General addressed the Secretary of War, presenting to him the necessity of having protection along this route. He asked for men, but in addition to other things he asked for arms to be given to the persons carrying the mail in stages, so that the drivers, employes, and passengers might all be armed for the self-defense which they will possibly require on the route. The committee thought proper to allow the Postmaster General to have arms, not to bring the Secretary of War into contact with the contractors, who are the officers of the Post Office Department, and in allowing the Postmaster General to have arms, put him upon the same footing as the Secretary of the Navy, who comes to the Secretary of War for arms, is furnished with arms for the marines and for the Navy generally, and charged with the capital cost, which amount goes to the appropriation for the manufacture of arms, and is paid out of the appropriation for the Navy. In this case it must come either out of the appropriation for the expense of the Post Office Department or be charged to the contractors as the Postmaster General may please.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that when we contract with these men to carry the mail, they take the risk themselves. I do not see that we are bound to furnish them and the passengers with arms. What is to be the limit of them? Who are to take care of them? Who are responsible for the arms after they are furnished? Are the contractors responsible? Are the Post Office Department responsible? Are we to have a mixed responsibility?

Mr. GWIN. The contractors protect the routes, and this is a proposition to enable them to protect themselves without supporting an army along the route.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not think we have any contract to protect the route.

Mr. DAVIS. I had better send the letter of the Postmaster General to the Chair, and have it read.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask, what will be the cost of all these arms?

Mr. DAVIS. It is merely to furnish arms.

Mr. SEWARD. What will be the cost?

Mr. DAVIS. I have not the least idea. The contractors will want, I suppose, about ten or fifteen for each stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the letter read?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; I wish the letter to be read to explain the matter. Just as the Senate please, however. If the Senate do not want the information, of course it need not be read.

Mr. MASON. Let it be read.

Mr. STUART. I want it read.

The Secretary read the following letter:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, May 31, 1858.

Sir: The fact that the overland mail service from the Mississippi river to San Francisco will soon be commenced, I have already verbally communicated to you, in connection with a request that thorough military protection should be afforded to it from the outset.

In view of recent Indian disturbances in portions of Texas and New Mexico, the need of protection has become even more urgent than heretofore, and seems to call upon me to lay before you reasons for acceding those means of safety which I have felt it to be my duty to request.

Congress, in establishing the overland mail for the conveyance of letters in four-horse coaches, and the President, in directing the service to be commenced, evidently looked chiefly to the great line of settlements which a first-class coach service would greatly help to call into existence. If these stage coaches and stage stations are not thoroughly protected, but are left exposed to the ravages and plunderings of the thieving Indians who roam over the plains which the stages will traverse, the end had in view will prove wholly unattainable. Emigration and settlements will follow the trail of the overland mail only in the event that settlers and travelers have faith in the ability of the Government to insure their perfect safety. The contractors have been uniformly assured of the disposition of the Executive to protect the line of travel upon which they have been ordered, and their publication of this fact has had the pleasing effect of raising numerous families to prepare to settle in many of the fertile valleys on the route. They express to me no doubt of their being able to build up, at an early day, numerous and important settlements which will be of great value to themselves and the Government. If these hopes are realized, abundant and cheap supplies will be obtainable wherever wanted by the contractors of the Post Office Department, by the Army, by the Indian bureau, and by travelers to and from California. Military protection being afforded, and the people made to believe that the Indians would find it impossible to invade the line without provoking prompt and adequate punishment, I see no cause to prevent not only the making of numerous settlements along the whole line, from St. Louis and Memphis to San Francisco, but also the traveling of families, in any kind of vehicles commonly used at any season of the year. The poorest man would then be able to convey his family to California in a cheap wagon, subsisting his horses upon the grass growing at the side of his road, instead of being compelled to remain at the East from inability to defray the cost of emigrating by sea. It would make California accessible to poor men who have large families.

As an efficient auxiliary to the ordinary system of defending a long line of communication, I respectfully request that all stages traversing the Indian country, in the employ of this Department, be armed by the War Department, with the most modern and efficient fire-arms; the contractors, in some proper way, to be made responsible for the prompt return of the arms (or their money equivalent) upon the demand of the War Department. With military posts, judiciously located within reasonable distance, numerous emigrants traveling the same road, and growing settlements planted along the line, armed stages would not be likely to be attacked, even by Camanches or Apaches.

Confident of your hearty cooperation in the effort making to connect the settlements in the Mississippi valley with those of California, and to thus aid in strengthening the bonds of our Union while performing an executive duty, I am yours, very truly,

AARON V. BROWN.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Before the Secretary had concluded the reading of the letter,

Mr. HUNTER said: I understand that this is a proposition to sell arms. I have no objection to that. I thought it was to give them away. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. Let the reading of the letter be finished.

The Secretary continued the reading.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move to dispense with the further reading of the letter.

Mr. STUART. I want to hear it. It is stated they entered into contract to carry the mail, and we contracted that we should protect the carriers. I want to know what the Postmaster General says.

The Secretary concluded the reading of the letter.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not see but what this amendment is as I first stated. We are to buy them, and I suppose give them away. We sell from one Department to the other for the use of these emigrants, so that my objection remains.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it is far better that the employes of the Post Office Department should look to the head of that Department for whatever supplies they require, and that the two Departments should exchange amounts: the one wanting arms, another having arms gives them up to the one wanting arms on receiving an amount which enables them to replace the arms surrendered. Such is the arrangement which constantly exists between the War and Navy Departments, and I see no reason why it should not exist in this case. As to what the Postmaster General will do with them, that is a matter which Congress can control. If you give him no money which will enable him to give away the arms, he will necessarily sell the arms to the persons to whom he surrenders them. He will have power of course to sell them. If he gets possession of them for a purpose, he cannot give them away.

Mr. MASON. It seems to me the impressions of my colleague are entirely correct; that this is a proposition for the Government to furnish arms gratuitously to the contractors who carry the mails.

Mr. DAVIS. Where is that proposition to be found in the amendment?

Mr. MASON. The proposition now before us does substantially say that.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read, to see whether the Senator will find that in it.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. MASON. Certainly, unless I entirely misunderstand what must be the effect of the amendment, it is, in effect, a proposition for the Government to supply to those contractors the means of protecting the mails. It is that the Secretary of War shall sell to the Postmaster General, arms for the protection of the mails. Now, where is the mail? It is in the hands of the contractor, who has entered into a contract without reference to arms or protection, to carry it from one point to another. There is no stipulation that the Government is to protect the mail in transitu. The contractor is to do that; and if the provision be carried into effect, and the Secretary of War sells these arms to the Postmaster General, and is paid for them, it will be but a transfer from one Department to another, and the arms will then be in the possession of the Postmaster General, to be used by these contractors. Whether the contractors will account for them, or purchase them, is not provided for there.

Mr. DAVIS. No; it does not intend to provide for that there.

Mr. MASON. It will be intrusted to the Department for regulation, and the Department will understand, as I should understand, if they are authorized to furnish the contractors with these arms, that they are just as much authorized to furnish wagons, horses, or anything else to carry the mails. It seems to me that will be the result.

Mr. BELL. I only wish to say one word. There is something more important to be noticed, I think, in that communication from the Postmaster General than the mere question of the cost, or whether we ought to supply these arms. I understand, by that letter of the Postmaster General, that he encourages the contractors, in giving out the contracts, to believe that the Government of the United States would extend military protection to them. Now, sir, what may be the effect of having such a supply of arms? I do not know; but I remember very well when these mail routes were established, and these large sums of money were appropriated for their support, that I, if nobody else did, predicted that we were about to expend a large amount of money supposing we should get regular communications overland between the Atlantic States and our possessions on the Pacific coast, which could not be realized. I said it was impossible from the nature of the country, and the liability of the contractors to be interrupted continually, or frequently, at all events, by hostile and marauding tribes of Indians; and that the consequence would be that they would come here, if they should find their contract not likely to be a very profitable one, or that they could make more by not carrying the mail, and by pretending that they could not carry it on account of Indian hostilities, and in that way the Government would be defrauded.

Now, sir, vote these supplies proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, and we shall be giving a sanction to the claims of these contractors to be allowed indemnity not only for all actual losses, but that all the fines imposed upon them for failure to carry the mails should be remitted. My attention has been drawn to this subject by the fact that there is a claim before the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member, which has been there for the last three years, I think of one of the contractors to carry the mail between Salt Lake City and San Francisco or San Diego, upon the Pacific coast. He only carried the mails for a short portion of the time, and they claim, I think—my friend from Arkansas [Mr. SEBASTIAN] will correct me if I am wrong—indemnity for one hundred and eighty-six mules of which they were robbed. The amount was either eighty-six or a hundred and eighty-six, but I do not remember the exact number now. It was a most enormous claim.

Mr. HOUSTON. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BELL. Was it so much? Upon what ground was it made? They claimed, under the extension of the Indian regulation laws, that it was territory belonging to the United States through which they undertook to carry the mails, and could they be expected to carry the mail and fulfill their contract when this Government afforded them no protection? Not only that, but they claimed they ought to have indemnity for losses for carrying the mail through a country assailed by a public enemy.

Sir, these are serious considerations. The moment I heard the letter read I foresaw what would be the consequences, and I remembered perfectly that I predicted these consequences when we were granting these routes. He tells us there was no ground of complaint; that he gave every assurance that these contractors would be protected; and that the Government had every disposition to protect them as far as it had power. We have got the power if we choose to carry it out: These mail contractors need not carry more than half a dozen mails during the next year, and can come here upon plausible grounds and claim the remission of any fines, inasmuch as they have purchased a large amount of stock, of carriages, horses, mules, or whatever they propose to carry the mails with, and are entitled to the cost of keeping them and the losses incurred by them, unless we afford them the protection we encouraged them to believe they would have.

Mr. COLLAMER. Mr. President—

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will permit me, I will suggest that there is a letter from the Secretary of War, which is very brief, that covers the letter just read from the Postmaster General.

Mr. COLLAMER. In answer?

Mr. DAVIS. It covers the letter read.

Mr. COLLAMER. I suppose it is, probably, in answer to it.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, June 7, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to inclose a copy of a communication addressed to me by the Postmaster General in regard to arming the mail carriers who pass through the Indian territory.

Approving of the suggestion therein contained, but having no authority to adopt it, I respectfully, in this mode, submit it for the consideration of your committee.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

HON. JEFF. DAVIS, Chairman Committee Military Affairs, Senate.

Mr. COLLAMER. We have a communication read to us from the Postmaster General to the Secretary of War. The wishes of that Postmaster General to that Secretary of War, pretty distinctly expressed, give that Secretary to understand that a certain mail service which he is about to set up under a special law across the continent, requires for its protection military posts established at reasonable distances, and permanent garrisons at those posts—a military force to sustain the route, and encourage the route from post to post, and if I understand his letter aright, he gives us to understand that that is what was expected by the men who took the contract.

The great body of the communication relates to this point, an important one, and he says it should be extended sufficient, not only to guard the mail and the persons who accompany that mail, and the passengers, but to guard the route in such a manner that it should be safe for emigrants, secure to their teams and to their droves, and open the communication between us and California in such a manner as to render it safe and convenient. That is the great purpose of that letter. Now, what is the proposition under that letter? There is another small portion of it, a single sentence, in which the Postmaster General requests the Secretary of War, or suggests to him that he shall furnish proper and suitable arms, of improved patterns, to those who go with the mails, under some proper securities of those mail carriers, and to be accountable to his Department for them.

Now, what is proposed to us as an answer to this requisition of that Department? Is it to detach some men to establish posts? Not at all. Is it to furnish any soldiers, or any officers, or any garrisons, or any guard? Not at all. Is it to send any escort with the mail? Not at all. Is it a response to any of the material requisitions there? Nothing of the kind. Well, what is it? Is it that you may buy some arms of this other Department, if you can, and I understand the honorable Senator, who is chairman of the Committee on Finance, upon the whole, as it is to sell them, has no sort of objection to it. If he has no objection to it, he will see to it that the Post Office Department has an appropriation of money to make the payment.

Mr. HUNTER. That was based upon a statement of the Senator from Mississippi, but on looking at the amendment I find it is nothing but a sale from one Department to another, but which will give arms to every man, as I understand it. That will be the effect.

Mr. COLLAMER. What difference does it make with us if we make an appropriation out of the Treasury to enable the Postmaster General to buy of the Secretary of War some arms which he can never take care of? He has no military power. Now, it is said he is to give them to his employes. Mr. President, are the contractors the employes of the Department? By that term I understand somebody under the control of the Department; contractors for carrying the mail are under no control of the Department. They fulfill their contract—that is all. They are not subject to any order in the world, except it be that the schedule of times may be changed agreeably to the terms of the contract. There is nothing in any other respect. They are not under his direction nor control, nor can he get any control over them, or have any care of arms given to them. In short, it looks like saying, if your son asks bread of you, give him a stone. He has asked you for protection in the construction of a great and material work across the continent; for an armed force to sustain it, and to protect it against the Indians and against the enemies of our own country, or those who may be in rebellion; and what do you offer? Any soldiers? Not at all. Any military supply and protection? None whatever. Do you even furnish arms to these contractors, and take securities in the proper Department to which the arms belong for their return and proper use? Not at all. You do not even do that; but say, in lieu of all these things, "we will sell you some arms, and you must take care of them, provided you have not got any means to buy them." There must be an appropriation in the bill for that purpose. I think this is catching the immaterial, unimportant part of that letter, and not responding according to the terms of it at all. I do not undertake to say whether we are under obligation to furnish protection to that mail route or not; but I say, this amendment now offered to us is a very miserable attempt to do it, if we are under any obligation to do it.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator has made up his own case, and therefore reached his own conclusions. I am not aware of any obligation on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs to receive the application of the Postmaster General, and favorably to entertain it. I am not aware of any principle of action which would justify this Government in making a contract, for an immense sum of money, to perform a particular service, and then sending its own troops to guard the men who did it. Why, sir, you might as well give a sergeant the mail bags, and send him along with them.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I stated, in my remarks, that I did not know whether we were under any obligation at all to do it. This was not doing anything of the kind.

Mr. DAVIS. Then the Senator says he asked for bread, and received a stone. That had no meaning, unless he asked something he had a right to expect and been refused.

Mr. COLLAMER. He knows what he has asked for.

Mr. DAVIS. And I know very well that there is no purpose to grant what he asked; that under no pretense his request was to be granted. So far from it, a distinct proposition, instead of what he asked for, to put in his power the furnishing of arms to these people, if arms they wanted, and not to tax the Government either with the expense of it; because if they go merely to get the Government arms, and might throw them away when they had them in their possession, we had better compel them to go into the private market and buy them. If they want Government arms because they are best to answer the purpose of defense, then I say sell them to them at the prime cost.

The Senator says the contractors are not employes. What of that? The contractors have a relation to the Postmaster General; they have none to the Secretary of War. The Postmaster General reaches the appropriation which pays the contractors for the service they perform, and can reach them if they destroy public property in their hands which has been placed there on an obligation on their part to return it. The Secretary of War has no such control over them, no such access to them, no relation to them.

Why, then, should the Secretary of War be called upon to furnish arms to these men? The proposition as it stands is to establish military posts, and to send guards along. Why, sir, if the Government are going to do that, let the Government carry the mail and throw the contractor out. Let them keep the money instead of paying it to the contractor, if the Government is to perform the service. If there is anybody here who holds that the committee should have reported in accordance with the application of the Postmaster General, I know not how he can maintain his position, unless he also contends that the contractors should be excluded entirely from connection with the Post Office Department, and the military arm of service called upon to carry the mail for the Postmaster General.

Mr. GWIN. It was well known, when these contracts were entered into, especially the first one, that the Army of the United States would be stationed along this route.

Mr. DAVIS. Never.

Mr. GWIN. It was expected.

Mr. DAVIS. It was an absurd expectation, if they supposed the Army was ever to be dotted along the mail route.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that along that route is where the Indians are most troublesome. It is in that section of the country that the Army ought to be, whether there was any mail route at all or not; but the Army has been drawn off to other service. The Utah war has consolidated the Army at one point, instead of being extended over the territory through which these mail routes would pass. It is, therefore, because the Army of the United States is not large enough, with the present concentration of our forces upon Utah, to give that protection in countries where the Indians are hostile and commit depredations—the Camanches, Apaches, Navajos, and those Indians where our Army is required to keep them in subjection—that this measure is made necessary. It is because the Army has been necessarily withdrawn, owing to the disturbances in Utah, that it is proposed, in the absence of the protection which it was expected would be given at the time through this country, where hostile Indians were in the habit of committing depredations, to resort to temporary expedients by which the safety of the mail may be secured. I take that to be the proposition. I never heard of it until it was offered here.

Mr. DAVIS. I would ask the Senator from California to state to the Senate what posts have been abandoned on account of the expedition to Utah on this mail route?

Mr. GWIN. No posts have been abandoned; but the troops have been drawn off. For instance: from Fort Buchanan troops were drawn off; and other posts, I am told, are in the same position. I have not made inquiry on the subject. There has been a concentration of troops that would otherwise have been stationed along that section.

Mr. DAVIS. Where is Fort Buchanan?

Mr. GWIN. In Arizona Territory.

Mr. DAVIS. This mail road does not go there.

Mr. GWIN. It goes right through it. The object is to give these arms, as we all know. When I went to California in 1849, I drew arms and paid for them. I looked upon those in the possession of the Secretary of War as the best arm we could get. I consider it certain that no injury can result from this proposition, but great benefit.

Mr. YULEE. The Government does not furnish these arms. The Government is the purchaser of them.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer the Senator so that he will see the whole subject. I do not know what kind of arms these people will apply for. They may apply, for instance, for Colt's revolving pistols; and it is a very probable thing they will apply for other arms which the War Department is compelled to purchase for its own use, and which it could not afford to give away.

Mr. YULEE. That is what I presume this proposition anticipates—a supply by the Government of arms of the latest improvement. The Government is the purchaser. Why may they not be purchased directly from the parties from whom the Government purchases? Let them go to Sharpe, Colt, or whatever maker they please, and purchase the arms.

Mr. GWIN. The reason is simply because they would sell higher to them than they would to the Government.

Mr. STUART. I recollect, when this service was provided for, I was among those who thought it was not very valuable, but that is not so important now. The tenth section of the act which made the appropriation is in these words:

"And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for the conveyance of the entire letter mail from such point on the Mississippi river as the contractors may select, to San Francisco, in the State of California, for six years, at a cost not exceeding $300,000 per annum for semi-monthly, $450,000 for weekly, or $600,000 for semi-weekly service, to be performed semi-monthly, weekly, or semi-weekly, at the option of the Postmaster General."

The eleventh section has an important bearing on the proposition contained in the letter of the Postmaster General:

"And be it further enacted, That the contract shall require the service to be performed with good four-horse coaches or spring wagons, suitable for the conveyance of passengers, as well as the safety and security of the mails."

The twelfth section is in these words:

"And be it further enacted, That the contractors shall have the right of preemption to three hundred and twenty acres of any land not then disposed of or reserved, at each point necessary for a station, not to be nearer than ten miles from each other; and provided, that no mineral lands shall be thus preempted."

Now, Mr. President, there was an appropriation for making a contract, at an enormous expense, to carry all the letter mail from the Mississippi river to San Francisco; and the eleventh section was inserted in that act to compel the contractors to furnish such defense as should make that letter mail safe. That is the important mail. The newspaper mail is not of any consequence, in a pecuniary point of view.

In addition to this, there is the authority to take three hundred and twenty acres of land, by preemption, at points over the entire route, not nearer than ten miles apart. It is an immense pay for a service which, as I said, I thought at the time not very valuable. I think so yet. But the law having so provided this immense pay for a service that shall be rendered secure by the contractors themselves, what does the Postmaster General tell us? He says that he has assured these contractors in all cases that the United States would protect their mails throughout the entire route by stationing the Army from point to point, and he calls upon the Secretary of War to do it. What are we to expect from all this? That these mails will be attacked is inevitable from the very nature of the country, and the nature of the Indian population; and the contractors will come down upon the Congress of the United States for damages, on the assurance of the Postmaster General.

Now, what is the duty of Congress to-day? Unquestionably, in my judgment, to repudiate it. If we adopt this proposition, or any similar proposition, which looks to carrying out the assurance of the Postmaster General, Congress is committed; and it will be said, "You did not furnish the protection that the Postmaster General assured us would be given—troops throughout the land to protect us; but you simply sold us arms to be carried by our passengers, and by our drivers, which was no protection at all." I therefore say, that this is a contract which should compel the contractors to take such measures as would protect the mails themselves; and that the duty of Congress to-day, if they do not mean to implicate this Government to the amount of millions of dollars, is to stand by that law, and refuse any protection whatever. This seems to me to be the only safety to the Government.

Mr. GWIN. I have no doubt the Senator from Michigan will do everything he can to destroy this law, in order to make the prediction good that he made when it was under consideration in Congress before. He tried to destroy it then, and to prevent its passage. The very clause that he reads, about keeping the mails secure, is in all other laws for carrying the mails; and that is, to protect them against the weather. Was it supposed, when that law passed, they were to load the stages with guns instead of letters? It was not expected at the time, because those countries were being settled up rapidly, and the Army was stationed on the route through which it passed, and it was thought that it would be protected. The section the Senator has read, with reference to protecting the mail, is in all other laws for carrying the mail. It was intended, at the time, for no other protection of the mails whatever than that I have mentioned.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It strikes me that this is a very ingenious device to save the transportation of arms from here to California, where they are very much needed for defense. I understand these arms are to be sold to the Post Office Department, and, when a stage-load of passengers start, we are to give each of them a weapon which he retains until he gets there. Another coach-load starts, and we give them weapons. In this way we can send all the arms we want to California, and leave them there and save the cost of transportation. It strikes me it is a very ingenious piece of economy, and I am inclined to give it my support on that ground.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to add at the end of it the following:

Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the Postmaster

General to permit the use of said arms, or authorize their transfer, without receiving the cost price thereof.

Mr. STUART. I do not intend to continue this discussion; and I am very sorry that the Senator from California (in consonance to what seems to be a really unfortunate habit of the Senator of thinking that everybody who opposes a measure that he is in favor of, has got something personal in it) should have said he was very confident that I desired to defeat this bill in order that my predictions might turn out to be true. Why, sir, I have no such reputation in the way of prophecy to maintain—not at all. I do not think that it is necessary. I think the country pretty generally understood that that route was not a very valuable affair; but that is not the purpose. I am willing to see it succeed; and so far from having any objection to its success, I would like to see it succeed. I would rather be shown to be wrong than proven right in regard to the original proposition.

But I see nothing in this law which authorizes the Postmaster General to make any such assurance to contractors. He has furnished a copy of a letter sent to the Secretary of War, which says he has given those assurances. They are not in the contract; but they are his personal official assurances, given simultaneous with the making of the contract, and they present an equity in the case of a loss. Therefore, it was that I stated my opinion that it was the high duty of Congress to-day not to make any movement that looked to authorizing those assurances. We never intended it in the law. I take it we do not intend it to-day. I deemed it important, and the very reason why I desired that letter read at length, was to see whether there was anything embodied in the contract itself binding the Government to favor this construction. I think there is not, but that it rests upon the official and personal assurance of the Postmaster General himself. I think he was wrong; that he had no authority to give it. I think the Congress of the United States should in no wise sanction it, and therefore it is, and for that reason only, that I am against this proposition.

Mr. GREEN. I should like to hear the original amendment read, as it will be if the proposed amendment is annexed to it.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, at the actual cost thereof, to the Post Office Department, such a number of firearms, of the most modern and efficient pattern, as may be necessary for the protection of mail stages and emigrant wagons on the route from St. Louis and Memphis to San Francisco: Provided, That it shall not be lawful for the Postmaster General to permit the use of said arms, or authorize their transfer, without receiving the cost price thereof.

Mr. GREEN. The amendment to the amendment nullifies the first proposition completely, and hence it is much better to vote down the first proposition, when nullified, by putting on another amendment which makes it perfectly nugatory. It says he shall not permit the use or disposal of the arms without receiving full price.

Mr. CLAY. I have some reasons for the vote which I mean to give, and I should like to give them, but we have now been in session eight hours, wanting six minutes, and I rise for the purpose of moving an adjournment. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. With five other appropriation bills to follow this one, I do not think we can get through this week if we discuss each one as long as this has been discussed.

Mr. HAYNE. I second the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. If we could get through soon I would withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) Does the Senator insist on his motion?

Mr. CLAY. I will not insist for the present; but I would suggest that I have been without my dinner, and I am very impatient to get it.

Mr. ALLEN. I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall not adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. I withdraw the motion if we can get a vote.

Mr. ALLEN. I insist on it, and I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bigler, Broderick, Clay,

Clingman, Davis, Green, Hayne, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, King, Pearce, Reid, Sebastian, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, Wright, and Yulee—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doollittle, Fessenden, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Hunter, Mallory, Polk, Simmons, Stuart, Toombs, and Wilson—22.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the War Department has on hand the best arms that this country can afford, and we have authorized the War Department to-day to purchase a supply of breech-loading arms and to alter others. This proposition is to permit the War Department to sell at cost price such arms as the Postmaster General may require. If we have contracted for the mail service and undertaken to furnish these arms or protection to the mail carriers in any other way, then clearly the amendment I sent to the Chair is not in order, and I shall feel bound to withdraw it. I presumed it was understood that no such understanding had been had by the mail carriers. If it has not been had and the contract has not been made with reference to a supply of arms or protection, as a matter of course we ought not to give them to them for nothing. If such an understanding has been had I withdraw the amendment. I offered it simply to supply a deficiency in the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment having been withdrawn, the question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. YULEE. I wish to state that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has been obliged, by the state of his health, to go home. He has not been able to protract his attendance longer.

Mr. HUNTER. But before he left, he got through all his amendments but one.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will permit, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has but one amendment to offer, and that of no consequence, after this. I have three amendments to offer from that committee. They do not amount to much, and I think we can finish this bill in half an hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have two amendments that will require some explanation. It is very important to my State that they should be adopted. I will do anything to oblige gentlemen, but I assure them it is not impertinence when I say I must insist now on a motion to adjourn. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. HAYNE. I second the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 16, nays 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. KING. The proposition of the Postmaster General, as I understand, is to supply passengers or the drivers and other parties who attend these stages over the route with arms. I have some doubt whether that is the best mode of protecting the mails; for if there be really danger from the Indians, it ought to be a military force. The Senators from Michigan and from Florida spoke of this matter as if the mail carriers were under obligations from their contracts to protect themselves. Some of these contractors, at any rate, are constituents of mine, and I feel bound to interpose when a proposition of that sort is made in reference to the obligation resting upon them that they shall be bound to carry out the contract and carry the mail across the country, and also supply them with the means of defense against the public enemy. We had this morning, in this very military appropriation bill, an appropriation inserted of over three hundred thousand dollars for the protection of citizens of Florida against these Indian disturbances, and it was then stated that they were not to be expected to pay their own expenses in suppressing them; and these contractors ought, in some way satisfactorily to the Postmaster General, to be supplied with at least safety against the public enemy; against Mormons or against the Indians. Their agreement to protect the mails and to give safety unquestionably commands from them to carry the mails safely: that is, from private robberies or any accident—

Mr. POLK. Or bad stages.

Mr. KING. From any accident of that sort, but clearly they are under no obligation on their part to defend themselves against the violence from which the Government design to protect them from a common enemy—so that if dangers be threatened by enemies, they must either be protected by the public authorities, or arrangements be made by which they shall be relieved from the obligation to carry out their contracts. Of what is best in that matter, the Postmaster General is probably the best judge. I, hearing then that it was from him, was disposed to accede to the proposition to furnish these people, if they supposed they could transport these mails across the country, and with their own people, who were rather numerous, protect the mails with arms.

I have no idea that the object with them, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has indicated, is to procure them in such a manner as that the passengers shall keep them; but my impression is the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs requires that they shall give security for the return of these arms to the Post Office Department. That far we merely furnish them with the means of defense to carry them along.

Mr. YULEE. It provides for a sale of them. I prefer the mode now suggested.

Mr. KING. It provides for a sale from the War Department to the Post Office Department.

Mr. YULEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. It makes the arms the property of the Post Office Department, and leaves the contractors to whom they are communicated under as much responsibility for their return as they are for the bags, locks, or other property the Department put into their hands. If there be danger from the Indians to these mail transportations, this mode will protect them from it, and is naturally the cheapest mode in which the Government can protect them. If there be a necessity for this mail, which the contract to carry it of course leaves us no question about, they must be protected in some way. I felt bound to interpose when I heard this talk about the obligation they were under to give protection to the mails. It seems to me the obligation of a citizen is not to protect himself from the public enemy, but the Government owes it to him.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to make this suggestion to my friend, the Senator from Florida: if his object is not, as has been suggested, to defeat this amendment—

Mr. MALLORY. I have withdrawn the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Then I will not make the speech I was going to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hayne, Houston, King, Polk, Rice, Seward, Simmons, Wade, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clay, Chignaw, Collamer, Dixon, Doollittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Mallory, Pearce, Reid, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, Wilson, and Yulee—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEARCE. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer another amendment, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the unexpended balance of appropriation for the war debt of the State of California, made by the last section of the act approved August 15, 1854, entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855," any out-standing and unpaid bonds and coupons issued by said State for said war debt prior to the 1st day of January, 1851: Provided, That no payment shall be made beyond the unexpended amount of said appropriation now remaining in the Treasury.

I will briefly explain the object of the amendment. In 1854, Congress assumed the war debt, as it was called, of California, and appropriated $925,000 for defraying that war debt. The act directed that only the debts which were acknowledged by California, and which she had paid up to the 1st of January, 1854, should be paid out of that appropriation. The construction given to the act was, that when the State of California had issued a bond for the amount of that debt, she was considered as having liquidated it or paid it. The Secretary of War was directed, however, not to pay any of those war debts which had not been paid by California, or liquidated by her giving bond, prior to the 1st of January, 1854. It was supposed that all those debts had been so liquidated by California at that time. It turned out, however, that there were a portion of those war debts, the vouchers of which were in possession of the parties entitled to them, for which California had not issued her bonds on the 1st of January, 1854. Some of them were issued after that time, but prior to the passage of the act, which was in August, 1854. There is now in the Treasury, as I understand, about sixty thousand dollars of the $925,000, which has not been called for. Some of these bonds were brought into the War Department, and their payment asked, but it was refused, because, according to the terms of the act, no payment could be made except where the war debt had been liquidated prior to the 1st of January, 1854.

The only difference, then, between these bonds, which it is proposed now to pay out of the unexpended balance of this appropriation, and the others, is, that in the one case the bonds were issued prior to January, 1854; and, in the other case, they were issued subsequent to January, 1854. It is not perceived that there is any difference in principle between them. It is not supposed there can be any possible objection to paying debts which, ex æquo et bono, are equally entitled to be paid, unless it be the apprehension that it may draw after it a large class of other bonds to be paid, but which do not come within the principle of this amendment. So far as I know, there are but $3,000 of that, the payment of which has been demanded at the Treasury, though the appropriation in the Treasury exceeds the amount which has been applied to this purpose by about $60,000. I do not know that we can reasonably expect that it will involve any expenditure other than an amount equivalent to that which is now in the Treasury. I know of no subsequent bonds. I think one of the Senators from California was under the impression that possibly there might be others that had been issued at a much later date, but I think he has restricted that conjecture—for I cannot call it an opinion. He can state for himself, however, what the fact is. I understood from the late Secretary of War, the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. DAVIS,] not now in his place, that he thought these bonds stood on the same footing with the others. He had the examination of the whole subject, for the bonds were required to be referred to him, and he was to be satisfied of them before they were paid, and he thinks this amendment ought to pass.

Mr. GWIN. There is a much larger amount of these bonds than is covered by the appropriation in the amendment. The Senator is right in regard to the unexpended balance of appropriation made in 1854; but there is a much larger amount of bonds than the amount of that appropriation, which is the duty of the representatives of California to bring forward before Congress, and we have been instructed by our Legislature to do so. The amount of those bonds I do not at this moment recollect. The subject was referred to the Committee on Claims; but they have not reported upon it. It is a much larger amount, though, than this unexpended balance of appropriation, which I shall certainly bring forward.

Mr. HUNTER. I must say, in regard to this proposition, that I am unwilling to go for an amendment which, I fear, will pledge us to the payment of the war debt beyond what Congress intended at the time the appropriation passed. I speak from general recollection; but, according to my recollection, the idea was not to pay every bond issued by the State of California, but to pay a sum in gross; and we placed a certain limitation as to the time within which those bonds were presented. If we depart from the conditions of that act, I fear that there will be a great number of those bonds which will come within the equity of the case; and I therefore, for one, cannot vote for an amendment which would have that effect.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The appropriation was made on an exhibit made by the comptroller of the State of the exact amount of the bonds which it was supposed was due at that period. The appropriation was not conjectural at all, but was made upon an exhibit of the State comptroller. The claims were subsequently audited, and bonds issued by the authority of the Legislature.

Mr. POLK. What was the war which produced the debt?

Mr. GWIN. The Indian wars of that State; for some of which subsequent bonds were issued, for which the State is liable in the same manner as it is liable for those assumed by Congress. Nor was the original proposition to take the sum stated as a lump, as the Senator states; but it was the actual amount of the indebtedness of the State of California, for which she had issued bonds. Subsequently others have been presented and allowed by the State, and will be sent to Congress, as in all other cases.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I see no such danger as the Senator from Virginia seems to anticipate in this matter. A word or two, I think, will put it in such an aspect that the Senate will feel that they can safely vote for the amendment. It is not an appropriation. It was ascertained that the sum due at that time to the State of California was $924,000. The appropriation was made for the entire sum, and vouchers were to be furnished, showing the payment. At the time the law was passed it was anticipated that the money would be sent to California, and there distributed amongst the creditors. The creditors, however, preferred going to California, and, with their vouchers establishing their claims, taking the bonds of the State for the claims there established, and bringing their bonds here and getting payment at Washington. They preferred, naturally enough, a claim against the General Government directly, to a claim against the State. They wished the money paid to them, instead of going into the treasury of the State.

When the law was passed providing for the payment of all the debt which had been paid by the State or settled by the State, prior to the 1st of January then next preceding, and amounting to $924,000, it was supposed that the holders of the claims against the State with those vouchers had all presented them and had received bonds, and that the debt was therefore fixed. When the settlement was made at the War Department here, it was discovered that a portion of this debt of $924,000 had been presented to the State for settlement a month or two after the precise date fixed in the bill, and the parties holding the bonds, exactly the same in every respect with the other bonds, came to the War Department here and asked for settlement. The War Department, looking at the face of the bonds, said, "this is a payment made by the State after the 1st of January last, and, as a matter of precaution, Congress determined that that should be the date fixed for the liquidation of the different claims against the State." The consequence is that there remains $60,000 of the appropriation made for that debt now in the War Department applicable to these very bonds, but which sum cannot be paid to the bondholders until Congress will amend the terms of the appropriation. Now, this amendment provides for this and no more: that the balance standing in the hands of the Secretary of War be paid to the holders of these bonds, and with two checks provided: first, that not a dollar shall be paid from any other than the appropriation as it stands; and secondly, that not a bond shall be received except bonds issued prior to the date of the law; so that it can carry after it no further bonds, no new emissions by the State, and cannot carry a dollar out of the Treasury. It will be manifestly unjust and improper, because it did so happen that some of those vouchers were presented a week or two after the other vouchers, and because, as a measure of precaution, we then fixed a particular date for the bonds, now that the matter is fully developed, when it is found that there are other creditors entitled to this balance remaining in the Treasury, to refuse to pay them, or amend the law which made the appropriation, so as to enable them to receive the amount due them under the money appropriated, and another class provided for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Louisiana to explain a difficulty which exists in my mind in reference to this matter. This debt, as I understand it, in the first place was a debt of the State of California to a certain class of creditors. Those creditors wished to be paid at the Treasury of the United States, instead of going into California and being paid in California from her treasury. That is all very well, provided California agreed to it. If California did not agree, they had no right to do it; because if she did not agree to it, California might well say, "You have done it without our consent; we did not authorize it, and we ask you to pay us." I understand California did agree to it through certain commissioners.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; California agreed on special terms to that law, and of course, agreed to nothing else; that is to say, that all the bonds which were dated before a certain time, or a certain period, should be paid in that way. The appropriation was made, and when the time expired there remained a balance in the Treasury unexhausted by the bonds which bore the given date. Then the balance remaining in the Treasury not applied, belongs to California necessarily, because it is the rest of the debt. Have we the consent of California to appropriate that balance to the payment of bonds issued after that date? If so, perhaps it may be done safely. I do not say but that it may. If we do not have the consent of California to the alteration of the law taking a portion of that balance and applying it to bonds after that date, though it may be equitable so far as the creditors are concerned, yet California can turn around upon us and say you had no right to pay this balance; it belonged to us.

Mr. HAYNE. Mr. President—

Mr. BENJAMIN. I hope my friend will permit me to answer the question, and I will yield to him after having answered the question of my friend from Maine.

Mr. HAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Maine is right in some of his statements, but is not fully advised as to the whole matter. The State of California did consent that the payment should be made at the Treasury here, and for that purpose sent commissioners charged with the examination of claims against the Treasury here, and with full powers to designate those claims which the State of California consented to have paid. Those commissioners did approve of these bonds, and wanted them paid; but the Secretary of War, looking at the words of the law, declined paying unless Congress should amend the appropriation law. The Senator from Mississippi, the present chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, was then the Secretary of War. He required an amendment to the appropriation act, because he said, "although this debt is due evidently to these parties, although here is an appropriation to pay them, although California consents to the payment, yet Congress has told me to require proof that the debt was settled by the State of California prior to the 1st of January before I paid it." Now, sir, in regard to the suggestion that California may come back and make this claim over again, I think every Senator will see, on reflection, there is nothing in that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator does not meet the difficulty I suggested. Perhaps he did not understand my question.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think, if the Senator will let me finish, he will find that I shall meet all he suggests.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In order to let him do so, I wish to show the extent of the difficulty, and then he can answer the whole. It is this: were these commissioners authorized to give assent to that law? Of course it must have been to that extent. The law, as it passed, had a limitation. What evidence is there that the commissioners had any authority from California to assent to the amendment of that law, extending that law?

Mr. BRIGHT. I think, if the Senator will allow me, he is mistaken as to one important point. The Senator from Maryland has before him a short section to an appropriation bill, which I hope he will read. It is unfortunate that the honorable Senator from Mississippi is not present. He explained the whole thing to-day. He understands it perfectly, and is decidedly in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will state to the Senator from Maine, that I did understand the point he made, thoroughly, and I was going to state this:

the appropriation made was an appropriation to pay, in behalf of California, her war debt. It was not an appropriation to pay any sum of money to the State of California, for her use; and consequently, if it be once ascertained to the satisfaction of the Senate that this is one of the war debts which Congress intended to pay for that State, upon what earthly ground could the State come here afterwards and demand of us to pay the money to her? It never was intended for her; it is no appropriation to her; it is an appropriation to pay the debt that she incurred; but for the purpose of securing the United States against any collusion between the State authorities and persons who might come forward with claims afterwards, it was essentially provided that only the claims brought forward after that date should be paid by the United States for the State. Now the State has no interest at all except in seeing her debt paid. If this money is paid to these bondholders, can California come forward and endeavor to deny the propriety of our payment, when the payment made by us is her bond? In what way can she ask the Senate of the United States, or Congress, to make an appropriation for her? The payment is not for her at all; the payment is for her creditors; and the best voucher to show that the payment is appropriated in the manner in which Congress originally intended, is the production of the bond which she issued, and which of course estops her from denying the validity of the debt, or the propriety of applying the same.

Mr. HAYNE. I would propose an adjournment. Many of us have been here ten hours, and are very much exhausted. When I look around me I see that more than one third of the Senators are absent. I confess I am not prepared to vote upon this amendment now. I wish to consider this subject. I do not comprehend it. The gentlemen opposed to each other do not seem to comprehend it. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes ten, noes not counted.

Mr. GWIN. A great deal of this debate has taken place while I was out of the Senate Chamber, and I am not as familiar with the remarks which have been made as other Senators now present; but I wish to say in connection with this subject, that this is a debt which is due from the General Government, according to all the practice of the Government heretofore, to the State of California. She has given her bond to the amount specified here, and for more, and certainly California will yet expect to get it paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CLAY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BRIGHT. I want to say a word on this question.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is so plain a case that, if the Senate understood it, there could not be a doubt about it.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes twenty-two, noes not counted.

Mr. BRODERICK. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report the following amendment:

For the payment of claims favorably reported upon by the board of Army officers appointed under the sixth section of the act approved August 31, 1852, in their final report to Congress, dated April 19, 1855, $7,872 52.

Mr. POLK. What does that embrace? I should like to hear what those claims are that are reported on favorably.

Mr. BRODERICK. They are those which have been reported by the board of Army officers appointed for the purpose of examining and settling the Frémont claims. I believe the whole amount has been paid but this $7,872. My colleague is better acquainted with this subject than I am, and he will explain it.

Mr. GWIN. This is the remnant of the claims under the report of the Military Committee. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] made the report on the subject. It is a part of the Frémont claim, on account of which there was presented to Congress, at one time, a claim of $149,000, which was allowed, and at various times various allowances. The balance, not appropriated for, is $7,000, which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs. These claims have been paid for a number of years.

Mr. POLK. I ask if this is not a private claim?

Mr. BRODERICK. It has already passed the Senate without any opposition from any quarter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri raise any question of order?

Mr. POLK. No, sir; but I think it is a private claim.

Mr. GWIN. Not at all. They have been appropriated for many years in the same way. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to propose an amendment to the bill, by inserting the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any commissioned officer of the Army to administer the prescribed oath of enlistment to recruits: Provided, There be no civil magistrate authorized to administer the same within reach.

I will simply say, Mr. President, that we have a letter from the Adjutant General, covering a letter from an officer of the Army, in Utah, asking for this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed, by the same committee, to offer another amendment, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That every person not subject to the rules and articles of war who shall procure or entice a soldier in the service of the United States to desert; or who shall harbor, conceal, or give employment to a deserter, or carry him away, or aid in carrying him away, knowing him to be such; or who shall purchase from any soldier his arms, equipments, uniform, clothing, or any part thereof; and any captain or commanding officer of any ship or vessel, as one of his crew or otherwise, carrying away any such soldier, knowing him to have deserted, or shall refuse to deliver him up to the orders of his commanding officer, shall, upon legal conviction, be fined, at the discretion of any court having cognizance of the same, in any sum not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding one year.

Mr. FITCH. That is a fugitive-slave law.

Mr. PUGH. I hope that section will not be put on the bill. This is a bill which, according to the construction of the laws, will only extend one year; but the idea of putting the definition of a criminal offense upon an appropriation bill seems to me carrying it beyond reason. I hope we have not got so far that we must put all things on an appropriation bill. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I simply wish to say, in regard to this proposition, that it is but a slight amendment of the existing law. By the existing law, carrying away a soldier is punishable, if carried away by an officer of a ship; but any other person who chooses to do it cannot be punished. It is evidently an oversight in the law. There have been trials in the army in Utah for desertion that have failed on that technical point. The amendment is recommended by the Department. The fines are the same. It simply covers the case of a deserter who has been carried away.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes eleven, noes not counted.

Mr. WILSON. I submit another amendment, not by the direction of the committee, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That all existing laws, or parts of laws, which authorize the sale of military sites, which are, or may become, useless for military purposes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

This is a proposition to repeal all existing laws authorizing the Secretary of War to sell any forts or military sites. If he wishes to sell any, let him come to Congress and ask special authority; and then Congress can pass such a bill as applies to the particular case.

Mr. STUART. I should like to hear that amendment read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator desires to retain his amendment in that shape, the land cannot be sold by the Department at all. The law, as it now stands, is this: when the Secretary of War notifies the Secretary of the Interior that he has no longer any use for a military reservation, it becomes part of the public domain, and subject to the laws. This amendment would prevent it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. This comes back to a proposition I made in the Senate, I think, some three weeks ago. I have always been dissatisfied that the power remained in the Secretary of War to sell these public reservations, because, although they may not be wanted for military purposes, they may very frequently be wanted for other public purposes of which he is ignorant. These military reservations are generally of value; the settlements cluster around them; they are required for other public purposes; and I see no reason at all why Congress should not have control of their disposition. Why cannot the Secretary of War, whenever a particular reservation is no longer required for a particular purpose, communicate the fact to Congress, and let Congress dispose of it as it sees fit? Now there was Rock Island reservation. That was required for railroad purposes. It might have been required for other purposes connected with the Government. In all these cases there is a degree of discretion to be exercised which I think had better be vested in Congress than in any public officer. Let the reasons for which the land is no longer wanted be submitted to Congress, and then let Congress throw it into the public domain or appropriate it for other public purposes. It is much safer. We are never in any particular hurry about selling a particular piece of land, and then the control of the public lands will be in Congress, where the Constitution places it.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator from Louisiana desires to effect his object, and the Senate agree with him, he should present an amendment which has that effect. That would be easily done by saying that military sites having become useless and unnecessary shall not hereafter be sold, except by the special authority of Congress. Let that be done. But I say the effect of this amendment is to leave the difficulties, to allow the land to be seized upon by a set of men known as pre-emptive speculators, and yet the Department do not have authority to sell it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will yield to any amendment the Senator would offer for that purpose. I have the same desire that he has. I think the amendment accomplishes it.

Mr. STUART. It does not.

Mr. WILSON. That was the object of the amendment. I think it covers it. It does not allow authority to sell the military sites without the authority of Congress. I take it one of those sites cannot be sold or taken by anybody as any part of the public domain. If the Secretary of War thinks one of the military sites of the country can be dispensed with, and he wishes it sold, let him come to Congress, state the fact, and have an act passed covering that special and particular case. Now, sir, this is a proposition to repeal all laws—

Mr. STUART. I hope the Senator will allow me a moment. There should be no dispute about language. If the Senator thinks with me, I would suggest this amendment: "or be subject to the general laws in regard to the public lands." Then it cannot be preempted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move that amendment to the amendment?

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I suppose the Senator will accept it?

Mr. WILSON. I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, as modified.

Mr. STUART. Let it be read, to see how the language reads.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have just read it; and the difficulty will be met by adding, at the end, the words:

Said lands shall not be subject to the general land laws.

That, under the law, would cover it.

Mr. FITCH. Does not the general law protect Indians upon reservations?

Mr. STUART. No, sir.

Mr. FITCH. I think the better way would be to except it from preemption. That would cover the whole object.

Mr. STUART. Then, instead of the words I before proposed, I suggest these words:

And said lands shall not be subject to sale or preemption under any of the laws of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. I accept that.

Mr. YULEE. I would like to learn from the Senator from Michigan what interpretation he would give to this amendment which he proposes, in its application to an existing case in regard to Florida. There was some legislation at the last session which is in the course of execution, but is not yet executed. During the progress of the Seminole war, very large reservations, in some instances fifty or sixty thousand acres of land were withdrawn from sale, for the purpose of enabling the military commanders to keep off liquor sellers, &c. At the last session the Military Department was authorized to relinquish such reservations as were no longer needed for military purposes, by reporting the fact to the Interior Department, and they then fell into the general mass of public lands, subject to sale, after a certain day, as other lands. The War Department have taken that step with reference to two or three cases, but have not yet completed their resolution with respect to others. They have notified the Department of the Interior in respect to two others, but that Department has not yet had them all for sale. They are agricultural lands altogether.

Mr. STUART. I have no doubt that so far as the Secretary of War has notified the Secretary of the Interior, the action is complete; they belong to the public lands; but so far as that has not been done, there would be no authority remaining if this amendment should prevail.

Mr. WILSON. Let the amendment as amended be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

That all the existing laws or parts of laws, which authorize the sale of military sites, which are or may become useless for military purposes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and said lands shall not be subject to sale or preemption under any of the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have an amendment to offer:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,425 30, to refund that amount paid by the State of Texas, for ranging service, which was expended for the protection of the frontier; and that the further amount of $12,518 21, which has been liquidated and is yet due to claimants, be, and is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. HUNTER. Does that come from any committee?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLAY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Virginia raise a point of order?

Mr. HUNTER. I do. Unless the amendment comes from a committee it is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will explain it. I occupy very little of the time of the Senate on these bills, though I have a speech of about three hours' length which I will deliver on some occasion. It is strange that I cannot be permitted to explain a matter of importance to my State, being here alone, wearied out with watching, occupying no time of the Senate. When I rise to offer an important amendment affecting the rights of my State, and endeavoring to obtain an appropriation to refund her the money that she has already paid out of her treasury to defend her frontier, if there is not accorded to me that degree of patience necessary to hear me while I explain the amendment, I had better leave the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was in order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of order presented is, whether this amendment is in accordance with the recommendation of any committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am going to answer that question. When I received the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Texas at an early day of the session I immediately referred them to the Military Committee, where they remained until the other day, and when I went there it was with difficulty they could be found. In saying this I intend to cast no reflection on the chairman of that committee, for he was grievously afflicted for months. At length the resolutions were found, but no report was made on them. A communication had been made to the War Department for information on the subject, and the War Department wrote a letter of the most extraordinary character and did not recommend the recognition of the claim. I will state the history of it.

In 1855 the frontier of Texas was not defended, many aggressions were committed upon her inhabitants by killing them, as well as depriving them of their property, and stealing their horses. Though there were some three thousand regular troops there, they were utterly useless, and afforded no defense to the frontier. The people were flocking into the interior. They found themselves in a defenseless situation, subject to the mercy of the savages, and the troops utterly inefficient to pursue them, being infantry, or if they were cavalry, they knew nothing about such service, and they were equally faulty. The State called out four companies of rangers, and settled with them in April, 1855. They were paid, I think, under the direction of a paymaster of the United States, Texas furnishing the money. Some seventy-five thousand four hundred dollars were paid for the four companies, and $12,000 remained unpaid but liquidated, the amount being ascertained. The Legislature of the State, at its last session, instructed the Senators and requested the Representatives of Texas to obtain the payment of the amount from the United States. Here is the letter of the Secretary of War, which I will read to show the inconsistency of it, and the frivolous objection that is made to the recognition of this claim:

"They [the four companies] had been regularly mustered into the service of the United States, in the latter part of 1854. Whether they or the other companies mentioned were subsequently in the service of the State of Texas, this Department does not know. The records, however, attest that Captain Charles E. Travis accepted a commission in the second regiment of cavalry, the 5th day of April, 1855—four days only after he was mustered out of the volunteer service of the United States, from which it is fair to infer that there must be some mistake in charging the Government with payment of any services rendered by him at the head of a company in the State service on the 28th of February, 1855, as is done in the statement furnished by the authorities of Texas."

As if April preceded February. It was in February that the services were rendered; and on the 1st of April Charles E. Travis was mustered out of this service; and on the 5th of April he accepted a payment from the United States. The Secretary places February behind April; that is the objection to the recognition of the claim!

Mr. HUNTER. I am sure the Senator from Texas does not wish to speak against order. Will he not allow the Chair to decide?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is clearly out of order, unless he intends to show that this amendment is within the 30th rule. If the Senator can show that it comes within any of the classes excepted in the rule, he is in order; but if he does not propose to show that, he is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to show that I have used proper diligence to bring it within the rule. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is clearly out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the Chair be kind enough to say how the State of Texas is ever to get redress, if the committee will not make a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not the business of the Chair. His duty is to enforce the rules of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I appeal to the Senate for justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of order is raised that the amendment is not recommended by any standing or select committee of the Senate. The 30th rule is plain upon this subject; and, in the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not the fault of the State or her Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to take the question on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole separately or all together?

Mr. WADE. I wish the fortification amendment to be excepted. I desire to have a separate vote on that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to have a separate vote on the amendment appropriating $385,000 for volunteers in Florida.

Mr. YULEE. I wish to reserve the amendment with regard to military sites, as I desire to propose a modification of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, excepting the three which have been mentioned.

The other amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole making appropriations for fortifications.

Mr. WADE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole by a pretty large majority, and I suppose it is the sense of the Senate that the amendment shall go on the bill. I desire to inquire whether it would be in order for me to move an appropriation of the amount estimated by the Department to be necessary for the repairs of Fort Mackinaw?

Mr. HUNTER. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that the hour is late, and I appeal to him to let us take the sense of the Senate.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not propose to argue the question.

Mr. HUNTER. If we commence offering amendments to this amendment, we shall be led into a debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the fortification amendment.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Dixon] and myself have paired off.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Cameron, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Douglas, Fessenden, Fitch, Foote, Foster, Green, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Pearce, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Summons, Sillid, Wilson, and Yulee—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Crittenden, Doolittle, Hale, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Polk, Stuart, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wade—12.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, on which a separate vote was demanded, was:

For payment to the volunteers operating in Florida during the year 1837, $385,000.

Several Senators. Question! Question!

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know, sir, that the Senate is very impatient, and that when motions are made to adjourn they are voted down, and the persons voting them down are very much in the habit of crying "question," and seem determined to force this bill through now, after a long and protracted session of some nine or ten hours. Notwithstanding that is the case, and although I cannot hope, by anything I may say, to change the result in the Senate upon this appropriation, I am not willing that it shall pass without an exposure of it. I called attention to it in Committee of the Whole, and asked for some information as to the authority of the President of the United States to call out these volunteers, if he had done so, in Florida. No authority was shown, no letter from the Department, no message from the President, no communication from him in any shape. Sir, if it has come to this, that the Congress of the United States will vote nearly four hundred thousand dollars to pay the expenses of volunteers, without knowing by what authority they have been called out, I wish it to be known. I wish to hear some information on this subject. The Committee on Finance has furnished none. The communications from the President and from the War Department furnish none. I should like to know if the Executive of this country has a right, without authority of Congress, to call out volunteers? If so, I think we might as well adjourn the Congress. It was supposed, formerly, that it was necessary to pass an act of Congress to vest the President with this power; but now, without any act of Congress, without any information from anybody before the Senate, this appropriation of almost half a million dollars is to be passed through, and I suppose it will be passed through.

When I called attention to this in Committee of the Whole I did succeed in having a reference to the law which it was said justified it. I have read that law more carefully since, and it is no justification whatever. No such case has existed as would authorize the President to call out volunteers. The Senator from Florida refers me to the act of 1795 as containing the authority under which these troops were called out, though he fails to show that the President ever called them out. This act declares:

"That whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion."

For two reasons, this cannot furnish the foundation for calling out these volunteers: first, it does not authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers; it authorizes him to call out the militia, and the militia only, and that is a different thing from accepting the services of volunteers; secondly, the case had not arisen. This law provides for the case of an invasion of the United States. The President has furnished no evidence that the United States have been invaded. A disturbance by a few Indians in the State of Florida is not an invasion of the United States. An invasion of a country, if it means anything, means the entering from without and taking possession of the country. You cannot invade a country that you are in. The citizens of Florida cannot invade Florida. The idea is an absurdity. We all know that there has been no invasion of the United States. It is not an invasion of Florida that would authorize the President to call out troops.

Then, where is the authority by which these volunteers were mustered into service, if they ever were mustered in? How many of them were there? How long did they serve? This amendment, I suppose, will be adopted by a large vote in the Senate; but I appeal to Senators how many volunteers were called out in Florida, how long did they serve? can one of you tell me? is there any information before the Senate? Then, why vote $385,000 without any information whatever?

But, sir, although the amount of money is of some consequence to us at this time, when we are borrowing money to carry on the Government, yet that is a small consideration compared with the assumption of power on the part of the Executive which is involved in this question. If a debt has been incurred without authority of law, are we to foot the bill, and say nothing about it? Where are we tending? To what is this Government coming? Where is it to stop? If your President can call out at his will volunteers and raise armies, what use is there for Congress? The Constitution says that Congress may raise and support armies; but, if the President can do it without authority of law, there is no occasion for Congress acting on that subject. It is a monstrous assumption of power; and there is no justification for it shown. There is no law authorizing it. There is no evidence before the Senate that the committee have presented, none that the War Department even ever authorized these troops to be mustered into service—no evidence whatever in regard to it. If the Senate is prepared, under such circumstances, to vote this money, so be it.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator has repeated several times that there is no information before the committee. I believe he is a member of the committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know nothing about what the committee have had. I say they have not exhibited any evidence here.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator from Maryland, the member of the Committee on Finance who presented this amendment, exhibited, and had upon his table, before the Senate, a letter from the Secretary of War, giving all the information which the Senator from Illinois desires; and if he had taken the trouble to read it, all of his requirements would have been answered in respect to the occasion, the number of troops, the time they served, and the request for the appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And the authority to call them out? I should like to see such evidence. It has not been before the Senate.

Mr. YULEE. I will give the Senator the authority for calling them out. The Senate, I know, would prefer that there should be no extended discussion; and I promise to take only two minutes. The act of 1795, which was referred to as the authority, authorizes the President to call out troops in the case of an invasion by an Indian tribe occupying Indian country, of territory occupied by white settlers. Without going into a philological discussion with the Senator, I will give him a case which, when he answers, I will answer his question as to the authority of the President. I am going to give him a reply to his objections by citing a case from his own State; and when he answers it, I shall be prepared to answer him on the case which he puts before the Senate. In 1832, an appropriation was made in these words:

"That for the purpose of paying the militia of the State of Illinois"

Mr. TRUMBULL. "Militia," not volunteers.

Mr. YULEE. And these are militia. There is precisely the error of the gentleman. I do not know whether the amendment calls them volunteers or not, but they were actually militia, regularly called out under the State organization, organized by the State.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Florida will allow me, I should like to have the amendment read to see whether it is to pay militia.

Mr. YULEE. The amendment may have made use of an improper word; but the case here was simply an act of the Executive under the authority of the law of 1795, calling, through the Secretary of War, on the Governor of Florida, by regular requisition, for a certain number of militia to take the place of regular troops; and if the amendment has used the word "volunteers," it has used it improperly, and because we have been in the general habit of calling all the State troops volunteers as contradistinguished from regulars. Without stopping on that point, however, let me put a case to the Senator, which, when he answers, I will answer him. A law passed in 1832, contains this provision:

"That for the purpose of paying the militia of the State of Illinois, called into the service of the United States by competent authority, and for paying the expenses incurred in detaching the frontier from a recent invasion by several bands of hostile Indians, and including the pay of the militia legally called for the same purpose from the neighboring States and Territories, $300,000."

What was the nature of that invasion? What constituted that invasion? I propose to read a letter of the Governor of Illinois to the Secretary of War, which will answer the Senator with an Illinois definition of an invasion. The Governor of Illinois, in a letter to the Secretary of War, dated July 7, 1831, says:

"The Indians, with some exceptions, from Canada to Mexico along the northern frontier of the United States, are to-day more hostile to the whites than at any other period since the last war" that is his opinion—

"particularly the band of Sac Indians, usually and truly called the British band. This band have determined, for some years past, to remain, at all hazards, on certain lands which have been purchased by the United States" just as these Indians determined to remain on certain lands purchased by the United States from them in Florida—

"and afterwards some of them sold to private individuals by the General Government. They also determined to drive off the citizens from this disputed territory. In order to effect this object, they committed various outrages on the persons and property of the citizens of the State. In this situation of affairs, I considered the State to be actually invaded, and the country in imminent danger, so much so that I immediately called on part of the militia nearest the disputed territory to be ready."

That was his construction of an invasion, and it was an invasion by twenty-eight Indians, chiefs and braves, all told, who determined to retain possession of Rockville, or some little town, which it was supposed had been purchased from them, for another year; and that the Governor of Illinois considered an invasion. Congress considered it an invasion, and made an appropriation to pay the militia for repelling that invasion. Well, what was the competent authority in that case? Congress never authorized the President to act specially in that particular instance; the President even did not authorize the calling out of those troops. It was done by authority of General Gaines alone, and afterwards adopted by the Secretary of War and the President, and an appropriation asked for; and yet, the law speaks of them as called out by competent authority. When the Senator shows the law, other than the act of 1795, which authorized the President to call out the Illinois militia, which were then paid, and when he shows that that was an invasion of the United States, I shall be prepared to answer him the question he asks in respect to the present service.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Florida will look a little further into the history of the Black Hawk war—

Mr. YULEE. This was not the Black Hawk war. This was in 1831.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know to what the Senator alludes if it is not the Black Hawk war.

Mr. YULEE. It was nothing more than a determination of twenty-eight braves and chiefs to retain possession of a small town; and when they found they were marched upon by one thousand four hundred mounted troops of Illinois, in the service of the United States, besides a large portion of the regular Army, they passed over to the other side of the Mississippi and made a treaty, which treaty was signed by every chief and every brave. That was the whole amount of the matter. Black Hawk was at that time simply a brave, nothing more.

I will say further to the Senator from Illinois, that it seems to me to be immaterial to go into a discussion of the construction of the law of 1795 now. The Executive has been in the habit of acting upon this construction: in this case he has acted upon it and called troops into service from the State of Florida; they have performed the service, and have been disbanded. The Senator certainly is not going, on a hypercritical discussion of the true construction of the law, to refuse payment to the men who have actually done the service. It seems to me that it is a bootless discussion we are entering upon.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senators will be content with making their points, and let us draw the inferences, so that we may get a vote on this question. It is getting very late.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am aware of the great haste with which the Senator from Virginia presses all these bills, and I am sorry that the Senate of the United States is so anxious to get home that it cannot give consideration to them. I saw, yesterday, in a full Senate, in the afternoon, a proposition to appropriate $1,200,000, to build ten vessels of war, voted down by four majority. I remained here until late at night, when the Senate was worn out, and I saw a proposition voted into the bill, to appropriate $1,200,000 to build half as many vessels. That is one result following from this haste, this pressure, this impatience to get through with the appropriation bills. When the Senate was full, it would not appropriate $1,200,000 for ten vessels of war. When the Senate was worn out, it struck out four or five of them, and agreed to pay the same amount for the remainder—the same caliber and the same size. It was the same amendment we had voted down, with the exception of taking out of it four or five vessels. I expect this to pass; I do not hope to be able to arrest it.

The Senator from Florida refers to a transaction that occurred in Illinois in an Indian war, which I supposed had some connection, and I apprehend it will be so found on looking into it, with the Black Hawk war; I know of no other war that occurred there about that time; and then the Governor of Illinois called upon the President of the United States; but it is not pretended that the Governor of Florida has called upon the President for assistance to maintain the laws of Florida. This proposition is put on another ground.

Mr. YULEE. The Governor of Illinois did not call upon the United States, but he marched out first with seven hundred troops called out by himself, and the number was increased to fourteen hundred, and they were afterwards adopted and paid by the United States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend that that case would furnish no precedent for this; but if it would, it is time that we ceased to do wrong. If an error was committed in 1831, that is no reason why we should repeat it in 1858. Now, sir, what evidence has been furnished to the Senate? The Senator from Florida tells us that the Senator from Maryland had on his table the evidence. I know not what he had on his table; it has not been read to the Senate; there is no evidence before us. The Senator has not stated how many troops were called out, nor by what authority.

Mr. PEARCE. I beg leave to say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. I did read the Secretary's letter. I read from it the statement that a regiment of troops were called out, and ten independent companies, and that they served for six months, and that when they were discharged, the ten independent companies were accepted by Colonel Loomis, who had succeeded General Harney. I read that in totidem verbis. Whether the gentleman was here or not, I do not know.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I stand corrected as to that, if the gentleman states that he read it; but I did not hear it.

Mr. PEARCE. That is not my fault. Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is any authority for calling out these troops, I should like to see it; and I ask the Senator from Maryland to indulge me so far as to produce the letter from the Secretary of War and let it be read now, and I will promise to listen to it. I mean the letter that authorizes the calling out of the troops. I want to see the authority from the President.

Mr. PEARCE. As to the authority from the President, I cannot produce that; and I apprehend that, from the foundation of the Government down to this time, the President never sent a message to Congress, on such a subject as this, in which he set forth the authority under which he acted. Does the Senator expect the President, when he notifies us that he has called out volunteers, to begin by saying, "Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives, on such a day, in such a year, by virtue of an act passed on the 15th day of such a month, in such a year, empowering me to call out volunteers in certain cases, I did call out so many volunteers in pursuance of that authority?" Does anybody expect him to do that? No, sir. When by law you give the President authority, he exercises it without parading the authority before you. He supposes you know the law as well as he does, as you ought to know it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maryland misapprehends my question. I do not ask him for the authority which the President sets forth. I ask merely for the authority which the President gave to call out the troops. I want the order of the President, not his reference to statutes or to laws. I want to see the order of the President, or his executive officer, the Secretary of War, directing the volunteers to be mustered into service in Florida, if there be such an order. I do not ask for a reference by the President to the law; I ask merely for the authority under which the officer in Florida acted in calling out the troops—the order from the proper Department. I am aware that the President acts through the heads of Departments; and the Secretary of War, I suppose, issued the order. If it came from him, it is to him that I would look for it; and I want to know when the order was issued, and what it was. If there be such an order, I hope it will be produced to the Senate.

Mr. YULEE. The course was this: the Secretary of War informed the Governor of Florida that the general commanding there was authorized to call for a certain number of companies of militia, and the commanding officer there did call them. They were furnished, and mustered into the service; and if the Senator, as a member of the committee, in the investigation of this matter—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. YULEE. I was under the impression that you were, and I was going to say that if you had called on the Department as a member of the committee, you would have received it. I suppose the committee presumed the Secretary would not say he had called them out unless he had done so.

Mr. PEARCE. Most unquestionably the committee did not think it necessary to call on the Secretary of War for a copy of his order. It was sufficient that we had a letter from the War Department recommending this appropriation, and stating that these troops had been called into service. As I have already stated, we thought that was enough. If the gentleman wants the order, I take it he will be obliged to call on the Secretary. That he can do to-morrow morning, and get it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to see the letter which the Senator has in his hands.

Mr. PEARCE. I will furnish the letter. It says nothing of any order by the Secretary; it speaks of volunteers called out by General Harney, who, as I said before, had authority from the War Department to call them. This is a letter from the Paymaster General to the Secretary of War, dated June 3, 1858, in which he says:

"I have the honor to report, agreeably to your directions, that the regiment and ten independent companies of Florida volunteers, called into service by General Harney for the period of six months, will require for their payment $385,000. Upon the discharge of this force, ten companies were mustered into service by Colonel Loomis, for the same period. These have been ordered to be discharged, with the exception of two companies; but the muster-rolls have not yet reached the Adjutant General's office. From the best data to be obtained, it will require the further sum, for their payment, of $140,000, making for both services the sum of $525,000. In my former estimate for the payment of Florida volunteers, the sum of $172,000 was asked for, to refund to the Treasury that amount drawn from balances of old appropriations and expended in paying Florida volunteers for services prior to this estimate, which were then supposed to be applicable," &c.

It is unnecessary to read the rest; it refers only to that transaction which was explained on the last amendment of the Finance Committee, where the balances were transferred. Here is another letter in which the Secretary says:

"I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication of the Paymaster General, furnished in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 22d instant, requesting to be furnished with estimates for appropriations to pay such part of the volunteers, operating in Florida, during the past year, as may remain unpaid for the want of appropriations applicable to the troops, including in such estimates the companies that have been mustered or recognized by the order of the President."

Now, as I understand, the regiment and the ten independent companies, serving the first six months, were mustered in by order of the President; and the ten companies were afterwards taken into service by order of Colonel Loomis, under some general authority which he had from the Executive here. These are all the papers I have.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will be observed that these papers merely go to furnish the foundation for the payment of this money—that is the whole object of them. They contain the estimate—I did not doubt that the Department wanted this money—and that is all they amount to. The evidence is not furnished unless you are to infer it because the Department recommends this amount to be paid, which it seems is only half, for there is over half a million, altogether, to be paid for volunteers in Florida last year. If the Senate, with this evidence before it, is prepared to vote the money, I have no more to say. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Fitch, Green, Gwin, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Mallory, Pearce, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Silldell, Stuart, Toombs, and Yulee—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hamilton, Harlan, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—16.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, on which a separate vote was demanded, was to insert the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That all the existing laws, or parts of laws, which authorize the sale of military stores which are, or may become, useless for military purposes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and said lands shall not be subject to sale or preemption under any of the laws of the United States.

Mr. YULEE. I desire to offer a proviso, to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Stuart] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Benjamin] assent; and I believe there is no objection to it from any quarter. It is merely to continue in force an act of the last Congress. It is:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of August 18, 1856, relative to certain reservations in the State of Florida, shall continue in force.

Mr. COLLAMER. What is that act?

Mr. YULÉE. It was an act reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to relieve from the incubus of a reservation large districts of agricultural lands that had been withdrawn from sale simply during the Florida war. I will read it:

"That all public lands heretofore reserved for military purposes in the State of Florida, which said lands, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, are no longer useful or desired for such purposes, or so much thereof as said Secretary may designate, shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the control of the General Land Office, to be disposed of and sold in the same manner and under the same regulations as other public lands of the United States: Provided, That said lands shall not be so placed under the control of said General Land Office, until said opinion of the Secretary of War, giving his consent, communicated to the Secretary of the Interior in writing, shall be filed and recorded."

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to know whether the reservation made now describes it sufficiently. It was only last year that power was given to the Secretary of War to sell all reservations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have an amendment to offer:

That $20,000 be appropriated to pay for timber used by the troops of the United States in constructing forts and for other purposes.

Mr. COLLAMER. The amendment does not provide for paying the money to anybody.

Mr. HOUSTON. I send to the desk some letters, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read the following letters:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, March 30, 1858.
Sir: I have the honor herewith to submit the inclosed report of the Quartermaster General, and respectfully to ask that the sum mentioned therein, intended to meet certain claims of citizens of Texas, for wood and timber cut on their lands for the use of the troops of the United States stationed in the State, may be added to the bill for deficiencies, now pending.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN B. FLOYD,
Secretary of War.
Hon. J. GLANCY JONES, Chairman Committee Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON CITY, February 13, 1858.

Sir: There are several claims for wood and timber cut on the lands of citizens of Texas for the use of the troops of the United States stationed in that State for several years past, which are considered just, but which there is no authority to pay. The claims now officially before this office, and which there is no appropriation to pay, amount to $10,568 70. I have unofficial information that several similar claims exist and will be presented. To enable the claimants to obtain the amounts justly due to them, I respectfully recommend that application be made to the Committee of Ways and Means to add to the bill the claims already presented, with such as may be presented within the year. From fifteen to twenty thousand dollars will probably be enough.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
THOS. S. JESUP,
Quartermaster General.

Hon. J. B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Mr. HOUSTON. I modify the amendment so as to insert the words, "payable to the State of Texas for the benefit of the claimants."

Mr. HUNTER. Is not that a private claim?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the decision of the Chair, if that is not a private claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. "Is the amendment in order?"

Mr. HOUSTON. I will modify the amendment, and offer it in this form:

And be it further enacted, That $20,000 be appropriated to pay for timber used by the troops of the United States in constructing forts, and for other purposes; and to enable the Secretary of War to pay to the citizens of Texas entitled to the same, on the production of the proper proofs of their claims to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT put the question, and the Senate decided the amendment not to be in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I thought I was somewhat interested in matters here; but I do not know that I am. I should like to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance when my proposition will be in order, or when anything else will be?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, "Shall the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time?"

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill; and they were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I merely wish to state that for the first time in my life after ten years' service in Congress, I agreed to pair off with the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. HAMMOND,] taking it for granted that he would vote for the bill; I am against it. The condition was that, if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] was here and voted for it, I could vote; but neither of those Senators being here, I feel in honor bound to withhold my vote. This is the first time in my life I ever paired off, and it is the last time I shall ever do so. I desire it to be distinctly understood that I should vote against the bill if I were at liberty to do so.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clingman, Douglas, Fitch, Green, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Mallory, Pearce, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, and Yulee—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Collamer, Donnell, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—12.

So the bill was passed.

MAIL STEAMER BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move now to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. No. 558) making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1859; and we can adjourn upon it if the Senate choose.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. This is a bill which will occasion some debate; and if the Senate is in good humor, I have a little bill which may as well be passed to-night. It is an Indian deficiency bill, to supply a deficiency in the Indian appropriations on the Pacific coast. I think we can probably pass that to-night, if the Senate is so disposed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

A division being called for, the yeas were fourteen.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays. I wish to see who wants to stay here after nine o'clock at night.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division, there were—yeas 14, nays 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to adjourn is not agreed to; but there is not a quorum voting.

Mr. STUART. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 8, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NORTHERN SUPERINTENDENCY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimates of appropriations to enable the Department to preserve peace in the northern superintendency, &c.; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TREATY WITH THE SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimates of appropriations to enable the Department to fulfill the stipulations of an agreement made by General Harney with the Sioux, at Fort Pierre, in 1856; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

HARDY AND LONG.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the attention of the House to the following order:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill of the Senate for the relief of Joseph Hardy and Alton Long.

That bill was, by mistake, sent to the Senate as passed, whereas it never did pass this House.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I suppose the mistake occurred in consequence of my entering a motion to reconsider, with a view to bring the matter before the House, in order to have it passed. The same subject-matter was referred to the Committee of Claims, and the gentleman from Louisiana made a report in favor of giving the relief to Hardy and Long.

The resolution was adopted.

FEES TO MARSHALS, ETC., IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAIGE] proposed, yesterday, to report a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed marshals, district attorneys, clerks of courts, jurors, and witnesses in the State of California, and the Territories of Oregon and Washington. I ask the courtesy of the House to allow me a moment to make a remark in regard to it. On the 10th of January last, I introduced that bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but the time of that committee was so much occupied in the Watrous investigation that they were unable to report it. In 1853, Congress passed an act allowing fees to the district attorneys, marshals, jurors, &c., in the State of California, at the rate of one hundred per cent. over the fees allowed in the Atlantic States, up to 1855, and fifty per cent. between 1855 and 1857. Now, I have in my possession a letter from the marshal of the district, in which he tells me that he has lost $1,000 since he has been in that position. He is only allowed six cents per mile for traveling. Every one knows that there are no railroads in California, and that traveling has to be done with horses. The jurors are allowed but $1 50 a day, and five cents per mile; which is totally inadequate. The bill has received the unanimous sanction of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, then, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee on the Judiciary, House bill (No. 55) to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed to marshals, district attorneys, clerks of courts, jurors, and witnesses, in the State of California and the Territories of Oregon and Washington, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, officers, jurors, and witnesses, shall be allowed fifty per cent. increase on the fees and compensation allowed by the act approved February 26, 1853, entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the district and circuit courts of the United States, and for other purposes;" Provided, That the foregoing shall take effect from and after the 6th of February, 1857, when the special provision of said act for California and Oregon expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to know whether the Government pays the fees?

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. They will be paid precisely as they are paid in all other cases.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no objection to it if it comes under the general rule.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. The only difference is as to the amount.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be, and they are hereby, authorized to audit the accounts, settle with, and allow reasonable compensation to, all such persons as may have been actually employed in the service of the House of Representatives during the present session of Congress, and that all amounts so allowed by said committee shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury that may have been appropriated for miscellaneous or contingent expenses of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That said committee be, and they are hereby, instructed to report the number of officers of the Clerk, Door-keeper, Sergeant at Arms, and Postmaster of the House of Representatives, and what rates of compensation they may deem suitable and necessary to be paid to such clerks, messengers, and laborers, respectively; and that said committee be authorized at any time to report by bill or otherwise,

HARRIS AND MORGAN.

Mr. KELLY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to submit a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) authorizing the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the accounts of Harris & Morgan on principles of justice and equity.

The joint resolution was objected to the other day by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRIS,] but the case has been explained to him, and he withdraws his objection. I ask that the resolution and report may be read. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the fines and deductions imposed upon Harris & Morgan, late contractors on route No. 7851, from New Orleans to Indianola, via Galveston, Texas, and to settle the same upon principles of justice and equity; provided, that the said fines and deductions shall not be reduced below the pro rata pay of the contract.

The report was read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the bill.

Mr. KELLY. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion, as there is already a motion pending for that purpose.

CHARNER T. SCAIFE.

Mr. BOYCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 183) for the relief of Charner T. Scaife, administrator of Gilbert Stalker.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, objected.

IMPROVEMENT OF ST. MARY'S RIVER.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution S. No. 31. I wish to say in regard to it, that two years ago an appropriation was made for the improvement of the St. Mary's river. By the act making the appropriation the expenditure was confined to one particular channel in the river. This joint resolution makes no appropriation, but authorizes the Secretary of War to expend the money upon another channel, if, in his judgment, it shall be deemed advisable to do so.

No objection being made, the joint resolution (S. No. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the appropriation made July 8, 1856, upon such channel of St. Mary's river as he may select, was taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. WALBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OVERLAND MAILS TO CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to state to the House that I have not had the floor once this session. That my constituents have a right to be heard at least once in six months—and I have been here longer than that. If the Chair decides the question of privilege against me, I shall ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution to which there will be no objection, and on which there will be no debate.

Mr. MORGAN. Let it be read for information.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I will say that the time allowed to the contractors for carrying the mails from St. Joseph's, Missouri, to Placerville, California, is thirty-eight days, when thirty days is ample time to perform that service, and that increase of speed is of very great importance to a large section of the country.

The joint resolution was then read by its title, as follows:

Joint resolution in regard to carrying the United States mails from St. Joseph's, Missouri, and Placerville, California.

The resolution was read in extenso.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to the resolution.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I desire to say one word. There are two great mail routes across the continent to the Pacific ocean, one from Memphis which runs into California, at San Diego in the southern part of the State, and another from my district, which runs to Sacramento city. Upon the southern route the time is twenty-five days, but on the middle route, through the South Pass, the contractors have thirty-eight days. It is manifestly unjust to the central portions of the country that upon one route the mail should be carried in twenty-five days, when upon the other route it cannot be carried in less than thirty-eight days. It is so manifestly unjust that I did not expect that any gentleman would object to it. The contractors are begging to carry it in twenty-five days for an increase of pay, such as would be justified by the service.

Mr. HOUSTON. My objection was made because I thought this was a matter entirely within the control of the Department. Congress does not usually take charge of this subject, but leaves it to the discretion of the Department. That is the place for it. If the gentleman desires a shorter schedule of time and increase of speed, let him make application to the Postmaster General.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I will not impugn the motives of the Postmaster General, but I know there is one pet route—the southern route—on which the contract time is twenty-five days. The other starts from my district, and runs through to the center of population and of business of California, and connects directly with the routes to Oregon and Washington. This resolution is in accordance with the views of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House; and I personally carried a resolution to the Postmaster General, passed by the committee, but he refused to increase the speed. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the motion.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There is one motion to suspend the rules pending, made by the chairman of a select committee; but as the Chair does not see him present, he will entertain the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Senate amendments to the CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Fifty-first amendment:

SEC. 12. And he it further enacted, That so much of all acts and parts of acts as require or authorize the Postmaster General to publish notice of letting contracts to carry the mails in the respective States, in newspapers published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The act of 1825 authorizes the Postmaster General to advertise mail lettings in one paper at the seat of the Federal Government. The act of 1845 so modifies that act as to allow the publication in three newspapers at the seat of the Federal Government—in two of the papers having the largest circulation, and in one to be selected by the Postmaster General or Executive. The Senate amendment is to strike out all three. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment with the following amendment:

That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to give public notice in one newspaper published at the seat of Government of the United States, for at least twelve weeks before entering into any contract for carrying the mails; that such contract is intended to be made, and the day on which it is to be concluded, describing the places from, and to which such mail is to be conveyed, the time at which it is to be made up, and the day and hour at which it is to be delivered: Provided, That the charge for such publication shall not be higher than such as are paid by individuals for advertising in said paper.

My information is, that the Postmaster General publishes a pamphlet annually on the subject of mail lettings. That is issued but once, and is liable to be lost or mislaid. It would seem to be a matter of great convenience to the Department and to members to have the mail lettings published in one newspaper for twelve consecutive weeks. The question is between the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means to have them published in one paper, and the amendment of the Senate not to have them published in any.

Mr. HOWARD. I prefer that the amendment of the Senate should stand as it is. It seems to be conceded on all hands that the advertising of these proposals in the Washington papers is utterly useless, for the Department issues pamphlets on which bids are made. The majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, however, propose to continue these publications in one paper. Now, I think myself that that is altogether worse than nothing. If the whole are useless, the whole ought to be stricken out. To publish them in one paper is simply to bring them before one class of bidders to the exclusion of others. This will be not only useless, but unjust. Therefore, I hope that the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will not prevail, but that the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think it is wrong to have these advertisements published in three papers here; but I do think that it is right that we should have them published in one paper. These advertisements are published in the local papers throughout the district and State where the lettings are to be made; and the Department sends correct copies from here to these local papers. These copies are the more correct where you have them printed, than if manuscript copies had to be made.

Mr. HOWARD. That is accomplished by pamphlets.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am not aware that the pamphlets are printed for that purpose. I believe they are printed and sent principally to the postmasters and contractors. But these others are sent out to the different papers.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I will make a remark in this connection. During the examination of the select committee on printing, we had occasion to look into this very subject, and we learned from the Post Office Department, that although the advertisements were published by the papers, their most reliable information was disseminated through their special publications in the shape of pamphlets. They are sent to the postmasters and contractors in the section where the contracts are to be made. That, together with the local publications, furnishes all the information. Everybody who wants these pamphlets, gets them.

Mr. COLFAX. If it be in order I move the following amendment:

Provided, That said advertisement shall be published in the weekly edition of the newspaper published in Washington city, which has the largest number of weekly subscribers.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now.

The question being on the amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means to the Senate amendment,

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WALDRON and JOHN COCHRANE, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 80.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was then agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee rose informally; and a message was received from the Senate by Mr. DICKENS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of this House (No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

That the Senate had also passed a bill of the House (No. 199) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1859, with sundry amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, returning, in pursuance of the request of the House, the bill of the Senate (No. 193) for the relief of Joseph Hardy and Alton Long.

Also, that the Senate request the return of the bill of the House (No. 267) for the relief of Timothy O'Keefe, for the purpose of correcting an error.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was so ordered. The committee then resumed its session.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Fifty-second amendment of the Senate:

Sec. 13. And he it further enacted, That the line surveyed by John C. McCoy, in 1838, as the western boundary of the half-breed tract, specified in the tenth article of the treaty made between commissioners on the part of the United States and certain Indian tribes at Prairie du Chien, on the 15th of July, 1830, be, and the same is hereby established as the true western boundary of said tract.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment of the Senate is to restore an old line. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. In 1830 a treaty was negotiated with these Indians, fixing their western boundary line. That line was run in 1838 by Mr. McCoy. Within the last year—in 1857—a new line has been run, which makes a difference of some miles. I do not know exactly how many. The effect of the last line is to throw more territory into the Indian reservation. If this amendment is passed, it will take away land from the half-breeds and throw it into the public lands belonging to the General Government. It is said that persons have squatted along the line, and the effect of this amendment is to change the line surveyed in 1857, under the Government, and restore the old line of 1838.

Mr. FERGUSON. I will state to the House, that prior to the establishment of the new line in 1857, some sixty settlers had settled upon this land, now in dispute, and have made substantial improvements, and, in fact, one town of considerable importance has been built upon it. The Indian half-breeds, who are to be benefited by this land, are squandering the property that comes into their hands as fast as they acquire it. If this provision is not made for the relief of the bona fide settlers upon that land, speculators will derive the benefit of their improvements—improvements amounting, according to the evidence, to over seventy thousand dollars—made in perfect good faith, and in utter ignorance of there being any new line to be established or run.

Another thing: there is great uncertainty as to whether the old line is not really the true one—the one that should remain for all time. It is well known to western men that the Missouri river changes its course frequently, sometimes three quarters of a mile, or a mile, in the course of a few years. It is probable that, in 1838, they took the Missouri river as it then ran, and ran ten miles up the other river. I have no doubt that was the case, for there are indications that the river has changed its course, thus throwing out of Nebraska some lands which formerly belonged to her. Another thing: the Secretary of the Interior says, the number of Indians, or half-breeds, who will derive benefit from these lands, will be diminished; so that each one entitled under the treaty, will receive his quota, and will receive as much as was originally intended. I will say that this whole matter has received the deliberate consideration of a committee in the other end of the Capitol. They acted upon it advisedly, with all the information derived from the Department, and I believe they acted rightly.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend by striking out the words "by General McCoy, in 1838," and insert in lieu thereof "in 1857." When this proposition came into the Committee of Ways and Means, we endeavored to procure information in regard to it. And in that search I procured information from the Secretary of the Interior, at a subsequent time, concerning the amendment now under consideration. As I understand the facts of the case, they are these: by the treaty made with these Christian Indians, they were to be entitled to a tract of country ten miles wide and thirty-five miles in length. When this line was run, an error was committed; and in 1857, the Department of the Interior, upon its own motion, and for the purpose of doing justice to these Indians, directed the line to be properly run by their own officers, and it was then run as it now appears on the plat before the House.

I am informed further by the Secretary of the Interior, that at the time the line was run in 1857, there were no settlers upon those lands, but that they had gone on to the land since, knowing where the line was; that they had settled between the line run in 1857 and the original line. It does seem to me that every principle of fairness and justice to every Indian tribe demands that we should execute the treaty in good faith; we should give them a true and accurate boundary, embracing all the land we designed to convey in the arrangement of the treaty between them and us. If there were settlers on the land, they had no rights there, having gone there with their eyes open. If they chose to do so, and a loss overtakes them, it is their own fault; and this Government should not assume the burden, and entail upon us the expense of giving them this land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FERGUSON. The gentleman from Virginia, as well as the Secretary of the Interior, if the gentleman from Virginia reports him truly, are both mistaken. I believe the Secretary of the Interior was never in Nebraska. It happens to have been my fortune to reside there for the last four years, and I know from personal observation that there were from forty to sixty settlers upon that reserve, or living close up to the line, as established in 1838, prior to the new line being run. I know the fact, because I was there when the new line was run, and I know the perturbation into which the settlers were thrown when they saw the Government surveyors establishing that new line. Therefore, if the argument of the gentleman from Virginia and the information of the Secretary of the Interior are based upon the supposition that there were no settlers there, they fail, because they are not founded upon facts. There were settlers there, and they went there two years before the line was run, and they went there in utter ignorance that any change was contemplated. If any remuneration is to be made, is it better to remunerate the Indians, or the white settlers who have made $70,000 of substantial improvements upon that land?

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not prevail.

[Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes.]

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. For the purpose of saying a word or two, I move to amend by inserting the words "Secretary being directed to ascertain the true line according to the stipulation of the treaty."

I wish to corroborate what my colleague on the committee [Mr. LETCHER] has said in reference to the Secretary of the Interior. The information from the Secretary of the Interior was, that there were no settlements upon the land between the two lines, so far as he was informed, until after the establishment of this new line. The settlements have been made since that time. If the facts are as my friend from Nebraska has stated, what harm can ensue to the landholders by calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to have the treaty line ascertained? If the line of 1857 is wrong, why not have it resurveyed? why not ascertain where the line is? The Secretary can correct the error if it is wrong; and if it be right it ought to stand. I hope the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means will prevail.

Mr. CURTIS. I have never been on this land, but I have been in the vicinity, and I know that the reservation is regarded as the most desirable land in that corner of Nebraska. I know that the trouble was to keep the white people from going on to the reservation itself, and therefore I am convinced of the correctness of the statement of the Delegate from Nebraska—that the white people occupy up to the line which was formerly run and known.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman allow me to put a question to him? Is it not reasonable to suppose that if the surveyor, sent out there by the Secretary of the Interior, found settlements on the land, he would have reported that fact?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not at all likely that he would have done so, for it was a matter of general notoriety. I am confident, without seeing the ground, that the white settlements would have encroached as closely as possible on it, long before 1857. The settlements in Nebraska commenced in 1853-54; and that section of Nebraska being the most desirable, was certainly settled; so that I am confident, without having ever seen the ground, that the statement of the Delegate is true. The Indians and settlers both recognized the old survey that was marked out.

It seems to me now, that the only wise and proper way to act would be to permit the settlers to retain that which they settled upon, and to indemnify the Indians for their loss by this error of the Department, arising from an erroneous survey. Many of them have been settled there for years, and have acted on the presumption that the Department had caused the proper line to be run. It is always easier to compensate the Indians than white men, although I would have equal justice done to both. If you do not indemnify the Indians, you will have to indemnify the persons who will be deprived of their homes. It seems to me that, in common justice, the settlers ought to have their rights established by Congress.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES withdrew his amendment.

The question recurring on Mr. LETCHER's amendment to the amendment,

Mr. LETCHER withdrew it.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend by striking out the last four lines. The object I have in view is two-fold. The first is, to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if the establishment of this line will not add very much to this particular reservation?

Mr. LETCHER. That is the information we have.

Mr. COBB. I have some information in respect to the reservation. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CURTIS] says, this is one of the finest tracts of land the sun now shines upon. I am very well acquainted with the management of that reservation, and with the persons who have been connected in procuring it from the Indians.

I am well aware that if the old boundary should not stand as contemplated by the amendment of the Committee of Ways and Means, it would cut off a large amount of territory to be given to the Indians, and thereby affect a very large body of speculators who have gone on that reservation and bought up these Indian claims. Whether they have paid a valuable consideration or not, it is not for me to say. I know that I should like to get some of them, and pay five hundred per cent. profit upon the prices paid for them. If the old line is established, it cuts off these speculations. I know the honesty of purpose of my friend from Nebraska, and I appreciate his zeal in protecting the interests of his constituents; but I am sure that if the old line were established it would affect a great deal of these speculative operations. The land outside of this old line must necessarily become public land, and be brought into market; and the speculators who have procured claims within the boundary will lose the benefit of their trade with the Indian tribes. That is about the whole of it. I do not think it necessary to make any further statement about it.

[Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. No. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the appropriation made July 8, 1856, upon such channel of the St. Mary's river as he may select; when the Speaker signed the same.]

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama will be voted down; that the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means will prevail; and that the amendment of the Senate will be non-concurred in. I do not intend to decide upon the justice of these claims, on one side or the other; but I do object to a class of private rights like this, between the Indians on the one hand and speculators on the other, being settled by an amendment in an appropriation bill, without knowing anything about the facts. It is a wrong method; and, if we were to follow it up, and apply it to all subjects, we might supersede the necessity for all courts, and undertake to render justice between private parties in all cases.

I object to the amendment, without any reference to its merits, because it is a wrong principle of legislation; and I hope it will not be concurred in.

Mr. COBB. I withdraw the amendment. My object was to get the facts before the House.

The question recurring upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. LETCHER. If the Chair will indulge me, let me state the question in another way. Those in favor of establishing the line of 1838 will vote "ay," and those in favor of the line of 1857 will vote "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The only question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Messrs. CURTIS and KELSEY were appointed tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes two, noes not counted.

So the amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

Fifty-third amendment:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That all the ruling and binding for the several Executive Departments shall be executed by practical and competent bookbinders, to be appointed by the head of the Department.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment proposes to take the binding and ruling out of the charge and custody of the heads of the Departments, or to limit them in directing who shall do the work. That is all I know about it. It proposes to change the law in respect to the binding and ruling of public documents. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

Mr. NICHOLS. I hope the amendment of the Senate will be concurred in. The only objection I have to it is, that it does not go far enough, and limit it to those who have actually been engaged in the business for some time. It is well known that for some time past the habit has grown up here of giving the ruling and binding to persons who are not actually engaged in the trade. I know of one instance during the last Congress where a very large contract had been let, which was sublet to two or three other persons. It was let to persons who were not engaged in the business; this amendment is designed to remedy that system, and is right itself. It ought to go further; but there are bills pending before the House which are intended to carry the principle further, and I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "binding." I desire to say that I entirely concur in the remarks of my colleague on the select committee on printing. This question was examined by the select committee, and we ascertained that the work could be done, as proposed by the amendment of the Senate, for at least forty or fifty per cent. less than it is now done. The correspondence which we had with the Coast Survey Office—which is to be found upon page 4 of the report of the committee—shows that the work could be done for about fifty per cent. less. I will state that this plan has already been adopted in the Treasury Department. They now employ a binder at eighteen dollars a week, and a boy, as assistant, at fifteen dollars a week, to do the binding of the Treasury Department; and experience has shown that they can do it for from forty to fifty per cent. less, and can do it much better than they could have it done under the old system. It appears, from the letter of Hon. Jacob Thompson, which will be found on pages 4 and 5 of the report of the committee, that it can be done for much less; and not only that, but that it can be done much better. Under the amendment of the Senate you can have the work done for the lowest possible price. If the old system is to be continued for the purpose of feeding hungry politicians and speculators about Washington, then let us vote down the amendment. The amendment of the Senate is one step in the right direction, and I hope it will be concurred in. I now withdraw my amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Fifty-fourth amendment:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States cause the sum of $3,000 to be advanced to Clark Mills, in addition to the sum already advanced, out of the $50,000 appropriated by the act of January 23, 1853, to erect, at the capital of the nation, an equestrian statue of Washington, on the personal application and receipt of the said Mills: Provided, That the said Mills furnish the Secretary of the Interior with security for the completion of the statue as the Secretary may require.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. By an act passed in 1853, $50,000 was appropriated to Clark Mills to make an equestrian statue of General Washington. Twenty-five thousand dollars were advanced to him, and the remaining $25,000 was to be paid upon the completion of the work. It so happened that, after the payment of $25,000, he lost his models by fire, and he makes application to Congress to allow him $6,000 more out of the remaining $25,000. The Senate have put it in, and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I am opposed to this amendment upon principle. In it we have another instance of the habit of the Senate of loading down appropriation bills with private claims which cannot be introduced into such bills in the House. The House has cut itself off by a rule from putting upon appropriation bills private claims, however meritorious and just they may be. These bills go to the Senate, and the Senate, having less constitutional power over appropriation bills than we have, load them down with amendments for purposes which we, by our rules, have precluded ourselves from offering in the House.

This bill is a striking instance of the custom I have referred to. As reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, it appropriated $3,819,000. The bill, as it went from the House, appropriated only $2,849,000. The House cut down the report of their committee $1,000,000, and, in my judgment, they ought to have been cut down more than that. Two millions are sufficient to pay all the civil expenses embraced in this bill. We sent it in that way to the Senate, and it comes back loaded down with specific amendments to the amount of $2,990,000, and in addition to that they have put upon it additional indefinite appropriations amounting to about three millions more; so that the bill which we have sent to them, appropriating $2,849,000, is sent back to us appropriating $5,844,000 specifically, and in indefinite sums $3,000,000 more.

We ought not to tolerate this thing. We ought not to allow the Senate to put upon the bill private claims, and compel us to vote upon such claims without examination, and upon the penalty of defeating the entire bill. We cannot even read them. They are not printed, nor laid before the House. The only information we have of them, is what we gather from their hurried reading at the Clerk's desk, in the hubbub which exists here at this stage of the session. I am opposed to this course of proceeding, as we know nothing about these amendments, and have no opportunity to investigate them. The only safe way is to vote against them, and confine the appropriation bills strictly to the legitimate, current expenses of the Government. In this way only we can correct the reckless course of the Senate.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment, and it was not concurred in.

Fifty-fifth amendment:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of State, be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, upon principles of equity and justice, the accounts of I. D. Andrews, late agent of the United States in connection with the reciprocity treaty, and that the same be paid according to said adjustment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-sixth amendment:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That when, in the absence of a secretary of legation at Constantinople, who discharges the duty of dragoman, or in like manner when there is no dragoman at that mission, the consul, or consul general, of the United States shall act as dragoman, he shall receive the compensation now provided by law for a dragoman, and for such time as he shall act as such.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment of the Senate belongs to that class of cases which provide for the payment of subordinate officers when they fill the place of their chief. We have had this case under consideration for a number of years. The effect of it is to increase, to some extent, the compensation, and the Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence. The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That the collectors of customs in the several collection districts, be, and they are hereby, and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the construction of custom-houses, court-houses, post offices, and marine hospitals, at such compensation, not exceeding one fourth of one per cent as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem equitable and just: And provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work herein specified, the superintendent of such public work shall act as disbursing agent without any additional compensation therefor; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment is one of the incidents which have grown out of the system of internal improvements of this Government in the building of custom-houses, the extension of the Capitol, and other public buildings, &c. This has created a class of officers called disbursing officers. They do not exist by statute law, but are incident to the policy of the Government. A great many of them have been suspended. Among the many objectionable things which the Senate have done, the Committee of Ways and Means think this is a very good provision. It imposes upon the collectors of customs the duty of disbursing the funds necessary for the erection of the several classes of buildings specified in the amendment, allowing them a commission not to exceed one fourth of one per cent.; and, in cases where there are no collectors, it devolves the duty upon the superintendent of the buildings. The committee recommend a concurrence.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso. My reason for submitting the amendment is, that the superintendents of the public works of the description specified in the amendment ought not to be disbursing officers, for reasons set forth by the chief of the bureau of construction, Major Bowman, which I desire to have read; and in which, I feel authorized to say, the Secretary of the Treasury fully concurs.

The letter was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF CONSTRUCTION,
TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 8, 1858.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of this date, I have to say that the first portion of the proviso relative to disbursing agents to which you allude, providing that at ports where collectors or surveyors are commissioned, there shall be no separate disbursing agent employed, but the collector be, ex officio, disbursing agent, meets the full concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is a desirable and proper change of the existing practice, and will conduce to the more economical disbursements upon public works.

The remainder of the proviso directing that, at places where there are no collectors the superintendents shall be disbursing agents, is deemed objectionable. To have the superintendent who is, more or less, occupied in directing and making purchases for the work, made also the payer of bills he creates, would open a door for collusion, upon which there could be but little check, make greater liability for errors, and destroy all the safeguards which a separation of these offices has hitherto established. The superintendent is often a practical mechanic only, whose services are secured because he is so, and because his duties require such fitness, but who is inexperienced in accounts, and the method of keeping them; and additional help would be necessary to enable him to keep his accounts in proper shape to be adjusted by the accounting officers. For these and many other reasons, I deem such a change, as the last clause of the proviso directs, to be inexpedient, and likely to prove of bad economy in working. In my judgment, it would be far better to leave the appointment of disbursing agents, where there are no collectors, discretionary with the Secretary, who then would be governed in each case by the circumstances which attended it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. H. BOWMAN,

Engineer in charge Treasury Department.

Hon. J. D. BRIGHT, Senate Chamber.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not perceive any justice at all in the provision made by this section. Why you should give one fourth of one per cent. to the collector for doing this duty, and should refuse to give it to the disbursing agent where there is no collector, passes my comprehension. I do not understand it. I see no reason why any such thing should be done; and I think the whole of it should be struck out.

The question was taken on Mr. HUGHES's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

[The committee here informally rose, and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKENS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a resolution changing the time for the adjournment of Congress.]

The committee again resumed its session. Mr. HUGHES. I move to strike out the whole amendment. I merely wish to call the attention of the House to this proviso, which I particularly desire to have stricken out. The amendment provides that, where there are collectors, Government officers, already appointed, there shall be no disbursing agent. To that I make no objection. But the amendment further goes on and states in this proviso, that where there are no collectors of customs, then the superintendent who is appointed to have control of public buildings shall be the disbursing agent. This is objectionable. It is improper to combine the duties of a disbursing agent and the duties of a superintendent, because the one officer is intended to be a guard upon the other. That is the view taken of it by the chief of the bureau of construction. Therefore, it seems to me that the whole amendment had better be non-concurred in, rather than that it should be adopted with this proviso. It will lead to more mischief than it will cure.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken on Mr. HUGHES's amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the Senate amendment.

Tellers were demanded and ordered.

Mr. GARNETT. I move to add these words: Provided, The compensation shall not exceed ten dollars a day.

My object in making this motion is merely to have an opportunity to state facts which seem to me conclusive in favor of the amendment. This amendment was moved in the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. It was agreed to by the leading men of all parties as being eminently just and proper, and calculated to correct a great abuse that exists in the management of these public buildings. At New Orleans, for instance, there are three public buildings in course of construction—the repairs of the mint, the erection of a custom-house, and the erection of a marine hospital. Major Beauregard, of the topographical engineers, is employed as the superintendent of the custom-house. He receives his pay as officer of topographical engineers, and also his pay of ten dollars a day as superintendent. To that I do not object. Then Mr. Duncan superintends the marine hospital, and the mint, at eight dollars per day. To that I do not object. But they employ also disbursing agents. There is one disbursing agent, Mr. Penn, who superintends the work on the custom-house, at sixteen dollars a day, and another, Mr. La Sere, who superintends the work on the mint, at eight dollars a day; and the same gentleman disburses for the marine hospital at eight dollars a day, making an aggregate of sixteen dollars a day for this duty.

Mr. EUSTIS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to correct him. I am satisfied that it is not his purpose to do injustice to one of the gentlemen he has named. Mr. La Sere, as I understand, and as it has since been ascertained at the Department, does not receive, as the gentleman from Virginia has stated, double compensation—eight dollars a day for one disbursement and eight dollars a day for another disbursement. He receives eight dollars a day, and acts in the double capacity of disbursing agent for the repairs of the United States mint and the marine hospital now in course of erection in the city of New Orleans. I understand, also, that this last appointment was urged upon Mr. La Sere when on a visit to this city, a heavy bond required, and he has been acting as disbursing agent for the marine hospital without any additional compensation.

Mr. GARNETT. I do not desire to cast the slightest reflection upon Mr. Penn or upon Mr. La Sere for taking office under the Government and receiving compensation; but, in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, you will find a list of these officers, and it is there stated as I have given it to the House. It may be that there is a mistake in the report, that Mr. La Sere receives eight dollars a day as disbursing agent for one work and eight dollars a day for the other, making sixteen dollars a day in the aggregate.

Mr. EUSTIS. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. This is a matter of fact and figures, and can be readily ascertained. Mr. La Sere receives only eight dollars a day, and he acts in a double capacity, receiving compensation only for one office.

Mr. GARNETT. Then there is a mistake in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. But be that as it may, it is wrong to pay eight dollars a day for the discharge of these functions by disbursers of public revenue when you have a sub-Treasurer and collector there. This amendment cuts off these sinecures and will save a considerable amount of money.

Mr. SANDIDGE. The amendment of the Senate proposes to remedy the very evil of which the gentleman from Virginia complains, by doing away with these disbursing agents; and I hope the House will concur in it.

Mr. GARNETT. I withdraw my amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of this House of the following titles:

An act (No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin;

An act (No. 530) for the relief of Stephen Fellows;

An act (No. 523) for the relief of Wyatt Griffith;

An act (No. 516) for the relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois;

An act (No. 515) granting an invalid pension to Alexander F. Bean, of Pennsylvania;

An act (No. 514) granting an invalid pension to Conrad Schroeder;

An act (No. 512) for the relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee; and

An act (No. 462) granting an invalid pension to James Fugate, of Missouri.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The committee then resumed its session.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate, by striking out the proviso, and inserting the following in lieu thereof:

Provided, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work herein specified, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, appoint a disbursing agent.

Mr. Chairman, it does appear to me that this House ought not to make the superintendent of a public building also the disbursing agent. The very object of having a superintendent and a disbursing agent is that one may be a check upon the other. Now, I fully concur in the first part of the amendment which provides that the collector of customs shall be the disbursing officer, wherever there is a collector of customs; but where there is none, it is necessary that the disbursing officer shall be a different person from the superintendent who has charge of the construction of the work. The nature of the duties of the superintendent is such that he and the disbursing officer occupy antagonistic positions, and the duties of the two offices ought not to be imposed upon the same person. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be agreed to. It does not make it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a disbursing agent where there is no collector, but it leaves it discretionary with him to appoint one where he thinks it necessary.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I know that I am in a minority here; but I avail myself of the opportunity of speaking in opposition to this amendment, to give the reasons which govern me in my action upon this question.

This amendment of the Senate proposes to concentrate in the hands of the collector the disbursements of the public moneys; and it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to allow the collector a quarter of one per cent. upon the entire amount of public money disbursed in the erection of public buildings in his district. My opinion is that a quarter of one per cent. upon the outlay would more than pay the salaries now paid to the disbursing agents; and my opinion is that if you give the collector the privilege of disbursing this money, you will not thereby dispense with the necessity of having the same duties performed by some other person, in addition to the superintendence, as you now have. The superintendent of the work supervises the design and architectural execution of the work. His hands go to the disbursing agent to be paid. Is it intended that the collector of New York, for instance, shall pay off the hands employed upon the public works in that city; that they shall go to the custom-house on Saturday night to receive their weekly wages? Or is it the calculation that when you impose this duty on the collector, he shall appoint some one else to discharge the very duty that you propose to devolve upon him by law? I do not believe that you will economize by allowing a percentage upon the gross outlay that you make upon your public buildings; and I would rather have the disbursements made by some man who would act as a direct check upon the superintendent, by coming in direct contact with the men who do the work.

The question was taken on Mr. HUGHES's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I move to amend the Senate amendment by striking out the word "collectors," and inserting the words, "assistant treasurers." I have but a word or two to say in behalf of that amendment; but they shall be directed to the policy of the law as it already exists, and is applied. The policy of the law, as I understand it, was inaugurated by what is called the sub-Treasury act. It was through the instrumentality of that act that all disbursements were taken from the hands of subordinate officers and lodged in the hands of fiscal officers, denominated "sub-treasurers," wherever located. That system prevails now throughout the Union, and the moneys which may come into the hands of the collectors are placed in the hands of the sub-treasurers, and the collectors and all subordinate officers, including surveyors and naval officers, are obliged to check upon the assistant treasurers for the moneys which they disburse to their employes.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. There are but about four assistant treasurers of the United States, and this bill is to provide a disbursing officer wherever there is a collector; and where there is no collector, to make a disbursing officer of the superintendent in charge of the building.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. That I understand, and it is to apply the principle which was established by the sub-Treasury act that I introduced the amendment and argue against the principle of the Senate amendment which is sent to us for consideration. If we are to take that amendment of the Senate we take a step backwards, and return to the system which the sub-Treasury act was intended to explode. I think, therefore, that wherever there is a sub-treasurer to be found, it should be part of his office to disburse the moneys of the Government. And if such an officer is not to be found at any particular point, the principle which established sub-treasurers at various points, ought to be further applied in the establishment of special disbursing officers, rather than put the funds of the receiving and disbursing officers in one and the same hand. I hope, therefore, that my amendment will be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the Senate, I desire to avail myself, in part, of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES,] and voted down, radically changing, however, his proposition, by an addition which I make to it. I move to strike out the proviso, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That where there is no collector of customs at the place of location of any of the public buildings herein specified, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, appoint a disbursing agent, who shall receive one fourth of one per cent. upon all sums disbursed by him, in full for his services.

I suppose there can be no well-founded objection to this proposition. It is merely to appoint a disbursing agent, in the absence of any collector, and to give him, in full compensation for his services, the same amount of compensation which would have gone to the collector, had there been one. Its excellence consists in the fact that one officer acts upon the other as a check. There can be no necessity that both duties should be discharged by one and the same individual. By devolving the duties upon two officers, you impose restraints upon the action of each. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to amend the Senate amendment, by striking out the amount of fees named in the amendment, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not allow more than one fourth of one per cent. of the sum expended by the disbursing agent of the Government, to any disbursing agent connected with any public work in the process of erection.

My amendment will bring the committee to a vote between a disbursing agent and a collector, and afford the committee an opportunity to determine whether, where the compensation is the same, they desire to throw the disbursements into the hands of a collector instead of leaving them in the hands of persons appointed by the Government to act as a direct check upon the superintendent, whose business it will be to look to the manner in which the superintendent progresses with the work. I do not perceive, I do not understand, why it is that gentlemen who are connected with the Ways and Means Committee, and why it is that the Senate propose to throw these large duties upon the collectors; why the collector at New Orleans and the collector at New York, in addition to the immense patronage and immense compensation that each receives, should be, by force of this law, invested with the right to one quarter of one per cent. upon all funds that are disbursed for public works within their districts. I would rather follow the more democratic plan of having the money which we spent divided out among a number of persons drawing moderate salaries, and whose responsibilities are more direct, than to have it all piled on the collectors, who are always mere politicians, in these large seaboard towns. Take my own town. Take Cincinnati. Why should we take away from the men who are now the disbursing agents of the Government the compensation they receive, and pay it to the collectors of these ports, provided the disbursing agents are willing to perform their duties at exactly the same rate of compensation? I see no reason for it. If the Secretary does his duty, he will always have it in his power to remove a man who cannot keep his accounts right. I suppose that he requires that the accounts shall come up to him in due form, and that the vouchers shall be all regularly presented. I presume the process of accountability is perfect, so that for every dollar of the money drawn by these disbursing agents from the Treasury, they are required to file vouchers. I cannot see how putting the matter in the hands of collectors is going to effect anything in the way of economy, and I do not think it will do anything in the way of efficiency.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. My friend from Kentucky seems to be rather puzzled to understand the movements of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not think that that is any wonder.

Mr. LETCHER. Now, I had not supposed that he would be one of the gentlemen who would be advocating an enlargement of Federal patronage; but it seems that this is exactly the point to which he is coming now. His whole speech was directed to that end. He wants to know why it is, when you give the collector a salary for the discharge of his duty, you should assign to him at the same time the duty of disbursing agent in regard to the erection of public buildings. Now, if there was no other reason for it, the simple reason that it diminishes the number of employes, ought to be a sufficient reason with him.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not the advantage of diminishing the number of employes more than counterbalanced by concentrating a vast amount of influence in the hands of one man?

Mr. LETCHER. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely wild to talk about a vast amount of influence in the hands of a collector, because he is made a disbursing agent. The patronage which he bestows as a collector, is a patronage worth talking about; but in regard to this other matter of disbursing public funds, all he has to do is to keep an account of them. I see no patronage in that.

Mr. HUGHES. However wild it may be, does not the collector have the same amount of money to disburse under the proposed change, as the disbursing agent now has? and yet the gentleman from Virginia finds fault with the gentleman from Kentucky, and charges him with advocating an increase of offices and patronage.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it an increase of patronage for A to pay B, when C would have to do the same thing?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is it within the contemplation of the gentleman from Virginia that the collector will personally perform this duty?

Mr. LETCHER. If he does not perform it he will have to get another person to perform it, without additional compensation.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. He will have a person to fulfill the duty of disbursing agent, who will be paid; and you will gratify the collector with your percentage, while he will have a disbursing agent under him working patiently for low wages, who will become the tool of the collector.

Mr. LETCHER. If the collector has a disbursing agent under him who understands his business, I think that disbursing agent will be better than one who does not understand his business.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. But the Secretary of the Treasury ought only to appoint one who does, understand it.

Mr. LETCHER. When the Secretary of the Treasury appoints a collector as disbursing agent he appoints a man who not only understands the business devolving on him as collector, but one who has some knowledge of the mode of keeping accounts; but when you appoint a superintendent you appoint a man who has a knowledge of mechanics, and not one who has a knowledge of accounts. That is a material difference.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The gentleman does not mean to produce the impression here that the superintendent is the disbursing agent?

Mr. LETCHER. I understand that he is. But what does the gentleman want to have? He wants the Secretary of the Treasury to go around and hunt up somebody who is to be the disbursing agent. Now, what is the use of it? Here is the collector, who is familiar with these duties, who can discharge them without inconvenience, and without imposing additional expense on the Government, who has capacity and experience to discharge the duties; and yet, when the Government is not to be saddled with additional expense, the gentleman proposes to send out on a mission to hunt up somebody else, who, he thinks, may discharge them as well.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EUSTIS. I do not understand, nor does any gentleman on this side understand, that there is any complaint at all as to the character of these disbursing officers. I heard the whole debate on the subject in the Senate, and the great objection made was as to the expense. Now, I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to remove that objection by providing for paying to the disbursing officers the same amount proposed to be paid to the collectors—one fourth of one per cent.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the debate will go on regularly; and that if the gentleman from Louisiana be allowed to make a speech, I will have a right to reply.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment, on which tellers were ordered.

Messrs. MARSHALL of Kentucky, and TAYLOR of New York, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes one hundred and eleven, noes not counted. So the amendment was concurred in.

Fifty-eighth amendment:

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the twenty-fourth section of the civil and diplomatic act of March 3, 1855, by paying the claims on file as ordered for assessment by Messrs. Eaton and Hubley, and Washington and Mason, commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835, there be appropriated $30,000.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. The objection to it is, that, while former payments under this Cherokee treaty have been made in accordance with the assessments, this is a proposition to pay claims ordered to be assessed.

Mr. BRANCH. I am glad to find that the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, that this amendment be non-concurred in, is founded on a total mistake, as I will show to the committee by reading from the act that it is proposed to carry out. I will state, however, before reading it, that this amendment of the Senate is to carry out an express, explicit provision of a law passed by Congress in 1855. There is a remnant of the Cherokee Indians remaining in the western part of North Carolina. In 1835 or 1836, the Government made a treaty with the Indians by which it became possessed of a large body of valuable lands. In 1845 or 1846, I believe, a supplementary treaty was made, providing, together with the original treaty, for certain payments to be made to the Indians for their reservations and for other purposes. In 1848, an act was passed directing those provisions to be carried out, and they were carried out, and a portion of the claims were paid. In 1854, Congress passed another law, under which another portion of the claims were paid. In 1855, Congress passed another act, which I will read:

"Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That the tenth section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, approved July 31, 1854, be carried into effect by paying the valuations ascertained and reported by Messrs. Upton and Summey, and other official assessors, as ordered by the commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835 and 1836, with interest on said valuations, respectively, from the date of the said commissioners' orders for assessment; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to fill the blanks in such awards as are on his files with such amounts, respectively, as may be established by proof of value satisfactory to him, and pay the same."

That act recognized the debt to these poor Indians; but, as it contained no appropriation, the Secretary of the Interior was unable to comply with the order of Congress. The amendment now under consideration proposes simply to make an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out this act of 1855. If there can be a claim on this Government that is sanctioned by law, if there can be one that needs no further examination, certainly this is such a claim. It is established by two treaties solemnly entered into by this Government with these ignorant savages, and sanctioned by two laws of Congress, recognizing the debt and providing for the payment of the largest part of it. If that is not sufficient to establish the justice and propriety of Congress making the small appropriation necessary to pay the remainder of the claimants, then I cannot see how a claim could be established. All the large claims have been paid. The former appropriations of Congress were exhausted in paying the larger claims. The small sum now asked is due, I am informed, to the poor and more dependent part of that tribe. These Indians are in the western part of North Carolina, and are located in the district lately represented by a gentleman who now occupies a seat at the other end of the Capitol. I am informed that they are needy, and that their claims are just; and on looking into the statutes and treaties of the country, I find that they have been time and again sanctioned in the most solemn manner.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the sum of $30,000. My information in relation to the matter is, that under the act of 1855 these Indians have been already paid everything which was due them.

Now, let us look at the language of that act. It is as follows:

"That the tenth section of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, approved July 31, 1854, be carried into effect by paying the valuations ascertained and reported by Messrs. Upton and Summey, and other official assessors, as ordered by the commissioners under the Cherokee treaty of 1835 and 1836, with interest on said valuations, respectively, from the date of the said commissioners' orders for assessment; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to fill the blanks in such awards as are on his files with such amounts, respectively, as may be established by proof of value satisfactory to him, and pay the same."

The property had been valued, and the Government of the United States undertook to pay the assessed valuation as furnished to the Department; and wherever the amount was not specifically carried out in dollars and cents, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized, where there had been a specific valuation and assessment, upon proof of that fact, to fill up the blanks. Now, that law has been executed and the money has been paid under it. What is proposed here?

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the twenty-fourth section of the civil and diplomatic act of March 3, 1855."

the very act I have been reading,

"by paying the claims on file as ordered for assessment by Messrs. Eaton and Hubley."

Now the assessors named in the act of 1855, were Messrs. Upton and Summey. All applications on file ordered to be assessed are to be paid under this amendment. Sir, I ask if there is not a very material difference between the two, and whether, when you have paid out the $30,000 provided here under the indefinite terms of this clause of the law, you may not be in for twice, or thrice thirty thousand dollars? That is the reason why the Committee of Ways and Means was against it. We maintain that we have paid all. We made inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior, and he told us that, if this amendment were adopted, it would be impossible to tell what amount we would have to pay.

Mr. BRANCH. The gentleman from Virginia states that the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1855 has been executed, and that he has been so informed by the Secretary of the Interior. I ask the gentleman how it could have been executed when it contained no appropriation? The twenty-fourth section of that act simply sanctions and recognizes that as a debt upon the Government in favor of these Indians. It contained no appropriation, and I am informed, as a matter of fact—for I have no personal knowledge about the matter—that the Secretary of the Interior has, within a very short time, stated to a gentleman more immediately interested in the passage of this amendment, a former Representative from that district, that the act had not been executed because there was no appropriation.

Mr. LETCHER. Let me interrupt the gentleman just here, and I can put an end to the whole argument. If he will look to the close of the section he will find this language:

"With such amounts respectively as may be established by proof of value satisfactory to him, and pay the same."

Mr. BRANCH. Does the gentleman state within his knowledge that that section carries an appropriation, and that it has been paid?

Mr. LETCHER. It is my understanding that the act has been executed, and that the names of Upton and Summey in this amendment, and the names of Eaton and Hubley in the other amendment, show that they are not the same cases at all.

Mr. BRANCH. All I can say is, that my information is totally different. It is that the act has not been executed, and that it has not been executed because there was no appropriation. But one thing we know beyond doubt; and that is, that if we make this appropriation, and it shall turn out that the money has been already paid, the Secretary of the Interior will not pay it again, and it will return into the surplus fund in due course of law. How the discrepancy happens between the statement of the gentleman from Virginia and that of the gentleman from whom I derived my information, I cannot tell.

Mr. LETCHER, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifty-ninth amendment:

And be it further enacted, &c., That there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles H. Mason, Secretary of the Territory of Washington, the difference between the salary of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs, and the salary of the Secretary of the Territory of Washington, for the time said Charles H. Mason was acting Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs of said Territory.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. This amendment is intended to make the salary of the Secretary of the Territory of Washington, while acting as Governor ad interim, equal to the salary of Governor and superintendent of Indian affairs. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixtieth amendment:

And be it further enacted, &c., That the salary of the surveyor general of Washington Territory shall be $3,500 a year from the commencement of the present fiscal year; and there is hereby appropriated so much as may be required for that purpose.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The present salary of that officer is $3,000. This amendment proposes to make it $3,500. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Sixty-first amendment:

And be it further enacted, &c., That in all cases of judgments and decrees in any territorial court of the United States now rendered, or hereafter to be rendered, and from which there might be a writ of error or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, there may be presented such writ of error or appeal, within the time and under the restrictions limited by law, to said Supreme Court, notwithstanding such Territory may, after such judgments and decrees, have been admitted into the United States; and said Supreme Court shall, when the same is decided, direct a mandate to such court as the nature of the writ of error or appeal, in their judgment, may require.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Considerable difficulty has arisen in consequence of the suspension of judicial proceedings in Territories, in consequence of their admission into the Union as States. The Senate propose, by this amendment, to allow these judicial proceedings to proceed in the same order, as far as appeals, &c., are concerned, as they would have done had the Territories not been admitted into the Union as States. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in. ✓

Sixty-second amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to continue, down to the 4th of March, 1859, the compilation of the congressional documents published by Congress, under the name of "American State Papers," in the same manner as the first series thereof, under the authority of the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, and the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1833, and with the same particular index to each class, and a general index to the work; and the said Secretary and Clerk are hereby directed to contract with Gales & Seaton, the publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior, as the same may be published; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall place three hundred copies in the Department of State for its use, and for exchange with foreign Governments, and seven hundred copies in his own Department, for distribution to public libraries in the several States and Territories, and hold the residue of the copies in his custody, subject to the future direction of Congress: Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress, including paper and binding, having regard to the quality and value of the material used, and work done.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Under the act of 1832, and a subsequent joint resolution, provision was made for the publication of the State Papers from 1789 up to 1824 inclusive. This amendment of the Senate proposes to continue that publication from 1824 up to 1859, inclusive. It is supposed that it would require about fifty volumes; and the limitation here is to two thousand copies of each volume. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate; because, however important it may be to have that publication continued at a proper cost, there is no means of ascertaining by this amendment what it really would cost. I understand, from the publishers, that it will not exceed $340,000; but the Committee of Ways and Means have had no opportunity of examining into the matter, and, although the work is an important one, they recommend a non-concurrence in the Senate amendment to this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is a proposition to print the State Papers from 1824 to 1859. That will make thirty-five years. The former publication was from the commencement of 1789, up to 1824; making the same length of time. That work cost $235 50 per copy; making the whole cost of two thousand copies $471,000.

Now, what are these American State Papers? Nothing but a reprint of your public documents from the various Departments, under their different appropriate heads. One portion is under the head of foreign affairs; another of military affairs; another of naval affairs; another of the Post Office; another of the General Land Office; another of financial affairs; and another consists of miscellaneous matter. It is a collection and reprint of public documents that are being annually presented to Congress and printed. It is a proposition to reprint all these papers; and I suppose that, if the first set cost $471,000, this set, in view of the great length and increased number of the documents, would cost $1,000,000. Sir, I can see no necessity for it, except to make a contract; except to give out a job. If you are going to have these papers printed, my own opinion is that, under the law, the execution of the work belongs to the Public Printer elected in pursuance of the law of Congress. Then you will have the work done according to your printing laws. You will have the typography and press-work done at the price fixed by law, and your paper for it will be furnished as is now required by law for all your other printing.

While my opinion is that, if you intend to reprint these papers and have them in another form, you should do it through the medium of the Public Printer, I can see no necessity, at this particular time, at all events, for incurring this large expenditure of money. We should reflect upon the condition of the finances of the country. This is one of the matters in which delay can inflict no injury or detriment to the public interests.

Now, who is to select the documents? Who is to determine what portion is to be printed, and what is not to be printed? There is a great deal of matter contained in these public documents which was never worth printing; and to reprint them now would be great folly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to amend by striking out the first six lines of the Senate's amendment. I merely desire to say this: that I am opposed to this printing; but as some information was given to me the other day by one of the parties interested in it, (Mr. Seaton,) I think it due to him to state what that information was, so that the matter may be fairly understood by the House. He stated to me that this publication would make fifty volumes, that there would be an edition of two thousand volumes, and that they would cost, according to the estimate made by Mr. Wendell, about three dollars and forty cents a volume. That would make $340,000 for the publication. I am opposed to the whole thing myself. I think there are reasons conclusive why we should not embark in it. It was only about two or three months since this House determined, when the deficiency bill was up for consideration, that it would publish no more books unless the manuscript was complete and furnished, so that we might know exactly what was to be printed and the precise cost of the same. If it was wise on the part of the House two months ago to adopt a rule of that sort—and I think it was—it seems to me there is wisdom at the present time in adhering to it, when the estimate of this work is fifty volumes, and it may overrun that number, and when the cost is estimated at $340,000, and it may overrun that, for it depends altogether on the manner of calculation, whether it includes the cost of the paper or not. I forgot to inquire about that. But it seems to me that in the present condition of things this is not the time for us to embark in this publishing business, when the tax-paying people of the country have to foot the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. Chairman, this proposition proceeded from, and has been very carefully examined by, the Joint Committee on the Library, and meets its approbation. I do not wish to complain of the conclusion of the Committee of Ways and Means in this connection, although I think no doubt could have existed in their minds that this matter had been fairly examined, and emanated, under the rules of the Senate, from the proper committee having the matter in charge, and so was entitled to consideration.

Let me, in the first place, correct an error into which the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Virginia have both fallen. It is not proposed to publish anything but a continuation of the State Papers from 1824 to the present time. The gentlemen are, therefore, in error in supposing that the work can reach fifty volumes. They doubtless had reference to the original proposition of Messrs. Gales & Seaton, which was not only to publish this part of the work, but also to republish the former volumes.

Mr. LETCHER. It was only the night before last that Mr. Seaton showed me this paper, and I spoke from his statement made to me then as to the character of the appropriation, after it had been before the Committee of Ways and Means for consideration.

Mr. PETTIT. It has been matter of inquiry with the Committee on the Library, both as to the probable cost and the probable extent of the work. The period, it will be observed, as was correctly stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, is almost equal to the period covered by the former series. But the former series covered the most energetic period of our history—that part of it which involved novel principles, and therefore furnished much more material for a work of this description than will probably be comprehended in what it is now proposed to publish. The Committee on the Library believed that the work here proposed would not exceed twenty, and might not exceed fifteen volumes.

Now, one word as to the character of the work. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that manifold abuses have grown out of our printing system. But a distinction ought to be made between its uses and abuses. This proposition is not made for the individual benefit of any one. It is intended to subserve the public interests, and promote the public convenience. The work is indispensably necessary to the legislation of Congress. It is a compilation from the immense mass of public papers which, from year to year is accumulated, of those parts which are deemed important to be retained as illustrative of the public history, or as furnishing proper guides to official conduct. When the compilation is complete, it is to be arranged in classes, and indexed so that every portion of it will be accessible. Since the year 1824, there have accumulated over a thousand printed volumes, besides hundreds of manuscript volumes, and countless large files of manuscript documents, which are all inaccessible for the reason that they are not arranged and indexed. This work is, therefore, necessary for the convenience of us all. Another object of the proposition is to secure the public archives which at any moment may be wasted by fire or some other accident. Much of the public history has already perished in this way, and if we wish to perpetuate what remains, and make it useful, there is no safer mode by which we can give it security, than by multiplying copies.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Here the committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined, and found truly enrolled, bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 530) for the relief of Stephen Fellows;

An act (H. R. No. 515) granting an invalid pension to Alexander S. Benn, of Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 514) granting an invalid pension to Conrad Schroeder;

An act (H. R. No. 523) for the relief of Wyatt Griffith;

An act (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois;

An act (H. R. No. 246) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands in the State of Wisconsin;

An act (H. R. No. 462) granting an invalid pension to James Fugate, of Missouri; and

An act (H. R. No. 512) for the relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee.

The committee then resumed its session.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to strike out the last six lines of the amendment. I have listened with considerable attention to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PERTT] has said in advocacy of this proposition; and, giving to all he has uttered the weight which it deserves, I must confess that I can see no reasonable or assignable argument which would induce me, as a member of this House, to differ from the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means. We have arrived at a period in the history of this Congress when, if the members of the Democratic party are desirous of maintaining the principles they have advocated before the country, there is an opportunity now to test their sincerity. This Government and this House have been hitherto like a seventy-four gun ship with a school of sharks at her keel; and partisan editors have been, with open mouths, lapping along the sides of this great vessel, waiting for some dead body to be thrown over to feed and to keep up presses which would otherwise have no sustenance either from the party or from the country. Now, sir, while I, as a member of this House, would go as far as any other member to advance the interests of the respectable gentlemen who are at the head of the National Intelligencer, I am opposed, on principle as well as upon policy, to giving them a gratuity of five or six hundred thousand dollars for what, so far as the legislation of the country is concerned, cannot be considered necessary. If these works are considered indispensable to the legislation of the country; if they are made up from valuable documents now filed away in the public archives, it is a proper subject for individual speculation; it is a subject appealing to that speculative spirit in the eastern cities and States which is never at fault. But it seems that heretofore, whenever a work could not claim the attention of the country, or of the regular publishers, it has been fastened on the Government in some appropriation bill in such a manner that members had either to vote against the whole bill, or take it with the objectionable features; and this is precisely such a case.

Sir, what has become of the publications already ordered by this House? What has become of the first series of these very American State Papers? Why, they have been hawked about, and sold by members of Congress, after having been received and charged to the Government at $225 a copy, and have been found down at Morrison's and Taylor & Maury's, at the green groceries, as waste paper, or can be purchased at the book stalls along the avenue for half price. That has been the case heretofore. Are we to have a repetition of this state of things now? Is the Democratic party—the responsible majority in this House—to concur in this amendment of the Senate, through motives of mistaken philanthropy and kindness to deserving gentlemen, who have arrived at an age when it may, perhaps, be necessary to hold out the open hand of the Government and its fostering care to them? Can any member belonging to the Democratic party go back to his constituents and justify such a vote as this?

I desire, if this appropriation shall pass, to let this side of the House [the Republican] take the responsibility, and I desire gentlemen to know, so far as I am concerned as a member of this House, that neither the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] nor any other gentleman, shall make a speech on this floor for Buncombe, complaining about the immense expenditures of this Government, ready as they always are to month away about appropriation bills, and to hold the Democratic party responsible.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Gentlemen upon reflection must see that this work can never be published by the enterprise of individuals; and the only serious question is, whether we will assume the publication as a just tribute to the spirit of the age in which we live, and send it down to future generations as a record of our transactions. I, for one, am ready to say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. CLEMENS,] that I am willing to assume the whole responsibility of publishing this work.

The amendment offered by Mr. CLEMENS was not agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I move to amend, by adding at the end of the Senate amendment, the following:

Provided, That the work shall not exceed fifty volumes, and the aggregate cost of the entire publication shall not exceed $340,000.

My own opinion is that there is a necessity for this publication; but I am very reluctant to embark in a publication the entire cost of which we have so slender a conception of. If it be true that this work is to amount, in volumes, to the number stated by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] and in cost to no more than he states, I apprehend the publisher will have no hesitation in undertaking the work with the limitation presented in that proviso. If I can have any assurance that it can be published at a reasonable expense, and within reasonable limits, I shall be inclined to support the publication. Every man must know that you might as well not have these State Papers and these public documents published at all, as to have them scattered through forty tons of public documents, where no man can find anything he wants. The great object is to select this historical matter and publish it under such heads as will make it available and accessible when desired, and furnish to persons that information which will enable them to discharge their duties intelligently and understandingly. Such I understand to be the object of the work; and if it can be accomplished for any reasonable sum, I am disposed to favor the publication. But I will not vote to give any person any job of printing—anything merely for the sake of a job. Knowing what I do of the publication of that work from 1824, down—having had experience of the value of it, and especially of that portion of it which relates to claims against the Government, and the action of the Government upon the great questions which agitate it—I believe the publication a desirable, important, and necessary one. If the committee chooses to adopt my amendment, or some similar one, limiting the expense of the publication, I am inclined to go for it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if any estimate has been made as to the cost of continuing this work?

Mr. STANTON. I stated that I based my action upon the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] the facts of which he says he obtained from Gales & Seaton.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CLEMENS] just now asked which one of us would dare to face our constituents after voting for this proposition? I answer the gentleman that I would. I assure the gentleman that that there is no appropriation which I would sooner vote for than one which is designed to keep and perpetuate the records and history of our country.

Mr. CLEMENS. I trust the opponent of the gentleman will take advantage of that acknowledgment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I say he is welcome to do it; and I thank the gentleman for his kind wish. I represent a constituency who can appreciate the value of money spent in bringing down the record of the history of our country; a constituency able and desirous to read our country's history; willing to pay for such information; proud of the past and emulous of the future; and, as far as my own action is concerned, as a member of this House, I can point to my votes since I have been a member to show that I do not belong to what the gentleman has been pleased to call an extravagant party. And when the gentleman talks about speaking for Buncombe, I can tell him that I am not afraid to vote for any expenditure when the object of that expenditure can be justified to myself, and to those I represent, as a proper one. Can the gentleman tell us what object there is for which the American House of Representatives ought to vote money more freely than for that which will enable those who are now growing up around us, those who are soon to come upon the theater of public action, and who will succeed us, to know the history of the past, and to connect it with the present?

Mr. CLEMENS. I will answer the gentleman. The gentleman professes to belong to the Democratic party, and he is a Democrat; and I understand a cardinal principle of that party to be retrenchment and reform, and yet we find Democrats voting for every sort of extravagant purposes. Already, upon the other side of the House, we hear the note of political contest sounded upon that very key.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Parsimony and economy are very different things, let me assure the gentleman; as different as economy and extravagance. Let the gentleman begin his reform elsewhere than on such a subject as this. I do not call it extravagance to expend money in any manner which will give us the benefit of a sufficient, an honest, and patriotic return. I call that parsimony to forbear to expend it when we have it, or can have it, when we know that the purpose for which we are voting it is one of which we ought to be proud. I tell the gentleman that I dare any competitor of mine to go before the people of my district and urge against me the objection that I voted, in the American House of Representatives, the means to publish the State Papers, which alone can furnish to those who will come after us a knowledge of the early history of our country. Are we ashamed of those State Papers? I would not hesitate to compare them with the State papers of any nation in the world. Our history is one I am proud of, and I desire to perpetuate a knowledge of the action of our Government. If there are no other provisions in this bill which are not more extravagant than this, there is no necessity for the gentleman to array our practice against our professions. I do belong to the Democratic party; but when I am told that I shall not vote the public money for the use of my constituents in a manner which will be honorable to the country, a record of its glories, and cannot fail to be useful to my constituents, and that if I do, I am not upon the Democratic platform, then I am ready to, and will, step off from it. Such is not the narrow creed of the Democratic party; it has high missions to fulfill, and none more elevated than the publication of the history of our country, whose liberties were achieved, and have been maintained, by Democrats; thus encouraging its friends for the future, and giving to the world a wide-spread and extensive circulation of the country's glorious history.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he leave out the limitation as to the number of volumes. It may be that if we limit the number of volumes to fifty, they may be too large to handle conveniently. I think, however, we should limit the price and limit the appropriation. I understand from the publishers that it will require several years to publish this work, and that not more than $25,000 will be required for the present year. I move, therefore, if it be in order, to amend by adding that a sum not exceeding $25,000 be appropriated for the fiscal year.

Mr. STANTON. I will modify my amendment as the gentleman suggests in relation to the number of volumes. I mentioned that number because it was stated the work would be comprised in fifty volumes.

Mr. PETTIT. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me for a moment, I will say that no appropriation whatever is desired in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask the gentleman whether he will not also modify his amendment so as to limit the appropriation in this bill to $25,000?

Mr. STANTON. I will so modify it, if the gentleman from Georgia desires it, although the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT,] who represents the Library Committee, has just stated that no appropriation at all was contemplated for the work in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to state to the committee very briefly that I consider the publication of these State Papers as very important.

Mr. DEAN. I object to debate, unless it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order at this time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to inquire if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio cannot be amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at the present time; and debate upon that amendment is exhausted.

The amendment, as modified, was read.

Mr. SAVAGE. That is an entirely different amendment from the one originally offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had a right to modify his amendment at any time before the vote was taken upon it.

The amendment, as modified, to the Senate amendment, was agreed to—ayes 80, noes 41.

Mr. MASON. I move to amend by striking out these words: "for the purpose of publishing State Papers." The fact is pretty generally understood here, and I suppose the country understands it, that some job is to be gotten up to maintain the publishers of this paper. This thing has been handed round this Hall, and I suppose a majority of this House intend voting for it, and that nothing which can be said will prevent it. But, sir, the work need not be done. If it is intended to make a donation for the meritorious public services of their past life, and for the purpose of maintaining the editors of this paper, let us do it directly, and not put them to the trouble of doing this work, and the Government of the United States to the expense of buying paper, when nobody wants the work. Let us make the donation fair and square, open and above board. There are hundreds of volumes printed by this same establishment which are now rotting in the vaults of the old Capitol and in your libraries. Here is another system to be begun; where it will end no one can tell. Now, sir, I have a great respect for the editors of that paper. They have been conservative men during a long life; they are able men; and if there is any way of pensioning political soldiers upon the Government and country, they, perhaps, are as much entitled to it as any one else; but mark you, in every one of the two hundred and thirty-odd districts in the United States there are men who have performed just as meritorious services. There are men in my own State who deserve to have three or four hundred thousand voted to them, just as much as these men. The whole cost of the State government of Kentucky, exclusive of the interest on the State debt, is only about the same amount. And yet, of all the appropriations that the Government makes, not a single dollar is spent in my district. My constituents build their own houses, and make their own hydraulics, and yet they have to contribute to building the houses and making the hydraulics of other cities. I am sorry to say that the Democratic party in power, to whom I have stuck so long and loved so well, is guilty of making them do so.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MASON] says that it seems to be generally understood that this is a job. I can say for myself that I have no such understanding, and I do not know where the gentleman got his information.

Mr. MASON. I got it from rumor.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have not heard it myself. I say to the gentleman that I do not favor this as a job. I have nothing to do with jobs. I am for this, because I believe it important to the public service that the State Papers should be printed—much more important than much of the reports that we are daily ordering to be printed. The State Papers were ordered to be printed up to 1824; and since that time none of them have been compiled. I wished, myself, the other day, to look at the correspondence between the State Department and Lord Ashburton, growing out of the Washington treaty, and I could not find it without subjecting myself to a great deal of trouble and loss of time; and I find it so with all our diplomatic correspondence since 1824.

Mr. CLEMENS. Will the gentleman say that there is a single public document of that kind that cannot be found among the House documents?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. They might be found if I got a clerk to go through and aid me in looking into each volume. Perhaps out of one hundred volumes searched I might get it, part here and part there, and part some other place. But I wish the State Papers properly compiled and arranged in volumes where we can find them without that immense labor.

The gentleman from Kentucky spoke of the number of musty volumes printed by the same publishers. I do not know of anything published by them except the Annals of Congress and the Register of Debates. But that is immaterial. If past Congresses ordered anything to be printed improperly, that is not now before us. But I do not think that the publication of these papers ever was improper. It was but right to have them printed. The Annals of Congress only brought down the debates to the commencement of the Register of Debates, and the Register of Debates brought it down to the Congressional Globe; and we are now continuing the debates of Congress. I think that it is right. The publication of the State Papers cost very little more than the publication of the Congressional Globe one session. I believe we pay for the publication of the debates of a session some two hundred and thirty thousand dollars. It is immaterial to me what the publication of these State Papers costs. The price is, I think, according to printers' rule. How, therefore, any great job is to be made out of it, I cannot conceive. If there be no more profit than according to the law on public printing, I think there will be very little profit made out of it. If, however, your Public Printer is making too much profit, cut down the rate. I am for no job; but I am for the publication of all matters that give correct information.

The question was taken on Mr. MASON's amendment to the Senate amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I offer the following amendment:

And provided, that said work shall be let to the lowest bidder on sixty days' notice, in the manner to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

I presume, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a member on this floor who knows the amount of the job that is to be undertaken. There is not a member on this floor who knows the expense of this work; for the limitation imposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is not worth the crack of my finger, as experience will show. Fifty volumes will not begin to complete the work. It has been said, and said truly, on this floor—and I say that there is no doubt about it—that the whole project of publishing this work at this time was originated by private persons for their own advantage. I therefore introduce my proposition with a view to have the work given to the lowest bidder, so that the world may have a chance at it.

That is not all. By no means. Where are these books to go? As I understand the amendment, three hundred sets are to go to the State Department, seven hundred to public libraries; and the remainder are to be deposited with the Interior Department. I do really think, without meaning to expand on this subject, that for us to commence, at this time, a work which is to last through a series of years, is, with the cry of economy on our lips, one of the most indefensible movements that I have witnessed for many a day.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman asks what is to be done with the other thousand copies? They are to be given, I suppose, to libraries.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No; seven hundred copies are provided for them.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. That would not suffice.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The amendment contemplates leaving three hundred copies in the State Department, and allowing seven hundred copies for public libraries.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The executive library in each State is to be supplied, as well as the public libraries.

One word as to the gentleman's argument on the impolicy of having these books published at this time. One reason why I proposed to the gentleman from Ohio to limit the appropriation for this year to $25,000, was because of the embarrassment of the Treasury; but I tell gentlemen that I brought forward a proposition the Congress before last and last Congress to print these State Papers.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What is your objection to my amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have got two reasons. In the first place, these are the same publishers who published the work down to 1824. They are familiar with it, and understand it. That is one reason why I would rather intrust it to them. Another reason is, that since I have been in Congress, I have repeatedly seen the public printing let to the lowest bidder, and invariably, when it has been so let, the printers have, I think, without a single exception, come and asked us to release them from their contracts; the work was always worse done, and we had to pay more for it in the end; and we finally adopted the system of electing a Public Printer, and establishing the rates at which he should be paid by law.

This amendment provides, as I understand it, that the rates paid for this work shall be the same as those given to your Public Printer under the law, and these rates are as low as the work can be done for. I am, therefore, opposed to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to strike out the word "lowest" and insert "highest."

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of Virginia; and it was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move to amend the amendment of the Senate by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the publication of said work shall not be commenced until a printing bureau is established by the Government; and that it shall then be done in said bureau.

I desire to say that I am opposed to this publication at present. I will not call it a job, because I do not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MASON.] I think his language was not very complimentary to the House, and therefore I cannot agree with him. But I am satisfied that the work can be done in the public printing bureau, proposed to be established by the select committee on printing, for half the price which we should be compelled to pay to any publishers in the country. As a matter of economy, therefore, if Congress is resolved to publish this work, which may or may not be important, I trust that, as little will be lost by delay, we shall at least postpone it until we have time to consider the bill proposing to establish a printing bureau, which I propose to call up to-morrow or the day after.

But, sir, I believe that, according to the precedents, economy is not to be calculated on in these great works. If we want to economize we must strike down the salaries of these pages and messengers about this Hall, and reduce them to fifty or twenty-five cents a day. That is the only place in which we have economized this session. But as for these wealthy publishers in this city, let us give them fat contracts and enrich them. We ought not to talk about economy when they are concerned. Let us give John C. Rives $50,000 more, and then give Wendell and the Printer of this House, and these other printers, large donations. They have not made quite enough money yet. And when we have enriched all the publishers of this city, let us bring on a few from New York and other cities who are equally anxious to participate in these fat jobs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and in favor of the amendment of the Senate as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON.] I hope that the committee will vote upon the matter now, and let us get it into the House where we can have the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. GROW. I wish to say one word in reference to the printing bureau. So far as the select committee on printing is concerned, which has been referred to two or three times, the majority of the committee are not in favor of the bureau. They permitted the bill of the gentleman from New York to be presented, but a majority of the committee were in favor of giving the printing to the lowest bidder.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TAYLOR, of New York; and it was rejected.

Mr. WHITELEY. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "Territory," in the twenty fifth line of the Senate amendment, insert the words:
And one set to each member of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.

I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. CLEMENS. I am in favor of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must speak in opposition to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEMENS. Well, then, I will oppose it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I rise to a point of order. As I understand that amendment, it changes the law which provides that members shall not hereafter distribute books to themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The amendment is not in order, as it proposes to change the existing law.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I should be glad to know what is the existing law upon the subject? I understand that there is no law upon the subject. This very order for the publication of the books is the origination of a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia does not understand the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware. It proposes to give one copy of this work to each member of the present Congress. The Chair rules the amendment out of order, inasmuch as it proposes to change an existing law—the compensation act.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words: "and one for each college in each congressional district."

Mr. Chairman, the Prince De Canino, on one occasion, instructed his head steward, or master of the household, to report to him the best plan of economy he could recommend in his department; and, after going through the house, from the cellar up to the garret, the steward very deliberately reported to his employer that he found he could dispense with nothing except a hall lamp. Now the Democratic party in this House are in this condition: in the early part of the session we contracted a loan of $20,000,000 by the issue of Treasury notes; and we are now about to contract another loan of $15,000,000. We have provided no means to pay the interest on that debt. Your revenue is insufficient, and you are compelled to resort to forced loans to carry on the Government. And here we are to-day gravely deliberating whether, in the midst of this deficit, we will not still further increase the expenditures of the Government to an amount that is not known; for no man can now tell, except on ex parte estimates, whether the final cost of this work will be five hundred thousand, seven hundred and fifty thousand, or one million dollars. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] whether he can go before his people and sustain himself, with all his acknowledged Philadelphia-lawyer ability, on an issue like this? [Laughter.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. What is the particular issue?

Mr. CLEMENS. Why, sir, the Democratic party, forsooth, is the States-right party—the party of economy, retrenchment, and reform; and I ask the gentleman whether, if he votes for an extravagant proposition like this, he will dare to go before his people, bare his breast, and defy the stroke?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I consider the test of Pennsylvania Democracy quite equal to that of Virginia Democracy, and it is to be found in practice much more than in profession.

Mr. CLEMENS. Well, I tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania this: that if he can find any clause in the Constitution of the United States, or any clause in the resolutions of 1793, which will justify him in converting this House into a book-making machine, and the members of this House into the mere conduits through which they are to be distributed, he understands Virginia Democracy better than I do. What will be the result of these appropriations? We shall see it in the next campaign. You will see gentlemen upon this side of the House railing out against an expenditure of eighty or ninety millions a year, in the face of an empty Treasury. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how he can stand justified before his constituents, when this House knows that there is not a single document which they propose to publish which has not already been printed, and which is not now in the archives of the Government? So far, then, as this appropriation is concerned, I can see no good reason, no colorable pretext for it. I know this, Mr. Chairman, that if this law be passed, it will be said hereafter, whether the Republican party, the Democratic party, or the American party be in power, that you cannot interfere with this law because it is in the nature of a continuing contract; and you will find gentlemen arguing to this House that you have no right to impair the obligations of your contracts. It will take, it may be, ten years to complete this publication, whether in the hands of Gates & Seaton, or Wendell, or some other speculator in the public printing, and you will find them contending that Congress has no right to interfere with their vested rights.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. It seems to me there is a great deal of fuss about a little matter. Limited, as the appropriation was to have been by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and confined within a reasonable number of volumes, as was stated by the gentleman from Virginia, I would most willingly and gladly avail myself of the opportunity to vote for keeping a permanent record of the history of our Government—useful to those who come after us. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia does not know but, perchance, when some future Congress may bring up the publication of the papers, his own messages may be found in them. But, if the gentleman represents a district which he tells us does not want to have the records of the country preserved, I can tell him his constituents are entirely different from mine. They are interested in all these matters. There is hardly a State paper that ever emanated from our Government which I would wish to see withdrawn. I am willing to see the State papers not only of the gentleman's State, but of every State of the Union, published this day; and I rejoice that the American Congress thinks enough of our State papers to put them into a permanent form, and in a shape in which they can be read in every college in the Union. If two thousand copies are not enough for that purpose, I would vote for five thousand; and I assure the gentleman I am not afraid to assume all the responsibility of my action.

And, sir, has the gentleman from Virginia voted for nothing worse than this? Is his Democracy of that kind that he would not vote a dollar of money? I would not stop an expenditure which the people demand, but I would go further than the gentleman from Virginia. I would, whenever the occasion comes, lend my aid to put money into the Treasury. I am not in favor of profligate expenditures; I am not for running into debt; and I will vote for replenishing the national Treasury; vote for such means as will put money into the Treasury—money which we propose to expend in so creditable a manner.

Mr. CLEMENS. How does the gentleman propose to do it? By another loan, or by an amendment of the tariff?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will take occasion at some future time to state more satisfactorily and more at large what means I would adopt than I can do in the short space of five minutes; but I will state this to the gentleman: that I will advocate as close retrenchment and reform as he has ever done; though I will not advocate that miserable parsimony which would refuse to publish the records of a country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLEMENS, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out "two thousand," and insert "one thousand," so that it shall read "one thousand copies." It is urged as the principal reason why this publication should be made, that it is necessary in order to preserve the records of the nation in a convenient form. If that really be the object, and it be not the object to give a very large job to particular favorites, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has said, I do not see why it is necessary to publish two thousand copies. If there were to be one copy sent to each congressional district, that would require but two hundred and thirty-six; and if each Senator be allowed a copy, to be sent by the Senators and Representatives to some public institutions in their States and districts, that would require less than three hundred. Three hundred copies would be sufficient for the purposes of the State Department, to supply foreign ministers and foreign agents; and then, if an additional number is allowed to supply each State library, still you have not reached near one thousand copies.

As to the suggestion of furnishing this work to the school libraries of the country, and to colleges, I must say that I do not understand upon what reasonable principle it can be advocated that Congress shall make publications of this character to distribute among the literary institutions of the country. They may be published at a high cost, and sent out at the expense of the Government, and yet lie in many of those libraries mouldering away, and unless some man engaged in political life should happen to live near a college, they would never be opened at all.

It seems to me, then, that if the main object is to preserve these State papers in a convenient form, the work should be limited to that object, and one thousand copies would answer all the purposes of the Government.

While I am upon the floor, I desire to make another remark in reference to this bill. If this is not intended to be a job, why is it that the committee rejected the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH], to let out the publication to the lowest bidder? If it is intended to practice economy, and if it is intended to deal fairly and justly, why not let this contract be made upon principles which will secure the doing of the work cheaply and expeditiously? Why put the price of these volumes at $3 50? Does any man pretend that with such a contract, with such assurances of compensation, they would be worth that amount?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KILGORE. I hope the amendment will not prevail. If we are to have this work published at all, we should have a sufficient number of copies to supply the public libraries, and for all ordinary purposes of members of Congress; and if there should be a surplus, we will not fail to find means to dispose of what is left, properly and with advantage to the country. I regretted exceedingly to hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] appeal to the Democratic party to economize at this particular time; in other words, appeal to them to avoid responsibility. How much more magnanimous it would have been for him to have asked the Democratic party, which is in the ascendancy here, to come forward and devise ways and means by which our exhausted and empty

Treasury could be replenished, and enabled to meet, not only the expenses of the Government, but all these other expenses! Why not appeal to them to take the responsibilities which properly belong to them, instead of avoiding them? Why not call on the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who feasts at the Executive table, and basks in the sunshine of the President's smiles, to devise some plan by which the expenses of the Government might be defrayed other than by continually resorting to loans? The gentleman from Virginia tells his political friends that they should avoid responsibility. Heaven knows they have avoided responsibility too long! Why not meet it with the boldness characteristic of the old Democratic party? Why come forward and ask the modern Democracy to avoid responsibility at the expense of the best interests of the country? I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted, and that my friend who is at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means will devise some plan by which this expenditure, as well as all others, may be met in due season; and I hope that such plan may be acted upon before the termination of the present session.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Will my friend give me some suggestion? I am ready to receive it.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman should receive his suggestions from other quarters. There is no responsibility resting upon this side of the House, and I do not wish to impose my counsels on the gentleman.

Mr. CLEMENS. As the gentleman seems so particularly frank in his advice to others not to avoid responsibility, I desire to ask him how he would provide for the deficiency in the Treasury?

Mr. KILGORE. I would modify the tariff so as to produce a sufficient revenue to meet all the expenses of the Government and secure the necessary protection to the manufacturers of the North and the great iron interest of Pennsylvania, instead of giving an exclusive protection to the sugar-growing interests of the South to the amount of $13,000,000 per annum, as is now the case.

The question was taken on Mr. REAGAN's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the Senate amendment.

Mr. CLEMENS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLEMENS and CHAFFEE were appointed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to enter my protest against this special legislation. I object to its being assumed or charged that our action has reference to the enrichment of individuals. It has been already couched that this proposed publication originates in a private purpose or enterprise, and we give countenance to the charge by our specifying the individuals who are said to have projected the publication and giving them the job. Now, I protest against that. I do insist on it that this Congress ought not to order so expensive a publication as this to be done by anybody, but should leave competition for it open to the wide world. I insist that if it be deemed necessary that the work should now commence, we ought to commence it under auspices such as are calculated to protect the public interests, which, I say, are to be sacrificed by the proposed plan; and I do trust that while we have a knowledge of the fact that this whole printing system is likely to undergo a very speedy reform, that a new system is to be inaugurated, and that in all probability we are henceforth to do our own printing, we should not take one of the very heaviest jobs that is to be done and give it to one or two persons, however worthy and respectable they may be.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he does not know, as a matter of fact, that the gentlemen to whom he has alluded are better qualified than any others now living in the country to discharge that work?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. So far from knowing that to be the fact, I say here—and let the gentleman from Tennessee mark it—that if this job be given to Gales & Seaton, they will never do the work, but others will. They will pocket a handsome percentage on the operation, but others will do the work. I give the gentleman notice that he may anticipate that thing.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman who will do the head work—the compilation?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House to select and arrange the documents. I have presented these views to the committee and to the country. I am not disposed to elaborate them; I am perfectly willing to do everything I can in a liberal spirit, to advance any man, but I am here to promote the public interest; I am here to see that, if we order a publication, that publication is to be made on the best terms. I am here, not for the purpose of building up any man or men from the common Treasury of us all.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I do not propose to discuss the amendment. We are wasting the whole day, and spending money enough about this matter to cover the cost of this whole publication. The discussion is being protracted for no practical purpose, but only because gentlemen are disposed to talk. I ask for a vote upon the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, was rejected.

The question recurred on agreeing to the Senate amendment as amended.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 59.

So the amendment as amended was concurred in.

Sixty-third amendment:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1842," approved the 3d day of March, 1841, and the eighth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1858," approved the 3d day of March, 1857, are hereby construed and declared to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to allow and pay to surveyors of ports performing or having performed the duties of collectors of customs, since the passage of the law last above recited, the same compensation, and no other, as is allowed to collectors for like services.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend a non-concurrence in that amendment. Unless some gentleman desires it, I will not explain it.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I hope the committee will concur in the amendment of the Senate. I think it is based upon justice and equity.

[Cries of "Vote!" and "Question!"]

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I do not wish the vote to be taken without an explanation, if there is to be a question raised about the amendment. The act of 1841 provided for certain compensation to be allowed collectors of customs. The act of 1857 put a construction upon that act, and a question has since been raised at the Treasury Department as to what it means. One construction is that the surveyors of ports are to have the same pay that collectors were entitled to under the act of 1841, and the effect of this amendment is to carry out that construction, and to give the surveyors of ports the back pay, back to 1841, which the collectors of ports have been entitled to. That is the explanation.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to inquire whether this is an amendment that would be in order, if offered originally in the House? Whether it does not give a construction of a law, and so would not be in order as an amendment here?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. It would not have been in order here. It was put in in the Senate.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I hope the House will not tolerate the practice of amending or construing the laws of the country by senatorial amendments to appropriation bills.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not think myself that the amendment will give back pay to any surveyors. It is only prospective.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. It goes back seventeen years; that is all.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The language is, "performing or having performed."

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I think it is only fair that the surveyors of ports who have performed the duties of collectors should have the pay of collectors, and in order to give the amendment a prospective application only, I move to amend it by striking out the words "or having performed;" anything so as to make it prospective. What I want to get the House to do is to prevent a discrimination against the surveyor who performs the duties of the collector.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Wherever there is no collector it is not because there is no business? and thus what the surveyor does get he gets for nothing.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. No, sir; you do not multiply offices, probably, where there is no necessity for it. If at a port where there is but little business, an officer performs the duties which belong properly to a collector, there is no equity in not giving him the same pay exactly.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend by striking out the first six lines of the Senate amendment. As I understand the proposition ingrained upon this bill by the Senate, it is simply this: it goes back to the year 1841, a period of seventeen years, for the purpose of raking up the parties, or, if they are dead, the representatives of the parties, who are to come forward and satisfy the Government that they performed this higher grade of duty, to be entitled to this pay. Sir, many of them must have been settled for sixteen years, and some for a longer period of time. They have been satisfied with the settlement. Men have died satisfied with it. Yet now you propose to introduce this question here, and to bring forward their heirs, who have never expressed discontent or dissatisfaction, in order that all these settlements may be ripped up, that there may be a readjustment of each and all of them, and that the parties may have the increased compensation.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Why, then, will not the gentleman strike out the retrospective operation of the amendment?

Mr. LETCHER. I understand your proposition to strike it out. If it is not to be retrospective, what is the justice of the prospective part of it? Here is a salary fixed by law for each one of this class of officers, and you are proposing that where a party of an inferior class should occupy a higher position for a time, temporary or otherwise, that he shall be allowed that higher grade of pay. The collectors' pay cannot go beyond $6,000 a year; and you are here to amend the law that a party who takes an inferior office, with a full knowledge of the salary, shall go in, and after he has gone in, you will resort to this mode of legislation to increase his compensation. I ask whether it is right? Is it proper legislation in any sense?

And then, besides, in another point of view, gentlemen on that side of the House have been reading lectures about economy; about multiplying officers; about extra pay; about increased printing, and about every species of extravagance. And let the fact go to the country that there has not been a proposition for increased pay, prospective or retrospective, which has not had at least one half of the other side of the House in favor of it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Whatever may have been the sense in that matter of this side of the House, I trust that under the song, which the gentleman has sung more than once to the country, the bills which are to pass this House to sustain the operations of the Government will be required to be passed by that side of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. Agreed; but do not load them down when you ask us to pass them.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I have seen and marked the ingenuity of the gentlemen who have charge of these bills to throw upon this side of the House the onus of the passage of everything that is put upon them by the Senate, where the party of the gentleman from Virginia has the majority. I trust that this side of the House, when they come to vote on the bills, will let the Senate amendments down, and let the bills down, unless the gentlemen can sustain them by the force of their own party.

But, the gentleman throws at me the idea that I am in favor of extravagance and increased expenditure because of my support of this proposition. Let the country understand, that when I made the proposition to cut off the retrospective operation of this bill, the gentleman and the other side of the House declined to sustain it. They now say that they will not touch it in its prospective view. Why? You say that it is not fair for a man to be paid at a higher grade no matter what his services may be, who has taken an inferior office. I say then give us collectors. Do not give us only surveyors and compel them to perform their own duties and the duties of collector beside, and then refuse to compensate them upon the same basis upon which you compensate collectors on the sea-board. What is fair upon the sea-board is fair in the interior. God knows we have not got anything for the interior, and that great interior ought to mark, and I hope it will mark, that in this amendment, although you have bills for custom-houses, bills for fortifications, bills for almost every conceivable project of expenditure upon the sea-board, yet we are to go home at the close of this session of Congress without a dollar for our rivers.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein contained in this section shall have a retroactive effect.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, this amendment to enable me to express my hearty concurrence with the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] and other gentlemen against the introduction of new and separate legislation into appropriation bills. I will vote against every proposition that may hereafter be interpolated by the Senate as a distinct feature, and which ought to be a separate bill of itself. There are two serious objections to the course which has been pursued. Both are founded upon the demoralizing effects which such legislation must have upon Congress and the country. Persons interested in bills, public or private, which cannot be reached on the Calendar, are induced to go to the Senate and have them tacked as amendments to an appropriation bill, which they know must pass in some form before the end of the session.

It is thus that a sort of force is employed upon the House of Representatives. But the most demoralizing effect of this description of legislation is, that the appropriation bills for the ordinary and necessary expenditures of the country, which, unincumbered with general legislation, would pass Congress notwithstanding the difference and the opposite views of parties, become, by loading such necessary bills with propositions involving political questions, the occasion of creating opposition and difference of opinion between the two Houses of Congress, and thus endanger if not defeat the bill.

Again, by the introduction of this general legislation upon appropriation bills, we are forced to decide between stopping the wheels of the Government by refusing proper legislation, or keeping the wheels in motion by voting for measures which are objectionable and improper. We have a rule for ourselves, a wise rule, that nothing but what is germane to the subject shall be admitted as an amendment to an appropriation bill, and that independent legislation shall not be admitted. We have no control over the action of the Senate. But we have this control: we can reject everything which is not appropriate to the expenditures of the Government in some shape; and this House ought to take some means to stop this legislation in appropriation bills which does look to the expenditures of the Government, and which is altogether foreign to the subject. I hope the House will hereafter set its face against every amendment not pertinent to the bill, however good in the abstract it may be.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is mistaken in his observation that this amendment is retroactive, and goes back to March, 1841. I think that the printed copy from which the gentleman reads is not a correct copy of the amendment as it is sent to us from the Senate. A reference to the engrossed bill on the Clerk's desk will sustain my assertion.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I find upon comparison of the copy I had with the engrossed bill, that the word "first," which appeared in the amendment when it was first offered in the Senate, was stricken out, and the word "last," substituted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then the whole objection to this amendment turns out to be unfounded. The operation of the amendment only goes back a single year, instead of seventeen years, as claimed by the opponents of this measure, and I cannot understand the difference between allowing additional pay to surveyors who perform double duties, and that species of legislation which has marked the action of this House from the moment we assembled here to the present time, as evidenced in allowing foreign ministers, and everybody else, double pay where they have performed the duties of two offices. Why should surveyors be exempted, and made exceptions to this rule? This amendment contemplates no new construction of the act, and asks no appropriation. The courts of the United States have given the same construction to this act which is proposed by this amendment. The surveyor of Mobile performed the duties of collector, and claimed increased compensation, under an amendment similar to the present, and which was attached to the civil appropriation bill approved the 2d of March, 1857. The Secretary of the Treasury refused to allow it, and directed suit to be brought. He pleaded this law, claiming compensation as collector, and the courts sustained him, defeating the Government of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury should be bound by this decision. He refuses, however, to do so; and alleges as an excuse for refusing to give a just and legitimate construction to this statute, the present exhausted condition of the Treasury.

Mr. STANTON. Let me inquire of the gentleman what necessity there is for legislation if the courts of the United States have recognized that construction?

Mr. STEVENSON. Just for the simple reason that neither the gentleman nor myself, nor any one of a high sense of honor, would desire to have a suit instituted against them for an alleged balance of public money, and thus be decried as public defaulters by the public press, even though it might be decided that the amount retained was properly withheld as due for official compensation. Let the gentleman from Ohio look at a citizen of his own State, formerly a collector at San Francisco, (Mr. Collier,) who, in the adjustment of his accounts, claimed certain credits from the Government. How was he treated? He was denounced as a defaulter from one end of the Union to the other; and his character attempted to be blackened because he simply dared to claim what was afterwards judicially decided was justly due him. I would pass this amendment, because the Secretary of the Treasury chooses to put an unauthorized arbitrary construction upon this law; and, instead of effectuating its purpose, says to the surveyors: "Although I know you could recover your claim in a court of justice, yet I will not allow it;" and thus, by a threatened suit, force a public officer to submit to an improper construction of this act rather than to permit the newspapers to proclaim him a defaulter. That was the case in reference to the collector at Mobile, who was sued. It is to avoid this course of proceeding that we desire to place this construction upon the act, legislatively, in order that the Secretary of the Treasury shall acquiesce. As for the state of the finances, if the Government is in debt, let her repudiate if she chooses to do so, or borrow the money to pay what is justly due her public officers.

I may say here that there are but four or five surveyors who would be benefited by this amendment—one at Mobile, one at Cincinnati, one at Louisville, and one at St. Louis, are all who could claim the benefit of the amendment. This act is so worded as not to extend beyond March, 1857.

Mr. QUITMAN. When a law is passed construing a prior law, as this does the act of 1841, does not the construction placed by Congress upon the prior law refer back to the date of its passage, and would not this apply to the act of 1841, as from the date of its passage?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think a uniform construction ought to be placed upon all laws, and our only safety against oppression is, in a uniform, as well as a correct construction of statutes. But if the Secretary chooses to disregard that uniform construction upon the plea that the Treasury is embarrassed, he brings injustice, as well as inequality of construction to bear against all for whose benefit the statutes were passed. The objection of the gentleman from Mississippi is obviated by the express limitation of the amendment to 3d of March, 1857, and it could not have a more enlarged operation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. QUITMAN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out the words "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government," &c. It appears to me, to use an old simile, that there is a cat under this moral. There are a good many ports throughout the country, which are ports of delivery. I am certain that there is but one port and one collector's district in all the Mississippi valley; two, at the utmost: one at New Orleans and one at St. Louis. The other ports of delivery, Natchez, Vicksburg, Memphis, Paducah, Nashville, Louisville, Cincinnati, and other places, have surveyors. This provision is intended, it seems to me, without providing expressly for it, to make collectors at every one of these places. If that is the intention, why is it not made plain and intelligible, instead of saying that where the surveyor performs the duty of a collector he shall have the salary of a collector? I suppose, sir, that that clause, making these officers surveyors at those ports of delivery, was made on deliberation; that it was done understandingly; and if it is found that they do not answer the purpose, and that there must be a higher grade of officers there, let us say so, in so many words, in the law. Take the surveyor at any one of these ports; whenever duties are paid there, they are, of course, paid to him, and then he is performing the duties of a collector, and, consequently, would be put by this amendment under the effect of the law regulating the compensation of collectors. Sir, if that be the correct reading of this Senate proposition, and I doubt not it is, it should be repudiated by this House.

Mr. MASON. I did not understand my colleague exactly as to the necessity of increasing the compensation of the surveyor of the port of Louisville; and I suppose all others are on about the same principle. One thing I do know: that, at the present compensation, that office has made a terrible commotion in the Democratic family; and if you double it, I hardly know what will become of my friends in that region of country. I had a great deal of trouble in reconciling them for one incumbent of that office being removed; but if you double the compensation, and remove the person now holding the office, I am afraid you will break up the party. I hope, for the benefit of the social intercourse of friends in that quarter, the Senate amendment will not be concurred in.

The question was taken on Mr. JONES's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "saine compensation and no other."

Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few words in respect to the Senate amendment, which I deem to be disadvantageous to the interests of the country, and the administration of its revenues. There are ports of entry and ports of delivery. To the ports of entry are attached collectors, surveyors, and naval officers. In the ports of delivery there are surveyors. The distinction between these ports is, that in the one set, the ports of entry, revenue is collected; in the other, there is none collected. The distinction prevailed till the warehouse system was adopted. After its adoption goods were brought from ports of entry in bond to ports of delivery. All assignments were made, however, at the ports of entry. All duties were assessed at these ports; and all the labor of assessing them performed there by the collectors and officers under them. And now, at this time, under the same system, the duties are assessed at ports of entry, the goods being carried forward in bond to the ports of delivery. The surveyor there collects the duties that have been assessed at the port of entry. That is the sum and substance of the labor required from him under the present law. This Senate amendment gives to the surveyor the compensation of a collector, because of the duties collected by him at the port of delivery by virtue of the labor performed in assessment by the collector at the port of entry.

If that explanation be clear, then, according to this amendment, the surveyor at the port of delivery is to receive compensation for performing nominally the services of collector at the port of delivery, which the collector at the port of entry had already performed. I deem, therefore, that my amendment is a just one.

Mr. LEITCHER. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky, who seems to be pretty well posted on this subject, how many ports of delivery there are which will be embraced by this section?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not know how many ports of delivery there are embraced by this section; but I suppose it will embrace all that exist throughout the interior.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. There are about two hundred ports of delivery in the United States; and in about seventy of these there are surveyors.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I advocate the amendment because it is just to remunerate men in the same manner for performing the same service.

Mr. LETCHER. Then there are seventy ports to which this will apply, where the duties of collector are performed by the surveyor: in other words, where duties are paid on goods delivered at those ports. Now, the result will be, that you add $3,000 to each one of these seventy salaries. That is a pretty round sum to begin with under the operation of this thing. Then, I suppose you will go on scaling down, and if anybody else below the surveyor happens to perform a little extra duty, he is to be paid for it also; and we will have to work it up and down in that way on a sliding scale; and according as one man happens to do another man's work, he is to be paid that other's compensation.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. If, as my colleague [Mr. STEVENSON] remarked, the Supreme Court of the United States decided—in the case of the Mobile surveyor—that, under the proper construction of this law, the surveyor is entitled to the compensation of the collector, is it proper in the gentleman from Virginia to leave the law to operate under the arbitrary construction of the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of giving, by law, to the Secretary of the Treasury the direction to pursue the adjudication of the court?

Mr. LETCHER. Whatever right has accrued under the law passed last year, survives to the party; and no legislation of ours can destroy that right. That is a clearly settled principle. But, if a bad law was passed last year, let us repeal it now; so that, in future, there may be nothing more of this sort under it.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE withdrew his amendment.

The question was taken on the Senate amendment; and it was not concurred in.

Sixty-fourth amendment:

SEC. 25. *And he it further enacted, That all diplomatic and consular officers who were appointed under an act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March 1, 1855, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to and returning from their respective posts, and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and consular officers in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be considered to apply to any diplomatic or consular officer who was in office and at his post of duty when said act, approved March 1, 1855, took effect, except to allow compensation to such officers during the time necessarily occupied in returning from their respective posts.*

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. By the act of 1855 no compensation was allowed to these officers, except from the time they reached their places of destination until they left their posts. By the act of 1856 they are allowed sufficient time to receive their instructions and travel to and from their places of destination, provided the same should not exceed thirty days. It so happened that some appointments were made prior to the passage of the act of 1856; but the appointees did not reach their places of destination until after the act of 1856 took effect. The design of this amendment is to allow those officers who were appointed after the passage of the act of 1855, and prior to the act of 1856, to receive the benefit of that act; and it is limited to those who had not reached their posts before the act of 1856 was passed. I will state to the committee that it applies to but two cases—the Minister to Mexico, and the Consul at Dublin. They were appointed after the passage of the act of 1855, but did not reach their posts until after the passage of the act of 1856, and the Senate deemed it only an act of justice to those officers to give them the benefits of the act of 1856.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I should like to know how the gentleman makes a discrimination between the philosophy on which he now proposes to legislate, and the philosophy on which he proposed to legislate on the last amendment? These men received their appointments to office under one law, and he now proposes to compensate them under another law. If the gentleman's rule is good for surveyors of ports, it is good for diplomatic and consular officers also.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. There is a very great distinction between the two. The last amendment proposed to give one class of officers the salary of another class of officers. This proposition is to put foreign ministers and consuls on an equality.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. It operates to change the law.

Mr. STANTON. It is a very clear case of general legislation in an appropriation bill, and I am very sorry that the Committee of Ways and Means has compromised the dignity of the House by recommending the adoption of an amendment which would not be in order under the rules of the House. I trust the committee will reject it.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the committee rise, and report the amendments to the House, with a view to immediate action upon them.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending June 30, 1859, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that some of them be concurred in, that others be concurred in with amendments, and that others be non-concurred in.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move the previous question on the amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. Will amendments which were offered in committee be now considered in the House?

The SPEAKER. Only such as were adopted by the committee, and have been reported to the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to offer an amendment to the amendment in reference to the publication of the State Papers, to strike out "two thousand," and insert "one thousand."

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I must insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The action of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the amendments of the Senate was concurred in without division, except in the cases noted below:

Seventeenth amendment:

For continuing the work on the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana, $350,000.

Mr. STANTON. There are several amendments for custom-houses, and we might as well take the vote on them together.

Mr. LEITER. It includes almost every district in the country except my own; and if the vote be taken on them at once, I will perhaps be the only disinterested member. I want a separate vote on each amendment. Let each one stand upon its own merits.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! Let us have one vote on them.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Will the gentleman vote for them, or any one of them?

Mr. LEITER. I cannot vote for one of them.

Mr. GROW. I hope, then, that the gentleman will not call for separate votes on these amendments, and thus consume hours, when one vote will do as well.

Mr. LEITER. As there seems to be a general disposition to have a vote on all of these amendments in gross, I withdraw my objection to that course, protesting against this entire series of appropriations.

Mr. SICKLES. I renew the objection; and demand the yeas and nays on the seventeenth amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Arnold, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bonham, Bowie, Brayton, Burlingame, Chaffee, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clay, John Cochrane, Comins, Cragin, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Durfee, Eustis, Florence, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Groesbeck, Robert B. Hall, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Keitt, Knapp, McQueen, Miles, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Pendleton, William W. Phelps, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Stallworth, Miles Taylor, Wade, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wood, and Wortendyke—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Barksdale, Bennett, Bocoek, Boyce, Branch, Buffinton, Burns, Caskie, Cavanaugh, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Corning, James Craig, Burton, Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Edmundson, Elliott, Faulkner, Fenton, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Giddings, Grainger, Gregg, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Leidy, Leiter, Fletcher, Lovejoy, Mason, Matteson, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Peyton, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Roberts, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Savage, Scales, Henry M. Shaw, Sickles, Singleton, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, William Stewart, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, Walton, White, Whiteley, Winslow, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—91.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. ENGLISH stated that he was not within bar when his name was called; but if he had been, he would have voted to non-concur.

Mr. MAYNARD would have voted in the affirmative, to concur.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, said: Mr. Speaker, I have voted in the affirmative in order that we might complete a work already begun; but as the vote indicates that there is a majority here against it, and as there are still many other like appropriations to be taken up, and I may be put right upon the record, I vote "no," as I intend to vote against all of those appropriations.

Mr. FLORENCE said that, believing it would be a wise economy to finish the work, he would vote "ay."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana, said: As it seems to me to be the habit of gentlemen to make a declaration before voting of their reasons and intentions, I will say that I voted "ay" because I think it right to complete works already begun, and that I shall vote "ay" to the end of the chapter.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object to any further explanations. These amendments have already been thoroughly discussed.

Mr. CURTIS. For reasons others have given, I vote "ay."

The result was then announced as before stated.

Eighteenth amendment:

For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charleston, South Carolina, $300,000.

Mr. MILES demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Arnold, Billingshurst, Bishop, Blair, Bonham, Bowie, Brayton, Bryan, Clawson, Clay, John Cochrane, Curtis, Davidson, Dean, Eustis, Florence, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Groesbeck, Robert B. Hall, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Keitt, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, McQueen, Maynard, Miles, Morgan, Morrill, Freeman H. Morse, Pendleton, William W. Phelps, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Stallworth, Miles Taylor, Ward, Ellihu B. Washburn, Wood, and Wortendyke—46.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Atkins, Bennett, Bingham, Bocoek, Branch, Buffinton, Burns, Caskie, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Clark B. Cochrane, Cockerill, Covode, Cox, James Craig, Burton, Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dewart, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Fenton, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Goode, Gregg, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Leiter, Fletcher, Lovejoy, Mason, Matteson, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Peyton, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Savage, Scales, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Stevenson, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, Waldron, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—76.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Pending the above vote,

Mr. EDMUNDSON stated that his colleague, Mr. SMITH, had paired off with Mr. RICAUD.

Mr. CURRY stated that his colleague, Mr. MOORE, was still detained at his room by illness. The vote was then announced as above reported.

Nineteenth amendment:

For the completion of custom-houses at the following

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 177.

places, namely: at Ellsworth, Maine, $2,000; at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, $50,000; at Bristol, Rhode Island, including fencing and grading, $5,000; at New Haven, Connecticut, $60,000; at Oswego, New York, $10,000; at Plattsburg, New York, $10,000; at Newark, New Jersey, $10,000; at Norfolk, Virginia, $20,000; at Pensacola, Florida, $5,000; at St. Louis, Missouri, $30,000; at Mobile, Alabama, including fencing and paving, $30,000; at Galena, Illinois, $10,000; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $10,000; and for annual repairs at custom-houses, $15,000.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend that the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. GILMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am as much interested in this amendment as others, and I hope that the yeas and nays will not be called, but that it will be allowed to take its chance with the others.

Mr. GILMAN withdrew the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MASON renewed the demand.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Arnold, Bennett, Billingham, Bishop, Blair, Bowie, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Chaffee, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Cockerill, Comins, Covode, Cox, Curtis, Davis of Massachusetts, Dean, Dodd, Florence, Foster, Gilman, Goodwin, Groesbeck, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Keitt, Landy, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Miles, Morgan, Morrill, Freeman H. Morse, Pendleton, Potter, Robbins, Royce, Judson W. Sherman, Stallworth, Miles Taylor, Ward, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wood, and Wortendyke—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Barksdale, Boeck, Bonham, Boyce, Branch, Burns, Case, Caskie, Cobb, Clark B. Cochran, Cockerill, Corning, James Craig, Burton Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Giddings, Goode, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, McQueen, Mason, Matteson, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Peyton, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Savage, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Spinner, Stanton, Stevenson, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, Waldron, John V. Wright, and Zollicoffer—73.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

Pending the call,

Mr. JEWETT stated that he was not within the bar when his name was called, and that if he had been he would have voted in the negative.

On motion of Mr. COX, the reading of the list was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above reported.

Twentieth amendment:

For the completion of marine hospitals at the following places, namely: At Portland, Maine, $3,000; at St. Mark's, Florida, $2,500; at New Orleans, Louisiana, including filling up site, grading, introducing gas, and water pipes, and fixtures, and fencing, $85,000; at Cincinnati, Ohio, $50,000; at Galena, Illinois, $5,000; and for annual repairs at marine hospitals, $15,000.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. GROESBECK demanded the yeas and nays, but subsequently withdrew the demand.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Twenty-first amendment:

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the custom-houses at the following places, namely: At Ellsworth, Maine, $3,000; at Bath, Maine, (for furniture alone), $1,100; at Burlington, Vermont, $4,600; at New Haven, Connecticut, $8,500; at Oswego, New York, $7,300; at Plattsburg, New York, $9,900; at Newark, New Jersey, $5,200; at Alexandria, Virginia, $3,700; at Norfolk, Virginia, $12,000; at Mobile, Alabama, (for furniture alone), $2,600; at Pensacola, Florida, $2,500; at St. Louis, Missouri, $14,600; at Louisville, Kentucky, $3,900; at Cleveland, Ohio, $7,100; at Galena, Illinois, $3,700; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $7,700.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. SAVAGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Twenty-second amendment:

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the marine hospitals at the following places, namely: at Burlington, Vermont, $3,400; at Chelsea, Massachusetts, (out-buildings, grading, and fencing,) $19,700; at St. Mark's, Florida,

$1,200; at Detroit, Michigan, $7,500; at Galena, Illinois, $3,800; at Burlington, Iowa, $4,100.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Twenty-third amendment:

To enable the Library Committee to complete the payment for a series of portraits of the Presidents of the United States, contracted for under authority of Congress, and for framing the same, $5,000.

THE SPEAKER. The committee recommend a concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

For satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts, under the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the 9th day of August, in the year 1842, a sum not exceeding $11,496 81, in satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine, and $9,215 13, in satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts, to be audited by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 95; not a sufficient number.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARNETT and BUFFINTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes thirty-four—a sufficient number; so the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LETCHER. Can the amendment be divided?

THE SPEAKER. It cannot; it must be voted on as a whole.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to vote for the portion for Massachusetts, but against the portion for Maine.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Bishop, Blair, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clements, John Cochran, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Corning, Covode, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dimmick, Dodd, Edie, Fenton, Foster, Giddings, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Groesbeck, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Landy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Ward, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wood, Woodson, and Wortendyke—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Cobb, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Goode, Gregg, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Kelly, Letcher, Maciny, McQueen, Millson, Niblack, Peyton, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Stallworth, Stevenson, Talbot, Winslow, and John V. Wright—44.

So the amendment was concurred in.

After the announcement of the above vote, Mr. FLORENCE asked leave to vote. He was in the Hall, but his name inadvertently was not recorded.

Objection was made.

Mr. FLORENCE. Stated that he would have voted in the affirmative.

Forty-eighth amendment:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to examine the accounts between the United States and the several States, which have been or may be allowed interest upon claims against the United States, which have accrued during or since the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply, in such examination, the provisions and principles of the 12th section of the act of March 3d, 1857, entitled an act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858; and that any money found, upon such examination, to be due any State, shall be paid to such State out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in that amendment, with the following amendment in the nature of a substitute:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to Congress at its next regular session the applications made by the constituted authorities of the States and cities for the reopening and reexamination of the settlements heretofore made with such States and cities, and report the principle of readjustment upon which such claim is based, and the amount thereof; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further instructed to report to Congress at its next session the gross amount which will be required to pay such claims to the States and cities of the United States.

Mr. MAYNARD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, John B. Clark, Clay, Clements, Cobb, John Cochran, Cockerill, Corning, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilman, Gilmer, Goodwin, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leiter, Letcher, MacLay, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Millson, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Peyton, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ritchie, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Savage, Seales, Searing, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Sickles, Spinner, Stallworth, Stanton, Stevenson, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Underwood, Wade, Waldron, Ward, Whiteley, Winslow, Woodson, John V. Wright, and Zollicoffer—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billingham, Burlingame, Blair, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dodd, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gooch, Granger, J. Morrison Harris, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Lovejoy, McQueen, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Robbins, Roberts, Sandidge, Judson W. Sherman, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Walton, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Wood—63.

So the amendment was adopted.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. BOCKOCK stated that he had paired off with Mr. Boyce, and that the latter would have voted for this amendment, and against the other, while he was of a contrary opinion.

Mr. WILSON stated that he had paired off with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. WORTENDYKE stated that he was not within the bar when his name was called, and that if he had been, he would have voted in the negative.

The vote was then announced, as above reported.

Fiftieth amendment:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be directed to ascertain as among the expenditures of the State of Maine in defending the territory heretofore in dispute with Great Britain, the amounts paid in borrowing money for these expenditures beyond the rate of six per centum per annum, whether in the form of discounts or otherwise, in all cases in which the principal of such expenditures and interest upon them, at the rate of six per centum, have heretofore been refunded to said State by the United States, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay the amounts so ascertained out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or to any properly authorized officer of said State. In making the ascertainment herein directed, the accounting officers shall compute the principal and interest of the difference between the cash received by Maine in negotiating stocks and notes, and the nominal amount of such stocks and notes, and the interest accrued thereon; and in cases where Maine was obliged upon negotiating for money to increase the rate of interest on previous loans, the amount of such increase shall be paid and allowed, but not so as to reckon interest upon interest.

THE SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 32.

Mr. LETCHER demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARNETT demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARNETT and DEAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-four; more than one fifth of those present.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Andrews, Bennett, Billingham, Bingham, Blair, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clemens, Clark B. Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Fenton, Foster, Giddings, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Haskin, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Nichols, Parker, Pettit, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ready, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Russell, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Wood—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoek, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burns, Caskie, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Corning, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Gregg, Groesbeck, Thomas L. Harris, Houston, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, Leitcher, MacLay, Mason, Millson, Niblack, Peyton, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Searing, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Stallworth, Stephens, Stevenson, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Ward, White, Whiteley, Woodson, Wortendyke, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—69.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Pending the call of the roll, Mr. ELLIOTT stated that if he had been present when his name was called he would have voted in the negative.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, so soon as the vote was announced, moved to reconsider the vote concurring in the amendment; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Fifty-seventh amendment:

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That the collectors of customs in the several collection districts be, and they are hereby and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are or may hereafter be appropriated for the construction of custom-houses, court-houses, post offices, and marine hospitals, with such compensation, not exceeding one fourth of one per cent., as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem equitable and just: And provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work herein specified, the superintendent of such public work shall act as disbursing agent without any additional compensation therefor, and all laws, and parts of laws, in conflict with the provisions of this section, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to be permitted to offer an amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us hear what it is.

Objection was made.

Mr. HUGHES demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to concur.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixty-second amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, be, and they are hereby, directed to continue down to the 4th of March, 1859, the compilation of the congressional documents, published by Congress under the name of "the American State Papers," in the same manner as the first series thereof, under the authority of the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, and the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1833, and with the same particular index to each class and general index to the work; and the said Secretary and Clerk are hereby directed to contract with Gales and Seaton, the publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be published; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall place three hundred copies in the Department of State for its use, and for exchange with foreign Governments; and seven hundred copies in his own Department for distribution to the public libraries in the several States and Territories, and to hold the residue of the copies in his custody, subject to the further direction of Congress: Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress, including paper and binding, having regard to the quality and value of the material used and work done.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a concurrence, with the following amendment:

Provided further, That the cost of the publication shall not exceed three hundred and forty thousand dollars, and that no more than twenty-five thousand dollars shall be required for the purpose during the next fiscal year.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to lay the amendment upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS. Does the gentleman desire to carry the bill and all the amendments there?

Mr. HUGHES. I do; and that is the reason I make the motion. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay upon the table was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was adopted.

The question then recurred on concurring in the amendment of the Senate as amended.

Mr. LETCHER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Bingham, Bowie, Brayton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Florence, Giddings, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Horton, Howard, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Pottle, Ricard, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Russell, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wood, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcoffer—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Arnold, Atkins, Barksdale, Bennett, Billingham, Blair, Bocoek, Bryan, Buffinton, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Cockrell, Colfax, Corning, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dean, Dewart, Dowdell, Elliott, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Gregg, Haskin, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Leitcher, MacLay, Mason, Millson, Isaac N. Morris, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Pike, Purviance, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ritchie, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Searing, Sickles, William Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Waldron, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—79.

So the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. BOCOCK stated that Mr. Boyce and Mr. Miles had paired off—that the latter would have voted against the amendment, and the former for it.

Mr. CURTIS stated that he had paired off with Mr. McQUEEN. Mr. McQUEEN would have voted in the negative, and he would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ENGLISH stated that he had paired off with Mr. KEITT.

Mr. PENDLETON stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called he would have voted in the negative.

The vote was then announced, as above reported.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to move a reconsideration of that vote now?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will make that motion, if there be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I did not. I hope some member who did will move a reconsideration.

Mr. STANTON. I make that motion, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STANTON withdrew his motion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move that the House adjourn, and demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote concurring in the Senate amendment as amended; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will it not be in order to move to lay the bill and amendment upon the table?

The SPEAKER. A motion to lay the amendment upon the table is in order, and that motion, if agreed to, will carry the bill with it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is my object to defeat this bill, if possible; and I make that motion.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays. The House divided; and there were—yeas twenty-seven; not a sufficient number.

Mr. HUGHES demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The amendment has been passed by a yeas and nays vote. How then is it possible for the gentleman to make a motion to lay it upon the table?

The SPEAKER. There are some amendments not disposed of, and there is a motion pending to reconsider.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the remaining amendments upon the table, and that effects the same object—it will carry the whole thing with it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist that his motion shall be first put? It would be more regular to take the vote first on the pending motion to reconsider.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will withhold my motion until that is disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Not to detain the House, I withdraw that motion.

Mr. TALBOT. I renew the motion.

Mr. PHILLIPS. And I move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Brayton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Comins, Corning, Covode, Cragin, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Florence, Giddings, Gillis, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Leiter, Lovejoy, MacLay, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ricard, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Stanton, Stephens, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Woodson, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollcoffer—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Atkins, Barksdale, Bennett, Billingham, Bocoek, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Chapman, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Cockrell, Colfax, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dean, Dewart, Dowdell, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Gartrell, Gartrell, Goode, Groesbeck, Haskin, Hatch, Hawkins, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Leitcher, Mason, Millson, Isaac N. Morris, Pendleton, Peyton, John S. Phelps, Pike, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ritchie, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Searing, Sickles, William Smith, Spinner, Stevenson, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Waldron, Wood, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—77.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to lay the remaining amendments upon the table.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does that carry the bill with it?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUGHES demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS moved that the House adjourn; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House refused to adjourn.

Sixty-fourth amendment:

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That all diplomatic and consular officers who were appointed under the act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March 1, 1853, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to and returning from their respective posts, and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and consular officers in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be considered to apply to any diplomatic or consular officer who was in office and at his post of duty when said act, approved March 1, 1853, took effect, except to allow compensation to such officers during the time necessarily occupied in returning from their respective posts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not intend to ask a separate vote by yeas and nays on this amendment; but I desire to say to the House that it is intended to cover those cases in our diplomatic corps where the appointments were made under the act of 1855, and the services rendered under the act of 1856. The case of our Minister at Mexico, and perhaps a consul at Dublin, are the only ones to be affected by this amendment; and I hope, that as they are both meritorious, they may be provided for.

Mr. BURNETT. This is the last amendment, and I understand that when we have passed it there will be nothing further before the House to vote on. I move then to lay the amendment upon the table. My object is to kill the bill. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I understood the Chair to decide, at a former period of this session, that a motion to lay upon the table an amendment, being incident to the principal, was not in order. As these amendments are merely incidental to the bill, is it in order now to move to lay an amendment upon the table, and carry the principal with it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that, on the occasion to which he refers, the House was acting upon amendments from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and before the bill was engrossed. The pending propositions before the House now are the amendments of the Senate; and it is one of the parliamentary modes of disposing of the bill in this stage to move to lay the amendment upon the table.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. If it was not in order on a bill which had not passed this House, the argument that it is not in order applies with greater force, I think, where a bill has passed this House, and received the sanction of the coordinate branch.

Mr. KELSEY. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair is of the opinion that it is perfectly competent for the gentleman from Kentucky to move to lay the amendment upon the table.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Andrews, Avery, Burnett, Burns, Caskie, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Colfax, Cragin, Curry, Davis of Maryland, Dawes, Dean, Dewart,
Dodd, Dowdell, Elliott, Fenton, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Grainger, Grow, Haskin, Hatch, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston,
Hughes, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kelley, Knapp, Letcher, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Mateson, Maynard,
Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Nichols, Pendleton, Pike, Pottle,
Reedy, Rungan, Ruffin, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Sickles, John Smith, Spinner, Stevenson, Talbot, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, Waldron, Elihu B. Washburne, Woodson, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—68.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Arnold, Barksdale, Bingham, Bocoock, Bowie, Bryant, Bufton, Burlingame, Case,
Cavanaugh, Chaffee, Chapman, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Coming, Corning, Covode, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Curtis, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Durfee, Edie, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Foster, Giddings, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Groesbeck,
Lawrence W. Hall, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hawkins,
Horton, Howard, Huyler, Jackson, J. Glancy Jones, Owen
Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Kilgore, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C.
Kunkel, Landy, Leiter, Maclay, Millson, Morgan, Morrill,
Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse,
Murray, Niblack, Palmer, Parker, Peyton, John S. Phelps,
William W. Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Purviance, Quitman, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, Russell,
Scott, Stanton, Stephens, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Wade, Walton, Ward, Israel Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Winslow, Wood, Worten-dyke, and Augustus K. Wright—102.

So the motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

Pending the above call of the roll,
Mr. NICHOLS stated that, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] voted against the bill, he would also vote against it, to favor, during this session, at least one Administration measure.
[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union recommend a non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLARK of Connecticut, and HAWKINS, were appointed.

Mr. STANTON. The amendment was non-concurrent in by the committee, on my suggestion that it was general legislation. I knew nothing in the world about the merits of the claim.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 46.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move to reconsider the votes on all the amendments; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to move a reconsid-eration of the last amendment, and I was upon the floor as soon as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. There is a parliamentary courtesy, as well as propriety, in the Chair's recognizing the Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, on the occasion, to make a motion to reconsider votes appertaining to the appropriation bills; and the Chair has only followed that course in the present instance.

Mr. HUGHES. But the gentleman made a motion not in order, unless by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order, but the gentleman from Indiana has a right to a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask for a separate vote; and
I move that the House adjourn.

The House refused to adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the last amendment was concurred in;
and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I see no reason why the motion to reconsider should be pending, and I would suggest that it be withdrawn.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I withdraw my motion; and move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the loan bill.

WILLETT'S POINT COMMITTEE.

Mr. HASKIN. The pending motion in order is my motion to suspend the rules, in order that the Willett's Point special committee may submit the testimony and statements of its members.
I send to the Chair an extract from the journal of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES objected.

The Clerk read as follows:

June 7, 1858.

On motion of the chairman, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

The views of the several members of this committee not agreeing so as to enable them to join in a majority report on the facts and circumstances referred to and inquired into before them:

Resolved, That the several members of the committee be, and they are hereby, authorized to report to the House a statement or report of their views and conclusions upon the subject referred.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to inquire how it is that an amendment sent up by myself could not be reported when objection was made; and that this has been reported over my objection?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has pending a motion to suspend the rules, and the House could not vote on that until the paper was read. It is read that the House may determine whether or not it will suspend the rules.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. HASKIN. I move, then, that the statements and the testimony taken be ordered to be printed; and on that I call for the previous question.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri. I would inquire whether there is a majority report in this case?

Mr. HASKIN. There is no majority report.
There are some four separate reports. My motion is, that the testimony and reports be printed, and that their consideration be postponed until Thursday next at one o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order.
I understand the rules were suspended to allow the gentleman from New York to make a report.
I respectfully submit that the paper which he presented is neither a report nor a resolution, nor anything upon which this House can take action.
It is but an extract from the journal of the committee.

Mr. HASKIN. It is a report from the committee, and was acted upon by the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to amend the gentleman's motion. I wish to substitute "Wednesday" for "Thursday."

Mr. HASKIN. I should have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the paper last read brings the matter before the House; that it is the action of a majority of the committee in referring the subject back to the House without being able to concur in any recommendation to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I understood correctly the reading of the extract from the journal, it could not be held to be a report from a committee. In cases of this sort, where the committee divide up, so that there is no majority report, there must be a report ordered by a majority of the committee.
In this case it was not done.

Mr. GROW. The gentleman's own committee, the Judiciary Committee, stood precisely in the same position. They stood four to four, and he reported the fact to the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. In the case to which the gentleman refers, the committee were evenly divided, and they passed a resolution instructing their chairman to report the fact of disagreement to the House, accompanied by the resolutions which had been voted upon in committee, but lost because of an equal division. They also instructed their chairman to ask the permission of the House to make written reports to the House. So I made a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary to the House.

Mr. BOCOOCK. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he was directed by the committee to make this report?

Mr. HASKIN. I make the report as a report from the committee, in the shape of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Alabama, that he does not perceive any material difference between the case which he presented a few days ago and the case presented now. The gentleman from New York states that he has been authorized by his committee to present this report to the House in this shape.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I withdraw my objection to it, because the statement of the gentleman from New York meets the objection I had.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Is the testimony included in that resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the Chair understands that it is also orally reported. The question is on seconding the previous question on the motion that the views of the respective minorities be printed, and that their consideration be postponed until Thursday next at one o'clock.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman from New York will withdraw his demand long enough to move to substitute the first Tuesday of December next, I would be very much obliged to him.

Mr. RUSSELL. We have agreed to adjourn on Thursday, and therefore I move to substitute
"Wednesday."

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the report of the committee be laid on the table, and the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The motion was not agreed to.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. QUITMAN. I wish the gentleman from New York would allow me to state an objection which I have to the printing of the reports. This is no report of a majority of the committee, and I do not know but private characters may be injured by printing all these several views of the members of the committee. I am therefore opposed to printing the evidence or report till they are acted upon. Evidence ought not to be published by the order of the House which may affect a man's character.

Mr. HUGHES. I renew the motion to lay the whole subject on the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. HASKIN's proposition that the reports and testimony be printed, and their consideration postponed till Thursday at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. FLORENCE. That is the hour of adjournment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope that Wednesday will be substituted for Thursday.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order.
The House has determined to adjourn at twelve o'clock, on Thursday, and it is not in order to postpone a matter till the hour of adjournment, or till one hour after the House adjourns.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia. The Chair thinks it perfectly competent for the House to postpone the consideration till Thursday, or the 1st of July, or the 1st of December.

Mr. LETCHER. I know it can be postponed till any time when the House is in session; but we have determined to adjourn on Thursday, and it is not competent to postpone it to any time after that.

Mr. GROW. From the objections that are made on that side of the House, I should think that they would want the subject postponed till some day the House is not in session.

Mr. HOPKINS. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to fix no day for its consideration, but simply to make the motion to print, and leave it to either side of the House to call up the question whenever they desire.

Mr. HASKIN. I accept the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia to fix no time. My only object is to have the papers brought before the House and printed.

The question was taken on Mr. HASKIN's proposition as modified; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HASKIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the proposition was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take up the loan bill.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past eight o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 9, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY I. KERSHAW.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICEPRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims in answer to a resolution of the Senate requesting the return of the petition and papers of Michael Hanson, stating that the papers had already been transmitted to the House of Representatives. The letter was ordered to lie on the table.

CORRECTION OF ERRORS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas, it appears by the Journal of the Senate that House bill (No. 356) for the relief of Roswell Minard, father of Theodore Minard, deceased, passed the Senate on the 4th day of June, instant, with an amendment; and whereas said bill was, by mistake, erroneously reported to the House of Representatives, on the same day, as having passed the Senate without amendment, and has been enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress, and the said enrollment of said bill is void, the same never having been passed by both Houses of Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized to cancel his signature upon said enrolled bill, and that the same be returned to the House, and the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to authorize the Speaker of the House of Representatives to cancel his signature upon said enrolled bill, and return to the Senate the engrossed bill, to enable the Senate to correct its report to the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOOLITTLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas, it appears, by the Journal of the Senate, that House bill (No. 257) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe was indefinitely postponed by the Senate, on the 4th day of June instant; and whereas, said bill was, by mistake, erroneously reported to the House as having passed the Senate, and has been enrolled and signed by the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress; and the said enrollment of said bill is void, the same never having been passed by both Houses of Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized to correct his signature upon said enrolled bill, and that the same be returned to the House of Representatives, and that the House of Representatives be respectfully requested to authorize the Speaker of the House of Representatives to cancel his signature upon said enrolled bill, and to return to the Senate the engrossed bill, to enable the Senate to correct its report to the House of Representatives.

The Vice President canceled his signature on these two bills, and a message was afterwards received from the House of Representatives, announcing that the Speaker, by authority of the House, had canceled his signature thereto, and returning the engrossed bills in each case to the Senate, so that it might correct its report in regard to them.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 561) making appropriations for the support of three regiments of volunteers, authorized by the act of Congress, approved 7th April, 1858, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the memorial of the Magnetic Telegraph Company, and of the New England Union Telegraph Company, praying the enactment of a law which will prevent combinations between citizens or companies in the United States, and monopolists or companies out of the United States, for the purpose of oppressing telegraph companies, and monopolizing the business of telegraphing in the United States, and to enable all telegraph lines in the United States to form connections with all telegraph lines approaching their borders on terms of perfect equality, presented March 31; a memorial of the American Telegraph Company in answer to the memorial of the Magnetic Telegraph Company, and the New England Union Telegraph Company, and remonstrating against the prayer of their memorial being granted, presented April 22; a memorial of the Magnetic and New England Union Telegraph Companies in reply to the remonstrance of the American Telegraph Company, correcting the numerous errors and fallacies of the latter company, and embracing also an act of the British Parliament reorganizing the Atlantic Telegraph Company deemed to be inconsistent with the act of Congress to encourage their enterprise; and of the Atlantic Telegraph, and requiring additional legislation by Congress, presented May 28, submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed; and asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of T. P. Shaffner, of Kentucky, praying for an amendment of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1857, entitled "An act to expedite the telegraphic communication, for the use of the Government," so that the subsidy granted by that act shall be general in its application to all Atlantic ocean telegraph lines, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 448) to repeal an act entitled "An act to expedite telegraphic communication for the uses of the Government in its foreign intercourse," approved March 3, 1857, reported it without amendment, and submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 55) to regulate fees and costs to be allowed marshals, district attorneys, clerks of courts, jurors, and witnesses, in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, reported it with amendments.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Allen and others, praying that certain land offices in the State of Missouri, about to be closed under authority of law, may be consolidated at St. Louis, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to; the committee having already reported a bill on the subject.

Mr. STUART. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of instruction as to the propriety of abolishing land offices under certain circumstances, report that, in their opinion, the existing laws as to the discontinuance of land offices are ample; but legislation is necessary in regard to the deposits of papers in States where all the land offices may be closed. I am, therefore, instructed by the committee to report a bill (S. No. 449) authorizing the transfer to State authorities of the books, papers, &c., of discontinued land districts, under certain circumstances.

The bill was read, and passed to a second reading.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to some, and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1858.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859, disagreed to by the House, and asked a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and Messrs. HUNTER, FESSENDEN, and BIGLER, were appointed.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 200) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859, and upon its amendments to certain other amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. JOHN S. PHELPS, Mr. WILLIAM A. HOWARD, and Mr. HENRY M. PHILLIPS, managers at the same on its part.

COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 647) to change the time of holding the spring term of the district court of the United States for the western district of the State of Texas, report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. As it is a matter which relates solely to the interests of the State of Texas, and is one of those bills that always pass Congress summarily without objection, I ask that the bill be put on its passage at once.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that hereafter the term of the district court for the western district of Texas, held at Tyler, on the first Monday in March of each year, shall be held on the fourth Monday in April.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES D. MAXWELL.

Mr. MALLORY. The Committee on Naval Affairs have instructed me to report a joint resolution (S. No. 51) explanatory of an act for the relief of Dr. Charles D. Maxwell, a surgeon in the United States Navy. The act to which this resolution refers has not been construed according to the design of both Houses by the officers of the Treasury. The object is simply to correct their construction; and I ask the courtesy of the Senate to pass the resolution now, because I am told by the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives that it will pass there if it gets through here.

The joint resolution was read twice by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to require the accounting officers to pay to Charles D. Maxwell, under the act for his relief, approved March 20, 1858, the difference between the pay of a passed assistant surgeon and the pay which the surgeon whom he relieved on board the ship Cyane would have received if he had not been so relieved, from December 22, 1845, to July 7, 1848, during which time Dr. Maxwell performed the duties of surgeon and assistant surgeon on board the vessel.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 319) for the relief of Benjamin Sayre, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

Also, that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (S. No. 127) to repeal the fifth section of an act entitled "An act to authorize the register or enrollment and license to be issued in the name of the president or secretary of any incorporated company owning a steamboat or vessel," approved March 3, 1825.

Also, that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate for terminating the present session of Congress by an adjournment on Monday, the 14th of June, at twelve o'clock, m.

Also, that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) authorizing the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the accounts of Harris & Morgan, on principles of justice and equity; also,

A bill (H. R. No. 610) for the relief of William S. Bradford, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, the 8th instant, the following acts:

- An act for the relief of Judith Nott;
- An act for the relief of Peter Parker;
- An act for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster;
- An act for the relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller;
- An act for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;
- An act for the relief of John B. Roper;
- An act for the relief of David Bruce;
- An act for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin; and
- An act for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell.

SUPPLEMENTAL INDIAN BILL.

Mr. STUART. A bill has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs which is very important to my State, granting the right of way to a certain railroad over the military reservation at Fort Gratiot. It will not create debate, and I hope the Senate will indulge me by taking it up and passing it.

Mr. IVERSON. I have some reports to make.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to Senators that if they will allow me to have the appropriation bills taken up, I think we can get through with them to-day, and there will be ample time left to take up and consider other bills while the appropriation bills are maturing in committees of conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to have a bill passed which is really a mere matter of form.

Mr. HUNTER. There are ten or twelve gentlemen who have bills to call up, and if I yield to one, I might as well abandon my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to taking up the appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTER. I propose to substitute the supplemental Indian appropriation bill instead of the mail steamer bill, which was taken up last night. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is ready to go on with it, and I think we can get through with it expeditiously.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 557) making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1859.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I suggest that we dispense with the reading of the bill, which is long, unless some Senator desires to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have a number of amendments to offer from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The first is to add to the bill:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to perform the engagements and stipulations of General Harney made with the Sioux Indians at Fort Pierre, in 1856, $72,000.

That engagement of General Harney, which was in the nature of a military capitulation with the Sioux Indians, whom he brought to terms in 1856, has never been redeemed by the Government to this day. I suppose it is too late to question the policy of these engagements. It is sufficient to say that the honor and faith of the United States were committed to these Indians in the most solemn and formal manner, and the President of the United States, so far from repudiating the engagement, has recommended that Congress should regard it as of binding obligation on the Government. We have taken the very lowest estimate which has been made. There are two different estimates made out by Mr. Mix, and this is the most economical one. It is necessary to redeem an engagement of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer another amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust differences and preserve peace with the Cut-head and Yancton-aise bands of Sioux Indians, $25,000.

The Department have asked for $100,000 to enable them to pacify these Indians, who are warlike and discontented bands of Sioux, who receive a very inconsiderable annuity of sixty cents a year. The discontents of these Indians, and their claims against the Government, arise out of a treaty made in 1853 with four other bands in Minnesota, by which no provision was made for them. They set up an undefined claim to the ceded country. They have urged this claim so strongly that they have always appeared at the pay ground annually, and have coerced the annuity Indians to divide their annuities with them. They are the same Indians who drove off the white settlers and burnt their houses last year. They are threatening now, according to the accounts, to return, in large numbers, in the nature of a military expedition, this year, and burn the houses of the settlers, unless their demands be acceded to. We propose to appropriate the small amount of $25,000 out of $100,000 asked by the Department to enable the Secretary of the Interior to take such precautionary measures as may be needed to adjust these differences and give these Indians some assurance that their claim will be properly looked into.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have another amendment, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, as an additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to release the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions from their obligation, under the fourth article of the Cherokee treaty, to expend the value of the Union and Harmony Mission reservation, awarded them, upon schools among the Osages and in improving their condition: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, at his discretion, direct what other destitute tribe or tribes, in which said money shall be expended by said board, for like purposes, and make such regulations as shall secure the proper and faithful application of said fund.

This proposes no appropriation from the Treasury. There is in the Treasury $18,000 belonging to this board which the fourth article of the treaty of 1835 required them to expend for the purpose of establishing schools among the Osage Indians. When they attempted to comply with that, they found the ground preoccupied. The Osages refused to establish the schools. They now ask us to relieve them from the obligation to expend the money among the Osages, and to allow them to expend it elsewhere. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall indicate what other tribe they shall expend the money upon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer a further amendment:

For compensation of five extra clerks employed in the Indian office under the act of 3d of March, 1855, and under appropriations made from year to year, $7,000.

That is the usual appropriation, but it has been casually omitted in the estimates for a number of years. It is for the pay of clerks employed on work called the files and records of the land department of the Indian office. They are indispensable, and the omission of the item in the annual estimates was entirely accidental.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer two amendments for ascertained deficiencies in the Indian service:

For payment of this amount, due and unpaid, to John Rogers, of Fort Smith, Arkansas, for storage of provisions for the Indians at that place in 1837, $1,351.

For payment of this amount to Hon. Willis A. Gorman, for compensation for his services as commissioner to investigate the allegations of fraud against Alexander Ramsey, late Governor of Minnesota and superintendent of Indian affairs, under a resolution of the Senate and the appointment of the President, and to reimburse expenses incurred therein, $850.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to a point of order. These are private claims, and one of them is a pretty old one, too.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The Senator is mistaken in supposing himself to be introduced to an old acquaintance this time. They are perfect strangers to him. I am certain they are not private claims according to the usual interpretation of the rule. They are ascertained deficiencies reported here by the proper officer, acknowledged obligations for which no appropriations have been made. They are like everything else for which we appropriate—existing, recognized obligations of the Government; and the only reason they have not been paid has been the want of an appropriation applicable to the purpose. The Secretary of the Interior, in the case of John Rogers, admits that it is an outstanding claim against the Government, which he would have paid in the usual course of administration in the office without applying to Congress, if he had the money. In regard to the case of Governor Gorman, I will say that we have paid the other commissioner for the same service, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, but in consequence of a late decision of the Comptroller it becomes necessary to make these appropriations out of the Treasury, instead of out of the contingent fund. The character of the claim is not altered; the mode of payment is only changed by the decisions of the Comptroller.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator know of any existing law providing for these claims?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. There is what is equal in validity, for this purpose, to a law—a resolution of the United States Senate under which Governor Gorman acted as commissioner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels obliged to decide the amendment out of order.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Both items?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir, both.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer the following amendment, which contains no appropriation, but embraces certain matters of legislation necessary to enable the Indian office to maintain Indian reservations:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That where, by or pursuant to the provisions of any treaty with any tribe of Indians, tracts of land, outside of the limits of any tribal reservation, have been, or shall be, set apart for the use of individual Indians, to be held in severalty, and the power is reserved to Congress, or the President of the United States, to authorize the issue of patents therefor, and to make regulations respecting the sale or alienation of such tracts, or where the treaty is silent upon the subject, it shall and may be lawful for such reserves to sell and convey such tracts of land, whether they be held as reservations by the usual Indian title or by grant; and a deed of conveyance of such lands, duly executed by the reservee, shall be construed to vest in the purchaser a title in fee simple to the land so conveyed: Provided, Such sales shall be made in conformity to such rules and regulations, for the purpose of preventing fraud or imposition, and of securing to or for the reservees the full and fair value of their land, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That no sale or conveyance of any such tracts shall be of any validity unless the same shall have been submitted to, and received the approval of, the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever the interests of the reservee may render it expedient, to require the purchase money for any such tract of land to be paid to the United States agent for the tribe to which the reservee belongs, or other officer of the United States authorized to receive it, and to retain the same, to be afterwards applied, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the reservee, in such manner as may be deemed best for his interest and welfare.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That where the tribal reservation of any tribe of Indians is, or shall be, in pursuance of the provisions of any treaty with such tribe, divided among the individual members of the tribe, to be held by them in severalty, no sales, by individuals, of the tracts assigned to them shall ever be made, except to the members of the tribe or to the United States. And if any person, not employed under the authority of the United States, shall attempt to treat or negotiate, directly or indirectly, with any individual Indian for the purchase of any tract of land held or claimed by him under the provisions of this section, such person shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000, to be recovered before any court in the United States having jurisdiction, in the manner prescribed in the twenty-seventh section of the act of Congress of June 30, 1834, commonly called the "intercourse act."

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he hereby is, authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to remove from any tribal reservation any person found therein without authority of law, or whose presence within the limits of the reservation may, in his judgment, be detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians, and to employ for the purpose such force as may be necessary to enable the agent to effect the removal of such person or persons.

Mr. HUNTER. I will only say in regard to this amendment, that it may be very good legislation, but the House of Representatives is striking off everything of the sort upon the appropriation bills. I think they have the right to do so. They have the right, if they choose, to insist that we shall put nothing on these bills but appropriate legislation connected with appropriations. These provisions may be all very right; I know nothing about them; but I believe they will be stricken out in the other House, and we are merely consuming time by attempting to put anything of the sort on the bill.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The House of Representatives may unquestionably strike off a provision which we send to them in a bill. That it is their right to do. But it is equally our right to send bills to them in such form and shape as we choose. If they wish to make that disposition of our amendments, they incur the responsibility of it, not we. The same objection has been taken by the Senator from Virginia on several bills heretofore; but I believe, by the common consent of both Houses, necessary legislation for the Indian service has always been allowed to go on the Indian appropriation bills; indeed, for several years past, as the Senator from Virginia is well aware, we have no had legislation for the Indian department on any other bills than appropriation bills. These matters command so little interest that, unless they are placed in company with something indispensable, they cannot get through both Houses of Congress. If the House of Representatives should pursue the course indicated by the Senator from Virginia, I can very well yield then; but I do not wish to surrender in advance.

Mr. STUART. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. As I understood the amendment, as it was read, the first part of it provides against sales, in certain cases, without authority of the Secretary of the Interior, but the subsequent part prohibits sales to any but the United States or individuals of the same tribe.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I will explain that to the Senator from Michigan. There are two classes of reservations provided for in the amendment. The first section applies to reserves outside of ceded territory—individual reserves, either reserved in treaties or subsequently allotted to individual Indians. Those kinds of reserves we propose to allow to be sold by the Indian office, under the advice and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, taking care that the Indian is not imposed upon. Then there are reservations within ceded territory or within the national domain of an Indian tribe. These, we provide, cannot be sold to any white person, but may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, be sold amongst themselves.

Mr. STUART. That was the point on which I wanted information. As I understood it at first, it would apply to any disposition by an Indian of any lands he might receive under any treaty; but if it is only to apply to lands unceded, it is right.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I offer another amendment, as an additional section:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to such persons of Miami blood as have heretofore been excluded from the annuities of the tribe since the removal of the Miamies in 1846, and since the treaty of 1854, and whose names are not included in the supplement to said treaty, their proportion of the tribal annuities from which they have been excluded; and he is also authorized and directed to enroll such persons upon the pay list of said tribe, and cause their annuities to be paid to them in future: Provided, That the foregoing payments shall be in full of all claims for annuities arising out of previous treaties. And said Secretary is also authorized and directed to cause to be located for such persons each two hundred acres of land out of the tract of seventy thousand acres reserved by the second article of the treaty of June 5, 1854, with the Miamies, to be held by such persons by the same tenure as the locations of individuals are held which have been made under the third article of said treaty.

There is no appropriation from the Treasury in this amendment. It is a mere inter-tribal regulation between the Miamies of Indiana, and a few families who have been improperly deprived of their annuities. It is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to arrange and adjust the proportion of annuities among them—annuities already due by treaty.

Mr. HUNTER. Is this on the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. The information is official, and comes from the Department. They entertain no doubt as to the improper exclusion of the families mentioned in the amendment; but they do not recommend it. They thought it a matter properly referable to Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs report this as proper legislation by Congress.

Mr. FITCH. It is all right.

Mr. HUNTER. Does it commit us to make any appropriation—to take from one tribe to give to another?

Mr. FITCH. They are all the same tribe.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. This simply extends the pay-roll of the Indiana Miamies, so as to include a few families who have heretofore been improperly excluded.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I now present the last amendment which I have to offer:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Washington—so much of the third section of the act approved March 3, 1857, as makes one superintendency of the Territories of Oregon and Washington to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the said superintendent of Indian affairs shall receive an annual salary of $2,500.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is to increase these offices. They were diminished, upon deliberation, by the last Congress. There were originally two Indian superintendents in these Territories, I believe, but they were then reduced to one. The expenses of the Indian department on the Pacific coast are very heavy, and I see no necessity for this additional officer. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. A word of explanation will show the necessity of this measure. The first impressions of the Committee on Indian Affairs were unfavorable to the division of the Oregon and Washington superintendency; but the committee investigated the subject, and the Delegates from Washington and Oregon Territories urged it so strongly, and afforded, if not such convincing, at least such plausible, reasoning in favor of the separation, that we were induced to look more favorably upon it; and upon conference with the Secretary of the Interior, we found that his convictions were decidedly in favor of its necessity. We finally agreed to submit the proposition in a modified form. We believed that if no further treaties should be ratified with the Indians in these Territories, the superintendency, as at present constituted, will be ample to discharge all the duties; and if the large number of treaties with those Indians yet unconfirmed should not be ratified, there will be no necessity for the President exercising this discretionary power, which we propose to give him. The amendment does not provide in terms for the erection of a new superintendency; but, as in the case of Minnesota, proposes to allow the President, whenever he sees a necessity for it, to appoint a superintendent for Washington Territory. If the treaties to which I have alluded should not be ratified, there will be no necessity for it; if they should be ratified, I am well satisfied that the amount of duty which will then be incumbent on this officer will be so great, and of such a responsible character, that it will be very difficult for him to attend to it all. I think it is well enough to give this discretion. It may meet a contingency when the necessity for its exercise will be obvious to every one, and be justified by the result. In the modified form in which the proposition is presented, I hope it will be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I call for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. CLAY and others. We will vote it down without the yeas and nays.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; I withdraw the call for the present.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer an amendment to carry out a treaty with the Pawnees that has been ratified by the Senate since the estimates came in:

Pawnees.—For fulfilling the stipulations in the treaty with the Pawnees of the 24th of September, 1857:

For first of five installments, in goods and such articles as may be necessary for them, per second article of said treaty, $40,000.

For support of two manual-labor schools, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of said treaty, $10,000.

For pay of two teachers, per third article, $1,200.

For erection of houses for teachers, per third article, $1,200.

For two complete sets of blacksmith, gunsmith, and tin-smith tools, per fourth article, $750.

For erection of shops for smiths, per fourth article, $500.

For purchase of iron, steel, and other necessaries for same, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article, $500.

For pay of two blacksmiths, one of whom to be a gunsmith and tin-smith, per fourth article, $1,200.

For compensation of two strikers or apprentices in shops, per fourth article, $480.

For first of ten installments for farming utensils and stock during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article, $1,200.

For the first year's purchase of stock, and for erecting shelters for the same, per fourth article, $600.

For pay of a farmer, per fourth article, $600.

For the erection of a steam grist and saw mill, per fourth article, $6,000.

For first of ten installments for pay of miller, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article, $600.

For first of ten installments for pay of an engineer, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article, $1,200.

For compensation to apprentices to assist in working the mill, per fourth article, $500.

For the erection of dwelling-houses for interpreter, blacksmiths, farmer, miller, and engineer, $500 each, per fourth article, $3,000.

For the first of three installments for the pay of six laborers, per seventh article, $3,000.

For payment to Samuel Allis, in remuneration for his services and for losses sustained by him, per tenth article, $1,000.

For payment to Ta-ra-da-ka-wa, head chief of the Tappah's band, and four other Pawnees, for their services as guides, and for losses sustained by them, ($100 each,) per eleventh article, $500.

To enable the Pawnees to settle any just claims existing against them, per twelfth article, $10,000.

For surveying the exterior lines of the reservation provided in the first article, $1,000.

Mr. POLK. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether the first $10,000 spoken in the amendment, is to be an annual donation, or whether it is a sum in gross?

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment is to carry out a treaty recently ratified by the Senate. I have compared them item by item. It is all strictly in accordance with treaty stipulations. Whether the sum referred to is an annual payment or not, I do not now remember.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.
